IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MAY 27, 1884.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following REPORT:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections who were directed by the Senate to inquire into the alleged massacre of colored men at Danville, in the State of Virginia, on the 3d day of November last, pursuant to the following resolution :

Whereas among the expressed objects for which the Constitution of the United States was established were those to establish justice and insure domestic tranquillity; and

Whereas the Constitution provides for the security to all citizens of equal civil rights, and to all citizens the privileges and immunities that belong to the condition of citizenship, and that the right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied by the United States, or any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and further provides "that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws"; and

Whereas among the privileges and immunities inherent in citizenship are the right peaceably to assemble for the consideration of questions of State and national concern, and safely to discuss the same, and the right to exercise the elective franchise in every State freely and without molestation or intimidation; and

Whereas a general election was to occur, and did occur, in the the State of Virginia on the 6th day of November, 1883; and

Whereas it is alleged and currently reported in the public press that on or about the 3d day of November, 1883, at Danville, in said State, a large number of peaceable citizens of the United States and of said State were violently assailed by an organized body of men and fired upon, and several of them killed, by said armed men, conspiring to affect, and with the purpose of affecting, the result of said election so about to occur, by creating, by means of such unlawful violence and homicide, a state of alarm on the part of peaceable citizens throughout said State, which should induce them to refrain from voting or to vote differently from their previous intentions at said election; and

Whereas it is alleged that all the victims of said attack were of one race and of one political party, and all their assailants of another; and

Whereas it is alleged that the authorities of said State of Virginia have not brought any of the persons connected with said alleged conspiracies, violence, and homicides before the courts of justice for examination or trial, whereby the equal rights of citizenship and the equal protection of the laws have not been secured to all the people of said State; and

Whereas a general election was to occur, and did occur, in the State of Mississippi on the 6th day of November, 1883; and

Whereas it is alleged and currently reported in the public press that prior to said election, in the county of Copiah, State of Mississippi, there was an organized movement by members of one party to prevent members of another party from voting at that election, and to prevent the free and open discussion and expression of political opinions; that this purpose was carried into execution by organized plans of terror and violence; that the means used for that purpose were by lawless and organized mobs, moving by night and by day, assaulting, and in some cases, killing lawful voters, with a view, by terror and fear of violence, to deter others from voting; that this violence was committed by one party upon the members of another party, with a view to deprive the latter of their constitutional rights, and extended throughout the said county of Copiah and into portions of other counties of that State; that, as a part of this general plan and conspiracy, one J. P. Matthews, a peaceable and law-abiding citizen of Copiah County, was warned not to vote, and upon his voting on the day of election was murdered at the place of election by a person selected for that purpose, and with the approval, express or implied, of the officers of election, and no effort was made to punish the murderers; that this killing was subsequently approved by a public meeting in said county, composed strictly of members of one party, and the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas certain rumors are current that the relatives of the late J. P. Matthews have threatened the peace of society, in order to avenge his death, by killing Democrats and destroying their property: Now, therefore,

"Be it resolved by the people of Copiah County in mass-meeting assembled this day, at the court-house of said county, That if any person shall be injured, or an attempt made to injure him, either in person or in property, in any manner by the said relatives or friends of said J. P. Matthews, that we hereby declare that we will hold his said relatives and friends who participate accountable for the same, and that we will regard them as without the pale and protection of the law and common enemies of society, and that we will visit upon them certain, swift retribution.

"Be it further resolved, That so long as the friends and relatives of the said J. P. Matthews obey the laws and become good citizens, we hereby pledge them the protection of the law,

"Resolved further, That in the opinion of this meeting it is necessary to the safety of society and the welfare of all races and classes in this county that the Matthews family shall keep out of politics in Copiah County.

"Resolved further, That from henceforth no man or set of men shall organize the negro race against the whites in this county, and if it shall be attempted in the future, we hereby give notice that it shall be at the peril of the person or persons attempting so to do.

"Resolved, That we do hereby pledge ourselves, each to the other, our lives and fortunes and our sacred honor, that we will, all and individually, from henceforth, hold ourselves in readiness to enforce the foregoing resolutions, and to meet at any time upon the call of the chairman of this meeting.

"Resolved, That a committee of twenty-four from each supervisor's district be appointed by the chair to present a copy of these resolutions to the brothers and sons of the late J. P. Matthews, and that the same be published in the Copiah Signal and the Crystal Springs Meteor.

"Resolved by the citizens of Copiah County in mass meeting assembled, That the honors heretofore worn, and worthily so, by beat No. 2 be, and the same are hereby, awarded to beat No. 3.

"Be it further resolved, That this resolution is by no means intended to reflect upon the past and present services of beat No. 2, but to show our appreciation of the result of the election of the ticket in beat No. 3.

"It is also resolved, That the clubs continue their organizations, and consider themselves not disbanded, subject to the call of the chairman of the Democratic executive committee.

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be extended to the Hazelhurst brass band for their services on this occasion.

“J. L. MEADE, Chairman.

“JESSE THOMPSON, Jr.

“C. J. ALLEN,

“Secretaries.”

And whereas it is alleged that the authorities of the State of Mississippi have utterly failed and neglected to protect and preserve to the citizens of that State the equal enjoyment of civil and political rights, but have in some cases contributed to their overthrow, and have failed to punish or bring to trial persons alleged to be guilty of the conspiracies, violence, and homicides above stated, in disregard of the equal rights of citizenship in the equal protection of the law guaranteed to all the people of that State: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into all the circumstances of, and connected with, the said alleged events, and into the condition of the constitutional rights and securities before named of the people of Virginia and Mississippi, and that it report, by bill or otherwise, as soon as may be; and that it have the power to send for persons and papers, and to sit during the sittings of the Senate, and that it may employ a stenographer or stenographers—have discharged that duty, and respectfully report the testimony they have taken and their conclusions thereon.

In the execution of that portion of the resolution relative to occurrences in the State of Virginia, your committee have examined over one hundred and sixty witnesses, mainly residents of the city of Danville, but a few persons from other portions of the State.

It appears from the evidence that during the control of the affairs of the State by the Democratic or Funder party a constitutional amendment had been adopted in 1876 imposing the payment of a capitation tax of one dollar as a prerequisite to the right to vote, and a law had been enacted establishing the whipping-post as a punishment for minor offenses and disfranchising every person subjected by law to that punishment for certain of such offenses.

The constitution, after the ascendancy of the Readjuster party in the State, had been amended, abolishing the capitation tax, and the law establishing the whipping-post had been repealed; and for the first time in the history of the State since the amendment of 1876 was adopted suffrage at the election in November, 1883, was to be free from such restrictions.

THE RACE ISSUE.

Accordingly the Democratic party early in the canvass of last year renewed the efforts, which had before been made to some extent, to intensify and excite the race issue in the contest. This became necessary from the fact that white voters of the State had left their former political associations in such numbers as enabled them, with the aid of the colored voters, to secure a majority in the State and elect the officers of their choice.

Without such division of the white vote success in the State by the Coalitionists would have been impossible, as by the census of 1880 the colored voting population of Virginia was only 128,257, while that of the whites, according to the same census, was 206,048.

While there was no motive, therefore, on the part of the Coalition party to excite the race issue, which would inevitably have the effect to alienate the support of white voters, there was every inducement on the part of the Democrats to raise and intensify that issue with a view of recovering the votes of those among the white people who had been supporting the Coalition party. In 1881, under date of June 6, the Richmond State, an accredited organ of the Democratic party, printed caricatures like this:

THE LATE CONVENTION OF WHITEWASH.

Just hold still, my man! A few more applications of this lovely whitewash and the last remaining point of difference between us will be entirely removed.—Whig.

About the same time a circular was distributed by the Democrats in Carroll County, where the voters are nearly all white, which contained the following:

PAUSE, VIRGINIAN!

READ BEFORE YOU VOTE.

Remember, if you vote the Cameron ticket this day—

1. You vote yourself and your State a repudiator.
2. You vote for mixed schools now and mixed marriages in the future.
3. You take the African side in Cameron's war on your own race.
4. You vote that maimed Confederate soldiers must be kicked out of office to make room for negroes.
5. You vote to perpetuate strife in Virginia.
6. You indorse Mahone's treason to the National Democracy last year, and to Virginia this year.
7. You indorse his destruction of more than six and a third millions of Virginia property.

8. You vote for Conkling and Dawes, who persecute Virginia against Bayard, who loves her, and Hampton, who fought for her.

9. You turn your back on the National Democracy and embrace your enemies.

10. You belie your vote of last November.

11. You indorse the infamous political record of John F. Lewis.

12. You vote against three as gallant Virginians as live.

The Lynchburg News, an extreme bourbon paper, published this :

Negroes to control the schools to which your little children go. That is Mahoneism. Remember it, white people, when you come to vote.—Lynchburg News.

The Richmond State published the following :

The editor of the World may have no objection to the negro, and may look upon him as his equal, regardless of color ; and he has a perfect right to do so ; but here in Virginia we have never and never will place the white race on the same level with the negro, save in matters of common humanity. Socially and politically we do not admit his equality, but insist upon his inferiority and the superiority of the white race.

As to "hating the negro," or being prejudiced against him in the South, Mr. Pulitzer is altogether mistaken. We do not hate him, nor have we any prejudices against him. We only demand that he shall keep his place and not intrude where he does not belong ; that he remain where nature intended him to remain, and fulfil the purpose of his creation. This is all, and this is the logic of the situation that the North must recognize and govern itself by if it would have peace between the two great sections of our common country.—Richmond State.

The Danville Times, a Democratic paper, contained the following :

The Mahoneites band the negroes together to beat us, and we must unite the whites to meet them. Do that, and we can always carry enough of the colored vote to elect our ticket.—Danville Times.

Coming down to the canvass of 1883 the following appeared in the Richmond Dispatch :

Before another issue of the Dispatch reaches the public the Lynchburg convention will in all probability have finished its work. * * * The only matter of difference, developed by a canvass of the delegations, is regarding the advisability of drawing the color line. The Richmond delegation remain practically unanimous in the opinion that it should be drawn, and are, it will be seen, sustained by some of the strongest men in the party. * * *—Richmond Dispatch, July 25, 1883.

During that canvass the following caricature was published in The Democratic Campaign at Lynchburg, and widely distributed:

The Danville Times of March, 1883, published an article from which we make the following extract:

It will not be long before you will see the Coalitionists advocating the repeal of the law forbidding the intermarriage of the two races.

They will say, Why should not a white man marry an African if he wants to? And they will insist on arguing with you on a question you have instinctive horror of.

If you want to protect your wives and daughters and keep off bloodshed you must stand up like men for your race and your civilization.

Everything will "look like Africa."

A black boy will wait on the ladies at the different post-offices. A black boy will search the records for you in the clerk's office. Your bench of magistrates will be "half and half." Your commonwealth's attorney may be a negro, and a negro will surely visit your houses collecting your taxes.

On the 29th of October, 1883, the executive committee of the Waynesboro' Democratic club, a county where the population is nearly all white, issued the following:

WAYNESBORO' DEMOCRATIC CLUB,
October 29, 1883.

MR. MATHIAS ABLE:

The election which takes place on Tuesday, November 6, 1883, is one of the most important which has occurred in our State since Governor Wells ran in 1869. Then the issue was white government or negro. The same issues are involved now. Our brethren in the eastern counties are calling on us to come to their relief. We, your committee, urge upon you to be sure and come on election day, rain or shine, and vote for the white's man party, and bring your friend. Under no circumstance trade your vote off with a Republican, but vote your own ballot.

R. G. WRIGHT,
J. A. PATTERSON, JR.,
J. S. MYERS,
Executive Committee.

In Danville the colored voters outnumbered the whites, and early in the canvass the Democrats sought to raise and intensify the race issue in that locality. With a view to this the Democratic clubs in the second and third wards of that city unanimously passed resolutions as early as September or October, the precise date does not appear, withdrawing all support and patronage in business from the Coalitionists, both white and colored. The mayor of the city in his evidence made the following statement:

Q. Now turn to another subject. Do you know of any resolutions of ostracism passed by the Democratic clubs of Danville; and, if so, what?—A. Young Snead came out of a Democratic club one night, captain of the fire department, he says, "A resolution passed a little while ago that I never thought would tell in any free country." I asked him what it was. He says, "Captain Graves offered a resolution in the third ward"—I don't know as I can give you the words, but I can give you the substance of it—"that they would not patronize, or recognize, any man who would not support the Democratic party." I said to him, "Snead, that can't be possible." He said, "They certainly passed it." Mr. J. E. Schoolfield got up and made a speech in behalf of it. I didn't know what to think of such a thing; it was something unusual. I never heard of such a thing in Virginia before.

These resolutions were carried into execution, and the patronage was accordingly, to a great extent, so withdrawn.

About the same time another proposition was made by which the Democrats, who were the principal real-estate owners, should refuse to rent their premises to colored people or Coalitionists, and a subscription paper was put in circulation with a view to raise a fund to reimburse them for any losses they might sustain by reason of such refusal. The evidence shows that this latter proposition was not consummated or carried into effect.

About the same time the Third Ward Democratic Club instructed Mr.

W. N. Ruffin, one of its members, to prepare for circulation in South-western Virginia what is known in the evidence as the "Danville Circular," which is as follows:

COALITION RULE IN DANVILLE.

To the citizens of the southwest and Valley of Virginia:

We, the undersigned, of the merchants and manufacturers and mechanics of the town of Danville, Va., earnestly request that you will permit us to lay before you a few facts from which you can form some idea of the injustice and humiliation to which our white people have been subjected and are daily undergoing by the domination and misrule of the Radical or negro party, now in absolute power in our town, and under the leadership of William Mahone, seeking to extend and perpetuate its power all over the Commonwealth.

By the census of 1880 Danville contained 7,526 persons, of whom 4,397 were colored and 3,129 were white. The population of the town has increased greatly since that time, and the proportion between the numbers of whites and blacks has also increased, there being a much larger proportion of blacks now than in the year 1860.

The taxes actually paid by the inhabitants of the town for the year 1882 upon property, exclusive of license taxes for its corporate uses, exclusive of taxes paid to the State, amounted to over $40,000 in round numbers, of which only $1,206.63 were paid by the blacks, making $38,894 more of money paid for the support of the town by the white people than was paid by the negroes. Out of the total sum derived from taxation upon property, $2,000 was appropriated to the education of the negro children of the town—a sum, it will be seen, $794 more than the entire amount of tax paid by the whole negro population. So it appears that the negroes of the town do not contribute one single dollar to the use of the town, towards paying the interest upon its corporate debt, the improvements of its streets, the maintenance of its public work, the pay of its officers, and its incidental expenses of government. But, on the contrary, every dollar, and much more besides, paid by the members of that race in the nature of taxes, is returned to them and applied to the education of their children.

Up to the session of the last legislature the town was not divided into wards, but voted as a single precinct; and in that way the council was generally kept in the hands of the white people. But the negro party, desiring to get complete possession of the town government, that they might share in the offices as well as levy upon the treasury of the whites whatever they thought proper, applied to the legislature and obtained an amendment to the town charter requiring that the town should be divided into three wards, and that four councilmen and one justice of the peace should be elected from each ward. From the localities in which the negroes had herded themselves, it was totally impracticable to so run the ward lines without creating two wards in which the negroes had a large majority, and this they and their white leaders knew. The result was that they elected seven out of twelve of their candidates for the council and their candidates for justice of the peace from each ward.

Then began the deeds which have so humiliated us in our own estimation, and made our town, once so noted for wealth and enterprise, a by-word for shame and reproach from one end of this land to the other. Wherever it was possible for anything to be done by the council or its magistrates that would irritate and wound the pride of the whites it was executed with the keenest relish. Out of nine policemen four negroes were chosen—something before that time unknown to the history of the town—two of them acting not only as policemen, but one as a health officer, and the other as weighmaster at the public scales and clerk of the market. Out of the 24 stalls and stands at the market place, 20 are rented out by the council to the negroes. The scenes about this important and attractive institution (attractive in all cities) will give any person visiting the town a fair idea of the general state of the government under the negro rule. The market, once occupied in all its stalls by polite white gentlemen, with their clean white aprons, and the most enticing meats and vegetables upon their boards, is now the scene of filth, stench, crowds of loitering and idle negroes, drunkenness, obscene language, and petit thieves. The white men have been driven out and forced to take up private places for vending their meats and vegetables, and the public market, erected by the money of the white people and intended to be occupied by men at least courteous and cleanly, has been converted to the use of squalid negro hucksters, and presents a spectacle of loathsomeness positively repulsive to any person who has the least idea of how a market should be kept.

The whites of the town are powerless to prevent this outrage upon their rights. In fact, it is believed that their well-known objection to such an indignity is the principal cause of its infliction. The council, which has the power of regulating the conduct of the market, is presided over by a carpet-bagger—J. B. Rualston—Mahone's collector of internal revenue for the Danville district, and the patronage of his Federal office enables him to control the council with the same undisputed power that the general does his party. Raulston is exceedingly offensive to the white people, and it is well known he takes no pains to carry out any of their wishes. Two of the negro members of the council hold positions under him at the custom-house, and they are as obedient to his will in the council as they are in the revenue office.

It is seen, therefore, that our town is practically in the hands of and actually controlled by the officers and slaves of the Federal Government, not one of whom has a dollar's worth of visible property within its limits, and this too by the most shameless usurpation; for the constitution and law of the State and the Presidential order by which the Norfolk postmaster was removed, all declare that such officials shall hold no office under the government of this Commonwealth. The Federal Government, through its internal-revenue collector and the negro councilmen hired by him to scrub the floor of the custom-house and make incendiary speeches against the white people of the town, make our town laws, levy and collect our taxes, distribute our money, and elect negro policemen to watch our town while its inhabitants are asleep. This revenue collector declared, when he was elected president of the town council, that it was his intention to use the patronage of the council to build up the Radical negro party.

The police court of the town is another scene of perpetual mockery and disgrace. There the most active justice is a young negro named Jones, who first became famous by seducing a girl under promise of marriage, and was only saved from conviction upon indictment by the evidence of his partner in a junk-shop, who swore that he had had criminal intercourse with her before Jones. This court which, before the negro régime came into power, was only open a few hours every morning, is now practically open from morning till night, and nothing but actual observation can convey the least idea of the travesty of its transactions. Malice and partiality, whenever there is a motive, and ignorance, in its absence, are the rules of decision. The officials of the court, justices, and policemen co-operate in the work to make fees, and every act, or word, or deed of the citizen, whether atrocious in its character or too frivolous for the law to take notice of, is brought before a justice, and the party, if not fined, is required to pay the costs; and if there is more than one party the cost is doubled, and both parties made to pay costs. White men are arrested for the most frivolous acts by negro policemen and borne along to the mayor's office followed by swarms of jeering and hooting and mocking negroes, and tried, fined, and lectured and imprisoned by a negro justice, and then followed to the jail by the same insulting rabble.

At the October court of this year two of the party magistrates were removed from office by the judge of the hustings court, one for embezzling the money of the Commonwealth, the other for "causes sufficient to the court," and one of them has fled the town to avoid indictment.

The notoriety which this state of things in our town has produced has attracted to the town large numbers of idle and filthy negroes from the border counties of North Carolina, and from Halifax, Mecklenburg, and Charlotte, Va. Although there is a law against vagrants, they are never disturbed. They infest the streets and sidewalks in squads, hover about public houses, and sleep on the doorsteps of storehouses and the benches of the market place. They impede the travel of ladies and gentlemen, very frequently forcing them from the sidewalk into the street. Negro women have been known to force ladies from the pavement, and remind them that they will "learn to step aside the next time." In several instances white children have been struck by grown negroes. We know of several cases where the lie has been given to a white lady to her face by a negro. It is a very common practice for the negroes who are employed about our houses to allude to white ladies and gentlemen as men and women and to negroes as ladies and gentlemen. This is a practice almost without exception with the negro women. They do it to irritate and throw contempt upon the white race. A short time since, when the town was in great excitement over the murder of a respectable gentleman and farmer of Pittsylvania County, in his wagon, while on his way home from Danville, by three negro highwaymen, a negro man in the town stood in the center of a crowd of his friends, with a pistol exhibited on his person, and with threatening gestures and loud oaths declared that he wanted to "start a row with some d—d son of a b—h of a white man that he might kill him."

A few nights ago the negroes were very indignant because they heard of the earnest work that was going on by the whites, to register all of their voting strength, and called a meeting, which was addressed by an incendiary negro, named Pleasants, a postal agent, and one of the town councilmen, hired at the custom-house, and they passed a resolution requesting the governor to have Federal troops sent to our town on election day, to intimidate the white people at the polls.

They have also a scheme to amend the town charter if they elect the legislature this fall, and take into the town a large negro settlement, outside of the town limits, called Jacksonville, by which they will get several hundred more black voters, and then it will be impossible for any white man to hold office in the town. We know this is their plan.

It is well known that hundreds of the North Carolina tobacco raisers who live within a few miles of Danville, and used to sell their tobacco in our market, now go five times as far to a market in their own State, on account of the negro rule in our town. At the negro meeting, referred to above, one of their speakers said they did not want the people of North Carolina to come here any way.

Now, fellow-citizens of the Valley and southwest, we cry out to you in our affliction to deliver us from this awful state of humiliation and wretchedness. We know that, as a rule, the cries of the wretched make but little interruption of the general progress of things. The sun rises and sets all the same, and the work of the Government, and the work of the feast and the torture goes on with exactness and tranquillity. But we appeal to you by that sympathy which constitutes the bond of union between honorable men struggling in the cause of freedom, to help us throttle this viper of negroism that is stinging us to madness and to death, by voting against the Coalition-Radical candidates who are yelling and screaming with delight at the prospect of fastening its fangs into us forever.

We appeal to you to say, do you think it is just that we should contribute every cent to the maintenance of our town, pay our town debt, and appropriate not only all the negro pays in the way of tax, but much more besides, of our own money, to the education of his children whom he raises upon our money to be our bitterest enemies, and then let him have possession of our town government, too? Is it right that the negro should have all this given him, and then be allowed to control our offices and plunder our treasury besides?

It is an injustice at which we know your humanity will revolt.

It is the injustice of the frozen serpent, which after being warmed into life by its benefactor, stings him to death.

Help us, fellow-citizens, by voting for the Conservative-Democratic candidates for the legislature, for unless they are elected we are doomed.

Mr. Ruffin states in his testimony that a resolution was passed by the club that "we should prepare a paper of this sort, setting forth our grievances under Coalition rule, and circulate it among the white people of the State, that they might see what a fix we were in there"; that in pursuance of such resolution he made a draft of the circular. On this point he stated: "I drafted the original of this circular myself. I was on the committee of our club appointed for that purpose, and I drafted the original of this thing. It was afterward very much altered and amended by Judge Aiken—hardly a skeleton left of what I had written." The evidence is entirely satisfactory that, with the exception of the statistics given in the opening paragraph of the circular, it is a false presentation of the state of things at Danville, and most of its statements wholly without any substantial foundation in fact. Yet so vital was it deemed to the interests of the Democratic party that Mr. Ruffin states in his testimony, after its correctness had been challenged by the Coalitionists, he prepared what is known in the evidence as the "Ruffin Circular," which were the affidavits of the subscribers of the Danville circular verifying the truth of the statements contained in it; and although, as he states, he did not sign the original, he did sign the affidavit of verification, and, while he did not fully agree with the accuracy of the circular as altered by Judge Aiken and signed by his partner, yet he joined in the verification as to the truth of the same without any exception. His partner, Mr. Blair, testified that the original was signed by Mr. Ruffin himself.

In giving the reasons for this verification the witness testified as follows:

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. When you were asked if you had not prepared the statement corroborating this Danville circular, you said yes, and you desired to modify it, and were not permitted to do so. Now make what modification you wish to make.—A. I just wanted to explain how it was that we came to take affidavits that this circular was true. I wanted to state why it became necessary for us to get up those affidavits.

Q. Why was it necessary?—A. Because we were informed—Mr. Seldon, of Harrisonburg, in Rockingham County, informed me that if we could authenticate that circular it would carry Rockingham County and save all the other counties in the valley.

Q. You were informed that its authenticity was disbelieved?

Mr. LAPHAM. I am very much obliged to you for that.

The witness stated that the affidavits containing the confirmation of the truth of the Danville circular was not intended to be published in Danville, but was sent to Harrisonburg, 200 miles from Danville, for publication. He also stated that on Wednesday prior to the riot he went to Harrisonburg, taking with him 2,000 copies of the Danville circular, and sent them all over the county. The evidence conclusively shows that the Danville circular, though printed in Danville in large numbers and widely circulated in other portions of the State, was not designed for circulation in Danville, yet its existence there became known soon after its publication. The evidence also shows that the affidavit of verification, together with letters from the witness Ruffin and Dr. Harvie, were published in Waynesboro', and circulated in large numbers prior to the election in that portion of the State. The following are copies:

READ THE PROOF.

The Danville circular as true as gospel. The sworn evidence of all its signers, and letters from two prominent citizens of that city confirming the whole matter.

These two letters were received by a gentleman in Harrisonburg, and along with them the affidavit given below, and if any one doubts their genuineness, the originals can be seen at the office of the Rockingham Register, in Harrisonburg, by all who may apply for them.

DANVILLE, VA., October 30, 1883.

MY DEAR ———: These facts set forth in the circular sent out by Messrs. Holland, Ruffin, Woolfolk, and Blair, and others is true in every particular, and recites only a few of the indignities to which the white people of Danville have been subjected. We appeal to our white brethren of the valley and southwest to come to our aid, because they only can help us, having an overwhelming white majority. We appeal to them because there are 300 old Confederate soldiers with their families here—men from every portion of Virginia and North Carolina—who stood by them when they carried their lives in their hands, and we beg them now to stand by us with their ballots, and save us from the black wave of ignorance and vice which threatens to overwhelm us. I know the white men of the valley, both Republicans and Readjusters, would not consent to vote for General Mahone's candidate if they knew to what extremity the success and excesses of that party would reduce us, the white race in Southside, Virginia. You can show this to whom you choose, and while you know me and that what I write is true, there may be others who may be unwilling to believe one of whom they know nothing. To them I refer as to my character to Senator Lewis, and to my friend Mr. D. S. Lewis, who, I believe, resides in your town. Give my kindest regards to your family.

Your friend, truly,

LEWIS E. HARVIE, M. D.

DANVILLE, VA., October 30, 1883.

MY DEAR ———: I received your letter of yesterday this morning, and was glad to hear from you again. The circular letter, "Coalition rule in Danville," is genuine and authentic, and all the facts stated therein are true, and can be substantiated (if doubted) by our best citizens. Our condition here under negro rule is horrible, and far, very far, beyond the conception of the white men in those counties which have white majorities. I know that if your people could only appreciate our condition and realize the enormity of the indignities that are being constantly put upon us, they would all come to our rescue and put white men in office. Here, where we suffer so, and where we all know by experience what negro domination is, you rarely find a white Readjuster. Two years ago you could count them by the score; now there are only sixteen in our town, so far as I can find out, and all but four of these hold office. Negroes here speak openly and boldly of social equality, and discuss it in all its various forms, and a negro Readjuster announced from the stump recently that he would live to see the day when he would sleep with a white wife. I could weary and sicken you with detailed accounts of the various outrages here, which will only be increased until we are driven to desperation, if Mahone carries the State this fall, and you know, and I know, that the natural feelings of one white man for another would cause your people to vote to free us from this thralldom if they were familiar with the facts here. We hear that the Mahone leaders denounce our circular as being the work of a hireling committee. When I tell you that I was one of the originators of that paper, you will know this is false. Our pitiable condition forced us to make this appeal to our Anglo-Saxon brothers in that portion of the State where they are in the majority, and, consequently, in a position to help us. I beg that you will do what you can for us, and get us as many votes as you can. You may say to your people that with us the debt is regarded as settled forever, and we have no wish and no disposition ever to renew it again. We would as soon think of agitating secession again. Help us, and get your friends to help us, and you and they will receive the gratitude of an oppressed people.

Our condition is no worse than in other portions of the "Black Belt."

With kind regards, and a desire to see you at my house,

I am your friend,

W. N. RUFFIN.

DANVILLE, VA., October 30, 1883.

We, the undersigned, certify that the circular paper entitled "Coalition rule in Danville," addressed to the citizens of the Southwest and Valley of Virginia, is a genuine paper, and was signed by us with a full knowledge of its contents, and that every fact stated therein is true to the best of our knowledge and belief, and can be substantiated by the oath of responsible and respectable persons.

STATE OF VIRGINIA,

Town of Danville, Virginia:

I, R. R. Miller, a notary public for corporation aforesaid, do certify that the gentlemen whose names are signed to foregoing writing, bearing date 30th October, 1883, personally appeared before me, in my corporation aforesaid, and made oath to the correctness of the same, to the best of their knowledge and belief. Given under my hand this, the 30th day of October, 1883.

R. R. MILLER, Notary Public.

This circular added much to the excitement in and about Danville. On the evening of the 2d of November, Col. W. E. Sims, who was a candidate for the State senate, addressed a meeting in Danville and severely criticised said circular and those whose names appeared as the signers, characterizing most of its statements as falsehoods, and stating that the signers must have known they were false when they signed it.

The evidence shows that the meeting was called because the people inviting him had just heard of the circular. The following notice of the intended meeting was published :

Col. W. E. Sims will speak to-night at 8 o'clock in front of the old post-office building to answer the circular entitled, "Coalition rule in Danville," sent to the Southwest, and the Valley, by the Democratic State committee. This circular contains injurious allegations against the town of Danville, but has been concealed from the people of Danville. They ought therefore to attend the speaking and learn what is said against them for political effect by their pretended political friends. Come one! come all!! (Dated Friday, November 2, 1883.)

When the meeting was about to assemble at the place named, the Democrats stated it was the night for their meeting to practice at the place named, and requested that the meeting be held at the court-house instead. This was assented to. It is proved and not contradicted that Col. W. P. Graves, who, it was shown, was chairman of the advisory committee of the Democratic party, and of whom we shall speak hereafter, said :

Says he, "When Sims first said that he was going to speak there he notified the town, and I was up at my house," says Mr. Graves, "and I heard the message that he was going to speak there in front of the Arlington House on the old post-office steps. No sooner had I heard that message than I mounted my horse, went right straight down there and saw some of Sims's friends, and told them to ask Sims to please not to speak there, but over in front of the court-house; and he says that's the reason why he didn't. Of course, he spoke over there." He says, "But the reason why I requested him so particularly to move over in front of the court-house instead of there was that my men had been practicing there for one or two weeks and that was one of the nights for practicing."

Later on we shall see what "practicing" meant. He also said at one time during the speech of Sims, "that his men were formed in line from the old brick building on the corner clean up to near the hall." The evidence shows that more or less of them were armed, and that some drew their pistols during the speech. Threats were made that night and the next morning that Sims would be lynched before he left town, but he went away about noon on Saturday, and it was then supposed the excitement would subside.

THE DANVILLE MASSACRE.

Not long after this, however, a white Democrat by the name of Noel was rapidly passing down Main street and met two colored men, Lawson and Lewellyn, going up said street. Lawson stepped one side to get out of the way of some ladies and hit Noel's foot. Noel said, "What in hell do you mean?" to which Lawson replied, "I was getting out of the way of that lady; excuse me." Thereupon Lewellyn said, "Go ahead, Lawson, don't ask any pardon." Noel struck Lewellyn and the latter knocked Noel into the gutter twice. Noel then passed on, went and got his pistol, and was seen by these colored men passing down towards the opera house, on Main street, in a buggy wagon, looking back at them as he rode down. There was a Democratic meeting at the opera house that afternoon to indorse the Danville circular and to denounce Sims for his speech the evening before. At this meeting five hundred or more had assembled. Two young men, Lea and Taylor, armed with revolvers, were stationed in the gallery to keep out all but Democrats. No Coalitionist or colored man was allowed to attend. Noel went to them as his friends. They badgered him about his scuffle in the street, and Lea gives his reply as follows :

"Well, I have concluded to postpone it, as the very heated excitement in town," he says, and "if we were to resent that injury, I am fearful it will bring on a riot, and I will wait until after the election to resent the injury." I says, "It is very hard to take such an insult"; whereupon he left me.

In a few moments he returned and said to Lea and Taylor, "This nigger has insulted me again; I want you to come and see fair play." Noel, Lea, and Taylor left the opera house and went up street where Lawson was. It appears from the evidence that they were all three armed with Smith & Wesson's revolvers.

Taylor swears that Lawson had insulted him a short time before. Noel then asked Lawson what he meant by speaking to him as he did—insulting him. Lawson denied having done so. Thereupon Noel struck Lawson and seized him by the collar. All admit that Noel, being taller and having longer arms, held Lawson so he could not reach Noel. How many times he struck Lawson Noel is unable to tell. He was beaten so that after they were separated he was picked up on the street. A witness states, "He looked like he was nearly dead; his face all bruised; he couldn't see." Lea admits he was afraid Noel would kill Lawson. While Noel was thus beating Lawson Lea stood one side and Taylor on the other with their revolvers drawn, warning the colored men to stand back or they would kill every one of them. At the same time a white Democrat was standing near, in the office door, with a double-barreled shot-gun. A colored policeman by the name of Adams made his way up to where this was going on and said, "Peace here, gentlemen; this won't do; this won't do." One of the white men replied, "Go away; you ain't going to rule this town; you niggers can't rule this town." The policeman replied, "Well, I can't help it; you must stop it"; and he seized the men and tried to pull them apart.

While he was doing this a colored man by the name of George Adams came up and said, "Are you all going to stand and let that man kill that man?" Just at that time another policeman, by the name of Freeman, a white man and a Democrat, came up and said, "Come up, men, and let us part these men." Adams started up and seized Lea's arm and tried to wrest his revolver from him. In the struggle they fell, and Taylor struck Adams over the head with his cane. Thereupon Adams sprang to his feet and ran. When about 30 feet off, Lea took deliberate aim and fired. He did not hit Adams, but Jerry Smith fell at his side. He was the first man killed, and was probably shot by Lea. Lea, when asked if he fired refused to answer, as did most of the white men who were armed, acting as they stated, under the advice of Senator Vance. Indeed, the Senator openly said in committee that the witnesses ought not to be interrogated on that subject, as they were privileged from answering. The evidence that Lea fired and took aim at Adams as he fired is conclusive. The colored men demanded to know who the man was who fired that pistol. Some one said it was Lea. Another pointed out Taylor and said he was the man. The colored policemen about this time left the crowd from fear of their safety. The colored men continued the demand to know who it was that fired, and one again pointed out Taylor as the man. Taylor thereupon stepped out and said, "I have not fired my pistol; I have mine here, and if you want the contents you can have it." About that time the negroes demanded the arrest of the person who fired the pistol, and during the colloquy the order to fire was given. That order was given by Lea up in front of Woolfolk and Blair's office, and farther down Main street by one Hatcher, and there was a simultaneous firing from the whites all along the line from said office down towards Market street. The number of shots is variously estimated at from seventy-five to two hundred and fifty. It is described as sounding like the firing of fire-crackers thrown in a barrel. Judge Blackwell, who was looking on the scene, testified—

The discharge was a volley that was delivered as if it had been by disciplined soldiers. I never on a battle-field heard a volley delivered as well together as that was. After that it was continuous firing, as if soldiers were firing at will.

When Lea fired his pistol the colored people began to flee. Others, hearing the noise and the policeman's whistle, continued to gather from all directions—men, women, and children—and the whites came from the opera house and court-house. There were no white women on the street that day. The moment the general firing began the colored men, in the language of one of the witnesses, "ran like rabbits." They ran up and down Main street and into Union and Market streets, and through the stores and offices to make their escape. They were pursued by the whites, firing at them as they ran. Two colored men were shot dead as they were entering Union street.

Captain Graves, as the negroes fled, ran down to the corner of Market and Main street, and there shot an unoffending colored man in the arm. He was a teamster who came out of Nicholas and Hessberg's door on Market street to look for his team. When he was ordered to leave by Captain Graves he threw up his hands and said, "My God, captain, don't shoot me; I just ran out to catch my horses." The captain fired at him as he was backing into the door with his hands upraised, and hit him in the arm above the wrist, breaking the smaller bone. Captain Graves also ordered Adams's brother, the policeman, to leave, and shot at him as he was running. The evidence is entirely conclusive on this point, although Captain Graves denies it. He does not, however, deny firing, but admitted he shot four times.

Captain Oliver, of the Union Grays, a white military company, was on trial at the court-house for having concealed weapons the night before, when Sims was speaking. As he came up to this policeman he said to him, "Damn it, get off the street." The policeman said, "I am trying to keep the peace the best I can." Captain Oliver replied, "We don't want none of your damned peace; get out of the way." Hatcher, another white man, came up, and said "Damn it, make these niggers get off the street." Freeman, a white policeman and a Democrat, said, "The colored people ain't doing anything; if you all don't bother them they won't bother you." To this the Democrat replied, "Damn it, we are going to kill them and all their backers." George Adams, at whom Lea shot, came to this policeman and demanded to know who the man was that shot at him. Lea stepped out and said, "Yes, damn you, I'm the man," and the firing commenced.

The evidence shows that one of the whites, who appeared to be in the office of Woolfolk and Blair, said, "Go ahead when you get ready." It also shows that Mr. Freeman told one Hatcher, a white leader, not to have any fuss. Hatcher replied, "Don't come after us now; make them damned niggers leave." Freeman said, "They ain't doing anything now; you must all get off the street." Hatcher started out and told the men "to stand with him and we will kill the last one of them." Hatcher admits he was one of those who gave the order to fire, and it is abundantly proved by others. One witness states Hatcher raised his pistol and fired, and said, "Boys, now is the time." They all fired, and it looked like it was hail falling up against the bricks."

When Lea fired at Adams, another witness testified he heard Hatcher say, "We'll give them hell to-day." Although Hatcher denies that he had a pistol, he was not called to deny he made these declarations. The witness, Captain Graves, was examined at some length, and a portion of his direct examination is here given as illustrative of the animus of the white Democrats. He was chairman of the advisory committee of the party.

WILLIAM P. GRAVES sworn and examined.

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I moved there in 1852.

Q. What is your age?—A. I was sixty-three last fall.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am a commission merchant.

Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. I have been in that business there since 1857, I think.

Q. What part, if any, do you take in politics?—A. I have taken no interest in politics, except to vote, until the last election, when I took some little interest. I have not attended a political meeting for some time until the last election.

Q. Did you belong to any political organization prior to the last election?—A. I belonged to the Third ward, in which I lived.

Q. To what?—A. To the Third Ward Club.

Q. Democratic club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you one of the signers of the circular?—A. I was.

Q. Were you at the meeting at the opera house?—A. I was.

Q. Did you sign the resolutions indorsing that circular?—A. I had signed them previous to that time. I was one of the original signers. I did not sign it upon that occasion.

Q. So that you both signed the circular and approved the resolutions indorsing them?—A. I do, emphatically.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November?—A. I was in the meeting.

Q. What time did you leave the meeting?—A. I left the meeting soon after they commenced signing the resolutions.

Q. Had there been any firing in the street before you left?—A. I had heard none. There was some excitement during the meeting—

Q. Never mind, now; just answer my question, please. Where were you when you first heard any firing?—A. I was on the street near Nicholas & Hessberg's.

Q. In the line that had been formed there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which way from it?—A. I had started out of the opera house—

Q. Come right to my point, please; answer my questions.—A. I want to do that.

Q. Where were you at the time you first heard the firing?—A. I answer that question by this, that I was near Nicholas & Hessberg's store.

Q. How far from the white men who were formed upon the street?—A. I didn't see the white men, but from what I can understand it was some three or four buildings below.

Q. Were you below the crowd of colored people, too, or above them?—A. I was—well, somewhat in the edge of the crowd.

Q. Of the colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What class of colored people did you see there?—A. Well, I can't answer that question exactly.

Q. Only whether they were different ages and sexes.—A. I saw only one sex; I remember seeing only one sex.

Q. You do not remember seeing any women?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, you saw children?—A. I can't say I did; I think not.

Q. No boys?—A. I don't remember any; there might have been some boys.

Q. Were you armed?—A. I was.

Q. What did you have?—A. I had a Smith & Wesson 44-caliber pistol.

Q. A five or six shooter?—A. A six-shooter.

Q. Was it loaded?—A. It was.

Q. Did you discharge it?—A. I did.

Q. How many times?—A. Four times. I would like to make a little explanation there, sir—

Q. Oh, I will give you an opportunity. Do you know Charles Adams?—A. I do.

Q. Did you see him?—A. I did.

Q. Did you fire at him?—A. I did not.

Q. Didn't he raise his hands and say, "My God, I ain't doing anything; don't shoot me"?—A. He did.

Q. Well, didn't you fire?—A. I did not.

Q. You deny that, do you?—A. I deny it most positively, sir.

Q. Where did you fire your four shots?—A. As I come out of the opera house, coming up Main street towards my place of business, just as I got at the corner of Nicholas and Hessberg's the firing commenced; just above it, and I must say for a few seconds, it was about as hot a fire as I have ever been in.

Q. Yes, I should judge so.—A. For about a few seconds, and then it was I fired, from the fact that I have never yet been able to stand and let a man shoot at me or strike me without returning it.

Q. Where did you fire?—A. I fired in the crowd in front.

Q. In the colored crowd?—A. In front.

Q. Among the colored people?—A. Amongst the colored people.

Q. Four shots?—A. I fired one shot there. I fired one shot, perhaps two shots, there in that direction. I fired another shot in another direction, rather across the street, perhaps; I don't remember exactly.

Q. Was that after the colored people began to flee?—A. Some of them were running at the time.

Q. You fired in the direction they were running, did you not?—A. Yes, sir, I fired; some of them were running.

Q. Where did you fire the other two shots?—A. I fired one shot across the street.

Q. What did you fire across the street at?—A. Well, I fired there in the direction they fired; the bullets were coming towards me.

Q. You fired toward the colored people?—A. I fired toward the colored people.

Q. Where did you fire the other shot?—A. I fired one shot down off Main street.

Q. What was that at?—A. Well, there was a colored man had been firing, or rather attempting to fire, up that street, and I fired in that direction.

Q. At him?—A. No, sir; I did not fire at him. I didn't fire at any one in particular on that occasion.

Q. Well, you fired into the crowd.—A. No, sir; I can't say that I fired into the crowd then.

Q. What did you fire at?—A. I fired more in the air than in any other direction.

Q. Do you mean to have us understand now that you fired in the air?—A. I didn't fire there with the purpose or expectation of hitting any one.

Q. How long was that after the first firing?—A. It was a very few seconds after.

Q. After the crowd were fleeing, wasn't it?—A. After they had commenced fleeing.

Q. Have you ever been in the military service?—A. I have.

Q. Where?—A. I was in the Mexican war.

Q. In what capacity?—A. I was a volunteer; an orderly sergeant for eight months, and for eleven or twelve months I was an assistant commissary and quartermaster.

Q. So that you had some military experience?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you get the revolver you had?—A. About, I think, as near as I can remember, about a month previous to that time.

Q. Where did you get it?—A. I bought it of Mr. Schoolfield, a hardware merchant in Danville.

Q. Can you say what supply of them he had at that time?—A. I think I got the only one of that kind he had at that time.

Q. Hadn't he other kinds?—A. Yes, sir; he had a good many of them.

Q. A good many others?—A. A good many others.

Q. What were they?—A. I think he had some .38-caliber pistols, and he had other pistols; I don't remember, I didn't notice particularly.

Q. Well, you took the most effective arm he had?—A. The one I thought the most effective.

Q. And you are a judge of the effect?—A. I think I am a pretty fair judge.

Q. When did you load that revolver?—A. It was sent to my office loaded.

Q. You directed it to be so done?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you receive it at your office?—A. A few hours after I purchased it.

Q. And that was about a month before the affair?—A. I think it was about a month; I don't remember the exact time; I think it was about a month.

Q. Didn't you belong to a secret political organization?—A. I belonged to the ward club.

Q. Didn't you belong to a secret political organization?—A. I don't know anything about your secret political organization.

Q. Didn't you know of any such organization at Danville?—A. I do not.

Q. You don't know of any existing prior to the election?—A. I do not; with the exception that our club meetings were held in private. There was nothing particularly secret about them, but that there was none except the members of our party expected to attend those meetings.

Q. You held them in secret?—A. I don't understand the question.

Q. You held the meetings in secret?—A. Yes, sir; they were private.

Q. Wasn't there an executive committee of that club?—A. I think there was.

Q. Were you a member of that?—A. I was not.

Q. Do you know who constituted that executive committee?—A. I do not; I don't remember.

Q. About when was it organized?—A. It was organized probably early in the campaign; I don't remember.

Q. About how long before the election?—A. Four or six weeks before the election, or two months; I don't remember exactly.

Q. Was it before the month of August?—A. I think not; I don't remember the exact date of it.

Q. You didn't see the line of white men on the street at all, I understand you?—A. I did not.

Q. You didn't fire then by reason of any animus, you say, against them?—A. No, sir; I was firing only in self-defense.

Q. Why did you go there? For the purpose of self-defense?—A. I was passing from the opera house in the direction of my place of business.

Q. Did you not know before you left the opera house there was a disturbance there?—A. I did not.

Q. I thought you said there was something said in the opera house?—A. There was something said in the opera house; there was some little said in the meeting, and there were a number of persons who got up and went to the front windows, where they could see in the front street.

Q. You say you left the opera house?—A. And Colonel Cabell remarked—

Q. I didn't ask that.

Mr. VANCE. I think he is entitled to give that explanation now, you stopped him before.

Mr. LAPHAM. No; I hardly think it is called for. I am only addressing myself to questions personal to himself. I don't ask what Colonel Cabell said, or any other person.

Mr. VANCE. Well, I don't think you ought to ask him and not give him a chance to explain.

Mr. LAPHAM. The difficulty is he is not answering the questions I ask.

The WITNESS. I didn't know what the disturbance was. I didn't know that there was any firing. I heard no firing and I didn't know what it was. There was some little excitement.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Where did you first draw your pistol?—A. It was very near Nicholas & Hessberg's door.

Q. Had any one assaulted you?—A. They were firing right in—

Q. Had any one assaulted you?—A. Well, my dear sir, I thought so; they were firing right in my direction.

Q. Who was the person who assaulted you?—A. I can't say; I can't say who it was that assaulted me. They were firing right in my direction, as the bullets in the side of the house will show, coming from the street.

Q. You know where it is said the line of white people stood, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which direction were you from them?—A. I was on the sidewalk very near—

Q. Well, they were on the sidewalk, too?—A. They were on the sidewalk; I could not see them.

Q. Where were you with reference to them?—A. I was right at the corner of Nicholas & Hessberg's store, the lower corner, between the lower corner and his front door; very near Nicholas & Hessberg's front door.

Q. How far from the point where the line of white people stood?—A. I forget exactly, but there were three or four buildings between.

Q. Was it up or down Main street, where you were?—A. It was down.

Q. You were below them on Main street?—A. I was below them on Main street; yes, sir; between the opera house and them.

Q. Between the opera house and the line of white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of what building do you speak which will show the marks of the bullets?—A. All of those buildings.

Q. Well, you didn't shoot in front of all of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. I want the one you refer to.—A. I think there may be some bullets along about Hessberg's and the adjoining building: there are some bullet marks also below in the building that was occupied by Averett & White at that time.

Q. How many composed the executive committee of your club?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did they make any reports to the club or were their operations secret?—A. No, sir; their operations were not secret.

Q. Did they make any reports to the club?—A. I could not say.

Q. That you remember now?—A. I don't remember the reports particularly.

Q. You don't remember any reports made by them?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Nor you can't give the name of any member of the executive committee?—A. No; I cannot give the name of a member of the executive committee.

Q. You were examined as a witness before the committee of forty, were you not?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who examined you?—A. Mr. Bowen.

Q. Give his full name.—A. I don't remember his full name. He is a young lawyer there who conducted it. I think his name is Philip Bowen.

Q. Do you remember whether you signed a deposition?—A. I think I did.

Q. Were you inquired of one word as to what occurred in this riot of the 3d of November?—A. I think I was. You have my deposition there; it is published.

Q. I am testing your recollection now.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there one word inquired of you as to what occurred in this riot?—A. Yes, I think there was.

Q. You think there was.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I will be fair with you and let you look over your testimony and see what you say about it, because I desire to deal fairly with you.—A. I also would desire to deal fairly with the committee.

The WITNESS. [After examining the report of the committee of forty, handed him by Mr. Lapham.] I find that I am mistaken.

Q. Then you were not inquired of as to anything which took place on the 3d of November.—A. From that I think I was not; I was laboring under the impression that I was.

Q. It was well known that you were there, wasn't it?—A. Yes, I think it was. It is some time since I read that report.

Q. It was well known that you had a pistol.—A. I think it was.

Q. And that you fired your pistol.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why you were not inquired of you are unable to state.—A. I am unable to say.

Q. Were you not sworn to tell the whole truth?—A. I think perhaps I was.

Q. The subject of that inquiry was the riot, was it not?—A. It was.

Q. And you were sworn to tell the whole truth.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you did not say one word about the riot itself.—A. They examined other persons there upon that particular point.

Q. Yes; but you were at liberty to tell what took place. Can you give any reason why you were not examined as to this riot?—A. I cannot.

Q. You were alone during all these proceedings, were you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who was in company with you?—A. I didn't notice any one particularly, just at that time. There was a good large crowd; the street was full.

Q. I am speaking now of white people.—A. As I came out, I didn't know that there was any one with me at all—

Q. I repeat again the question, were you alone during all this period when you fired these four shots?—A. I was not alone, but I didn't remember until since then who was with me.

Q. Well, if you remember now, you can answer who was with you.—A. Mr. Charles H. Conrad, I think, when Adams ran into the door, was standing by my left arm when I ordered Adams to get in the house, in the front door.

Q. What right had you to order him?—A. He threw up his arms and begged for mercy, and I wanted to save his life.

Q. That is the mode in which you did it; you ordered him in?—A. I ordered him in; told him to get in the house.

Q. Who else was with you?—A. I don't remember who else was there; there were a number of persons; the crowd was pretty thick.

Q. Of white people?—A. There were some white people.

Q. Can you name any other one than the one you have named?—A. I could not have named any one at all; some gentlemen have reminded me since that they were near.

Q. I prefer your recollection of what took place at the time; what I want to get at is whether anybody was co-operating with you at that time or whether you were acting on your own responsibility?—A. I was acting on my own responsibility.

Q. Do you know whether you hit any person?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you design to hit any person?—Well, I can't say—

Q. Give me a frank answer to that question?—A. I can't say that I did.

Q. Did you design to fire without hitting anybody?—A. I designed to protect myself.

Q. Did you design each pistol shot you fired not to hit anybody?—A. No, sir; I didn't say that.

Q. You fired then with the idea that you might hit some one?—A. I fired with the idea that I might hit some one—

Q. Are you sure you didn't hit any one?—A. I am not, sir.

Q. You might then have killed one of the men who was killed?—A. I can't say.

Q. You might have done so?—A. I can't say; there was no one who fell there.

Q. You may have done so.—A. I can only say this: that there was no one shot and I saw no one fall, and I didn't see any one who was shot.

Q. You shot in the crowd?—A. I shot in the crowd.

Q. A man might be ahead of your bullet and fall without you seeing him?—A. He didn't fall there.

Q. No; but he might fall.—A. There was no one fell in that part of the street; I saw no one fall at all.

Q. For what purpose did you procure this revolver originally?—A. I procured it for this purpose—

Q. Well be frank about it.—A. I will. From the state of feeling that was existing, I was very sure that there was bound to be a collision between the races. I was very sure that there would ultimately be some collision between the races, and I thought it was necessary for every one of us, every white man, to be prepared to defend himself and his family.

Q. No one had ever molested you, had they?—A. What do you mean by molesting?

Q. I mean what that term implies; no colored man had ever assaulted you, had there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When?—A. Upon several occasions.

Q. Name one.—A. Well, some years ago—

Q. Oh, I don't want to go back in the buried past. I mean during that time.—A. I wish to answer your question frankly, and if you will permit me to do so, I will do it.

Q. Well, go on.—A. Some time ago—it has been some considerable time—I was walking on the street with Mrs. Graves on my arm—

Q. When was it?—A. It has been two or three years ago.

Q. Very well, go on.—A. I was walking on the street with Mrs. Graves on my arm, and I met some colored women, and one of them endeavored to run right between Mrs. Graves and myself, although she had hold of my arm.

Q. A colored woman?—A. A colored woman; that was one occasion.

Q. Was that all there was of it?—A. I caught her and shoved her to one side, and moved on. That is all of that.

Q. Now do you mean that that occurrence prompted you to buy a pistol three or four weeks before election?—A. I don't mean that that alone did.

Q. Who was that woman?—A. I didn't know her.

Q. Was it in the day-time?—A. It was in the day-time on Sunday.

Q. In broad daylight?—A. In broad daylight.

Q. Had you a pistol then?—A. I had not.

Q. Did you have one before you purchased this?—A. Many a one I have had. I just told you I was an old soldier; have been in the army.

Q. I mean during your living in Virginia?—A. I have not used one. I have a pistol that I got during the war. That I gave to a widowed sister who lives in the country, and I had had no pistol for many years at home until I purchased this one.

Q. Now, what other menace, if any, was there which prompted you to buy this pistol?—A. I have very frequently, in walking the streets—a good many of the sidewalks on our streets have rocks, what we call stringers, two parallel lines, upon which the people generally walk. Frequently, in walking the streets, I have encountered negroes, more particularly negro women; I have generally turned to the right, and I have very frequently come in contact with them. I first gave the way, but I found if I continued to do it they would press me off the sidewalk altogether, and I generally walked straight along on the right hand, and if I come in contact with any one, why, they generally give the way; I didn't strike her with my fist or anything of that kind; I generally strike them with my shoulder, and pass on; I have had frequent occurrences of that sort. Upon another occasion, not very long before this thing occurred, there were a couple of negroes in my warehouse—I have a tobacco warehouse in town; that is my business, selling tobacco on commission—a couple of negroes came up with a basket of tobacco and ran with the basket against me; there was no necessity for it, they could have walked past; they could have passed around without striking me at all, but they ran right against my leg and hurt me a little; I remonstrated a little with them for doing so, whereupon they cursed me.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said, "God damn you, I'll strike you."

Q. What did you say?—A. I hit him over the head with my stick, sir.

Q. What more?—A. That was all.

Q. That was all of that occurrence, was it?—A. That is all of it.

Q. Did you have him arrested?—A. He had me arrested.

Q. How soon?—A. In a few hours.

Q. Who before?—A. Before the magistrate, a man by the name of Luck.

Q. Was the case tried?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were acquitted, I suppose?—A. I was not.

Q. You were not?—A. I was not. Mr. Luck asked me if I was afraid of the negro.

Q. You don't say you were convicted there?—A. I say that I was fined.

Q. Is that so? When was that?—A. That was two months before the election.

Q. How long before you bought this pistol?—A. Not a great while before that; perhaps a month or two; I don't remember the exact time.

Q. You paid the fine, of course?—A. I did.

Q. And had money enough left to buy this revolver?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you name any other incident or menace that prompted you to buy it? What was the name of that colored man?—A. I don't remember his name; I didn't know him, and don't remember his name now.

Q. Now, do you mean to say that you lived in fear from that occurrence?—A. No, sir; and that was one reason why I was fined. The magistrate asked me if I was afraid of the negro doing me any bodily harm. I told him I could not say that I was, as I felt perfectly able to protect myself. Although I was getting a little old, I was not afraid, and could not say that I was.

Q. Then you didn't entertain any fear of personal injury that prompted you to buy this revolver?—A. Not upon that occasion, I didn't.

Q. What?—A. I say I didn't entertain any fear of personal injury from that party.

Q. Well, you didn't know of any one else, did you, who would be likely to threaten you?—A. There was very great excitement all through the town; there were a great many threats being made; threats of violence.

Q. Was there any excitement before the circular was issued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time was that issued?—A. I don't remember the date.

Q. About how long before this occurrence?—A. It was, as well as I remember, a few weeks.

Q. Do you know who wrote it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who?—A. Judge A. M. Aiken wrote it.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. In Danville.

Q. Do you know how many were printed?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was printed in large numbers, wasn't it?—A. Large numbers, and a considerable demand for them, and we could not print them fast enough.

Q. Was it not sent to the Democratic headquarters, and printed by them?—A. No, sir; they were printed in Danville.

Q. Don't you know of any printed anywhere else except in Danville?—A. I don't; I suppose there were.

Q. You have no doubt about it, have you?—A. I don't know, but my impression is that they were.

Q. Do you know how extensively it was circulated?—A. I think it was very extensively circulated.

Q. Very extensively?—A. I think so; I think there was a very considerable demand for them.

Q. It was not circulated openly, was it?—A. I think so.

Q. Was it about Danville?—A. No, they were not circulated immediately about Danville; it was issued there.

Q. How much was the fine for your assault upon the negro?—A. It was a nominal fine, and the costs I don't remember exactly, but some five or six dollars, something like that, as well as I remember; I don't remember; the fine was nominal.

Q. How much was the fine; I am not asking about costs?—A. Very small; I don't remember.

Q. Less than a dollar, wasn't it?—A. I think so; I think perhaps it might have been a dollar; I don't remember the amount.

Q. Were these two colored men in your employment?—A. They were not; they were in the employment of Mr. Shelton.

Q. What were they there with a basket of tobacco for?—A. They were getting up his tobacco.

Q. Which was in your warehouse?—A. In my warehouse; they were in his employment.

Q. When was that occurrence?—A. I can't give the time exactly.

Q. About when?—A. It was a few months before the election, as well as I remember.

Q. Did you see either of the two colored policemen the day after the riot?—A. I don't remember to have seen them.

Q. You know them both, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they not excellent police officers?—A. I cannot say that they were.

Q. Can you say they were not?—A. I cannot say they were not.

Q. Didn't you esteem them as fairly faithful officers?—A. I can't say that I did.

Q. You know nothing to the contrary, do you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Wasn't it understood there prior to the election among the Democrats that in case there was a Coalition procession or parade it was to be broken up?—A. Sir?

Q. Wasn't it understood there prior to the election that if the Coalitionists undertook to have a street procession in Danville it should be broken up?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear nothing of the kind?—A. I heard that there was some probability of there being a street parade there on the morning of the election. This was the rumor; I don't know how it got about or anything about it; it was rumored there was to be a torchlight procession the morning before the election, and they were to march in three columns to the polls and take possession of the polls. That was the rumor; I can't say how it originated or anything about it.

Q. Now, please answer my part of the question. Wasn't it understood if that was attempted it was to be broken up?—A. No, sir; I will answer you frankly. There was no understanding to that effect, but I think if it had been attempted it would have brought about a collision; I will frankly state that.

Q. And your understanding was, then, it was to have taken place the evening before election?—A. On the morning of the election, before day.

Q. Who did you hear say anything of that kind?—A. It was a general rumor.

Q. Just answer my question, please; who did you hear say anything of that kind?—A. I can't say.

Q. Name any one person.—A. I cannot name any particular person now; I will simply say it was the general rumor of the town.

Q. Well, a general rumor among Democrats?—A. I presume it was among Democrats.

Q. Did you hear any such thing from the Coalitionists?—A. I did not.

Q. Then you must have heard it from Democrats. You had no intercourse with the opposite party, had you?—A. I had none, sir.

Q. So you must have heard it from Democrats?—A. I think it was from Democrats.

The evidence shows the whites were firing down Main street in the direction where Graves says he stood. They were firing at the negroes as they ran by Mr. Graves into Market street.

Captain Graves had a No. 44 caliber pistol—a six-shooter—the most effective arm he could get.

The witnesses state the report from it was louder than from the other pistols.

The evidence shows that when the firing began this witness was up near the white men who commenced the firing, and that as the negroes fled he ran down Main to the corner of Market street, and then fired in several directions, and, as before stated, he shot Charles Adams in the arm. It was also proved that after the firing he said that it had occurred three days sooner than they expected. It was also proved that as he stood at the mouth of Market street he hallooed: "Clear, clear yourself; we'll kill the last one of you." During the time of the firing a white man by the name of Holland was hit in the head and the proof is very satisfactory he was shot by the whites. He had two pistols in his hands and was firing at the time he was shot.

This is proved by Daniel Dugger, a white Democrat, and by others. Dugger also said:

Q. You saw Mr. Hatcher?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With his pistol raised?—A. I saw Mr. Hatcher when he deliberately came off the sidewalk, walked in front of the niggers and told them to git, and when he did so, he turned and said, "Boys, stand by me," and when he did so he fired deliberately into the negroes as they ran off. Then this crowd from across, Mr. Lea, Mr. Taylor, and Oliver and Dr. Temple, and a whole parcel of others; they fired directly at the crowd as they passed off, and then commenced the general firing.

Q. Now, you have it that the negroes were running when the first pistol was fired?—A. They had turned to run off as Hatcher ran out. When he hollered to the boys to stand by him, they turned and run.

Q. They were on the run before the pistol was fired?—A. Not before the first pistol.

Q. But before this general firing?—A. Yes, sir.

There was no evidence that the negroes fired a shot until after the whites fired the general volley at them, and the weight of the evidence is that very few had any weapons, but that they were unarmed and defenseless, gathered there in their working clothes as they had come out of the factories, of all ages and both sexes, and unquestionably gathered from curiosity and not with any view or purpose of violence or preparation for it. The whites, on the contrary, were generally armed, were expecting an outbreak, and obviously seeking a pretext for resorting to violence, as will be seen later in this report. Many of the whites emptied their revolvers, and the evidence shows that Captain Graves was seen reloading his. There was conflicting evidence as to the negroes having arms. Only one is shown to have exhibited any before the firing, and the colored witnesses and many of the whites, including some of the policemen, say they saw no arms in the hands of the colored men except the one named, and there is no reliable evidence he fired it. There was no evidence to be relied on that any of the colored men fired, except some witnesses state that they fired shots as they were running, fired over their shoulders. Most of the witnesses state they did not even see that. Judge Blackwell and Mr. Dugger, who were looking directly on from an upper window, say they saw no such shooting. That portion of Mr. Dugger's evidence in relation to this point is as follows:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. I live in Danville, Va.

Q. Give your age.—A. I am fifty-two years of age.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Twenty-six years.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am a merchant.

Q. Politically, what are your affiliations?—A. Democrat.

Q. Have always been?—A. Except on a few occasions I have voted for personal friends.

Q. Were you at home on the 3d of November last?—A. I was; I was in the town of Danville.

Q. Where were you at the time of this shooting?—A. I was in the office of Blackwell & Crumpecker.

Q. Nearly opposite the occurrence, in front of Woolfolk & Blair's insurance office?—

A. Yes, sir; nearly opposite the occurrence, in front of Woolfolk & Blair's.

Q. Who was with you?—A. Judge Blackwell.

Q. Describe what you saw and heard.—A. I came up to Judge Blackwell's room on a matter of business. I was sitting; no one in the room but myself, and I started to the stove to light my cigar, when I heard the cry of murder. I went immediately to the window, and he and I approached the window at the same time. I raised the window, and in looking over the street I saw a young white man, whom I knew, and a negro in a fight, the young man striking him over the head, and the negro hollering murder; two or three other men standing with pistols.

Q. Who were the persons engaged in the fight?—A. Charles Noel and a boy by the name of Hense Lawson. George Lea was standing with his pistol, and a young man by the name of Taylor and a young man by the name of Dance. Dance was standing in the door with a gun in his hand. There was a crowd which accumulated. I saw at first from twenty-five to thirty, and it increased very rapidly; and soon after, immediately, a few minutes, a negro boy came over from the opposite side of the street, Mr. B. W. Graves's, and ran to Lea and attempted to jerk the pistol out of Lea's hand. At that time Mr. Taylor struck him in the street, and the negro staggered, and directly Lea fired the first shot at this negro.

Q. Who fired?—A. George Lea. As soon as he fired that shot some gentleman, I think Mr. Robinson—I will state that this man Robinson, Mr. Burkley, and Mr. Corbin had been there. During the fuss there was a large crowd accumulated, and they were protesting, trying to end this difficulty as much as possible. As soon as this pistol was fired, some one took Mr. Lea off, probably eight or ten steps; but in the mean time Edward Hatcher came up, and some one had gone down to the opera house (at least I don't know that). In the mean time there were parties came from the opera house up street, and before they reached there Mr. Hatcher ran out in front of the negroes and remarked to them, "Git," fired, and remarked, "Now, boys, stand by me." When he did that there was probably a dozen or twenty fired right across the street.

Q. Into the crowd of colored people?—A. Yes, sir; as they were running off.

Q. Name those of the white persons whom you knew.—A. I knew Mr. Oliver there; I knew Dr. Temple; I knew Withers; I knew Taylor; I knew Corbin, who was not in the difficulty that I know of; I knew Mr. Hatcher; I knew Mr. Holland; I knew Mr. Dance; and I knew Mr. Friend. I could say a hundred of them.

Q. When the first firing took place what became of the colored people?—A. They ran into every alley and corner, and everything else, from the street.

Q. What did you observe as to whether the whites followed them?—A. They did follow them.

Q. Did they fire at them as they ran?—A. Yes, sir; promiscuously. Of course after passing a certain corner, I just stopped. I was telling what was in my view.

Q. Did you see any of those who were killed?—A. I did.

Q. How many?—A. I saw three.

Q. Where were they?—A. One was on the corner of Market, on the opposite side of the street from where I was on, near Mr. Joplin's store, on Market street.

Q. Where were the other two?—A. The other two were on the corner of Mr. Weisman's, Union street and Main.

Q. Up Main street?—A. Yes, sir; very close together. I knew the boy that was shot on the market. His name was Wilson; and one of the others.

Q. Did you notice where they were hit?—A. Yes, sir; my impression is that this boy on the market was shot in the mouth. I looked at him very closely, saw him when he was breathing his last breath.

Q. How were the other two hit?—A. The others were shot in the head, I think.

Q. What part?—A. Back of the head; that is my impression; I would not be certain about that.

Q. Were they all dead?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice what Noel had, if anything?—A. I did not, as I stated in my evidence. I notice in one of the papers of Richmond I am represented as stating that Mr. Noel struck him over the head with something. I did not state that. I thought before I gave my evidence, and corrected it before it was carried out—stated he was hitting Lawson over the head, and blood was flying out of his head; I don't know whether he hit him with knuckles or not.

Q. You do not know whether he had knuckles on or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did Lawson appear to be doing?—A. He appeared to be simply defending himself. I will state that I didn't see the first blow; don't know who struck it.

Q. Who struck the man who was trying to get the pistol from Lea?—A. Taylor.

Q. And then the negro run?—A. The negro staggered, and as he staggered Lea rose from the jerked position in which he was, and fired at the negro; not at the crowd, but deliberately at the negro. There was no misunderstanding; he aimed it sure.

Q. Did you see any colored people with arms?—A. I did not.

Q. Or hear any shots from them?—A. I did not.

Q. What was your relative position from your point of observation?—A. I was standing in an elevated position, looking right over them; could see, I reckon, as much as any man could see; that is, there was nothing in the way at all.

Q. How far?—A. I was about 40 or 50 feet from the scene.

Q. Could you hear Hatcher distinctly?—A. I knew him; knew him well, and saw every bit of his movements. I believe to-day if Mr. Hatcher hadn't fired that pistol there would not have been any negroes killed. I know he had that pistol. I understand Mr. Hatcher denied having a pistol; but I know it as well as I know I am living, or know anything.

Q. How many shots do you think were fired in all?—A. Well, sir, that is a right hard question. I think there were over one hundred guns, and I think there would have been fifty negroes killed if they had shot with precision.

Q. Had you heard anything prior to this occurrence on the subject of probable violence?—A. Not to the negroes, sir.

Q. It was all unexpected to you?—A. Except this, the excitement of this speech of Colonel Sims. I will state that the night before, on Friday night, I was there and heard Colonel Sims's speech, and that there was considerable excitement in regard to his abuse of the signers of the circular. I did not approve of it.

Q. Now, did he speak of those gentlemen, in any other way than for the act of signing that circular?—A. I will tell you (I think I have his words verbatim): Colonel Sims went on and denounced the whole of that circular. In doing so he appealed very frequently to the colored people whether it was so or not. They, of course, as they denied anything of the kind, would give demonstrations of the fact. He went on then to the close; and at the close of it he denounced every man as a liar, scoundrel, and everything else. I thought his remarks were unfortunate, and that there were good men there, and didn't think some of these men really signed that. It was a magnified circular. I reckon I know about as much about Danville as anybody else; had been a magistrate there four or five years, and was register there.

Q. Were his criticisms of the circular unfair, as you viewed them?—A. Well, the circular magnified; the statement I thought was unfair to the parties who had signed it, believing they had done so at the request of the parties who originated it.

Q. Did you understand him as assailing them outside of the fact of signing the circular?—A. Not at all; only denouncing the slanders, the act of signing that circular; that is it.

Q. He did not go outside to attack them as citizens?—A. No, sir; I did not understand him that way, at all, sir.

Q. What was the character of the crowd of colored people who were there?—A. Very orderly they were, certainly.

Q. Were they all of one sex, or a mixed crowd?—A. You are speaking of the time of the firing? Oh, well, a good many women and children. It was market hour, and right on the street where they frequent every Saturday—a large crowd—a crowd probably assembled there on that day on account of not working; as a general thing they were not working.

Q. They collected rapidly soon after this disturbance began?—A. Yes, sir; the colored people were out in the street, not upon the sidewalk, and the white people were on the sidewalk, and they congregated rapidly.

Q. They took no part in this affray?—A. I did not see it if they did. I heard the remark after Lea shot—I heard one or two negroes say, “Why, there is the man who shot him.” I know one thing, I know the officers went up and attempted to stop this difficulty, and were prevented from doing it.

Q. Did you not hear them call for the arrest of the man who shot the pistol?—A. I saw the officers get up and attempt to arrest them and they told him he should not arrest him.

Q. Who?—A. This man Lea, and Taylor, and the rest.

Q. They forbid the arrest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With their drawn pistols?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was the colored people who called for the arrest, wasn't it?—A. I don't know.

Q. But you know the officers were prevented?—A. I know the officers were prevented by these men, and this man Dance was standing with a doubled-barreled shot gun in an attitude of firing in the door.

Q. Did you see any arms come out of that shop?—A. No, sir; I did not. I saw plenty of men with arms though, any quantity of them.

Q. They began coming from the opera house at what time?—A. They commenced coming from the opera house about the time just before Hatcher fired, commenced when he fired, and this volley was fired, and then the general firing all over the streets.

Q. Did you know where Mr. Holland was shot?—A. Yes, sir; he was shot just above Woolfolk's. He had two pistols, one in each hand.

Q. Was he in the direction of the firing?—A. No, sir; he must have been shot by a white person standing on the steps of Mr. Paxton's, a few doors above. By standing on the steps it would elevate a man a little higher than a man on the curb-stone, and he was standing on the curb-stone. He was shot in the back of the head, sideways.

Q. Was there anything unnatural or unusual in the colored people gathering there when that trouble commenced?—A. No more than I have seen at other times under similar circumstances.

Q. Being there on the streets, they would naturally congregate to see what the trouble was?—A. I have seen it many times in a street fight.

Q. Did they not commence fleeing when Lea fired the pistol at the colored man?—A. They did; they were running. Some of them actually fired before they could turn around.

Q. Before Hatcher gave the order?—A. Well, I think, probably some of them gave way, and they came back after Lea shot. They came back and some one said, “There is a man shot—who shot him?” Some one made a mistake, and said Mr. Taylor was the one. He remarked to them that he hadn't shot, but they could get the effects of his pistol then, or something of that kind. I heard every word, of course, or pretty much all. There were other persons present right at the time. Mr. Berkeley was one of them. I saw them trying to do as much as they could do, everything to prevent it. I don't say there was not weapons. I only state I didn't see them; there might have been forty of them there.

Q. What time did you vote on election day?—A. I voted very early. I was going to Richmond. It was before 9 o'clock. I intended going to Richmond previous to the election but for that difficulty.

Q. You didn't remain in town during the day of election?—A. No, sir; everything was quiet when I went to the polls.

Q. You voted the Conservative ticket?—A. I voted the Democratic ticket.

Q. Well, the straightout Democratic ticket, I think it is called?—A. Straightout. I gave them the full benefit.

Q. Did you see anything that indicated the white people were in any danger from the blacks?—A. I did not; never apprehended anything of the kind. I had as many difficulties, I reckon, as any man in the town of Danville, but it has been with the lower class.

Q. Did it not appear to you that this firing upon that crowd by the whites was a designed, premeditated act?—A. I thought this. I did not think that the difficulty between the young men, that their difficulty occurred through any political preparation or anything of that kind. I can say this, that I was not in Danville for several months before the election, and was not as well prepared as some person in town would have been. I did not belong to any club, therefore could not state.

Q. Was there any cause that you could see there for that firing?—A. None at all, and I did not see any.

Q. An effort has been made here to have it appear here that this firing was in self-defense.—A. Not that I could see. I saw no demonstration upon the part of the negroes to use any arms of any kind or any description.

Q. So far as you could judge, then, the firing by the whites was without any justification?—A. I did think so.

Judge Blackwell, who stood beside the witness, fully confirmed him in the account thus given, and their evidence is free from bias or suspicion.

The evidence shows that the fire-bell was rung, but not for a fire. On the contrary, it was the signal for the Union Grays—a secret signal which the witnesses refused to disclose. Later, it will be shown that a man who was called back to Danville by a telegram explained this signal-bell. The whites came rapidly from all directions, and arms were distributed to those who had none, from the shops and stores.

The committee have thus given somewhat in detail the leading events which led to the massacre of the colored men. It is by no means difficult to arrive at conclusions which are entirely satisfactory. The alleged insult to Noel, which Lawson and Lewellyn deny, and of which there is no evidence except by Noel, was a mere pretext for a resort to violence. Noel admits that Lewellyn was the one who insulted him; that Lawson apologized, and he accepted the excuse. Lewellyn proved more than a match for Noel, and another fight with him was undesirable. Lawson was, therefore, selected. The defense proved by a witness who had been drinking with Lawson that day that Lawson was intoxicated and incapable of defending himself, and in that condition he was beaten by Noel in the manner before described, while Lea and Taylor stood on either side of Noel with revolvers drawn and refused to allow any interference even by the police until, as Lea admits, he became afraid Noel would kill Lawson. Lea said, "Stand back; I will shoot the last one of you damned niggers' heads off."

The evidence is satisfactory that Noel had on his hands a pair of knuckles of iron or brass. Noel was not called to deny it. It is difficult to see how he could have so beaten Lawson with his naked fists. Lawson was covered with blood, and Noel's face, hands, and clothes besmeared with blood also; so much so that his friends entreated him to go away, as the blood upon him would excite the negroes. The assault upon Lawson, and the brutal beating he received at the hands of Noel, can find no apology in the facts proven, but was a wicked and malignant attack, aided and abetted by Lea and Taylor, who stood as guards with drawn revolvers to prevent any intrusion.

Lawson said he was not expecting any assault, but supposed that Lewellyn would be the one to be attacked, if either.

The firing at Adams by Lea as Adams was running across the street, and the killing of Smith at his side, led to the demand by Adams of one of the police to know who it was that fired the pistol, and while that inquiry was being made the whites formed in line, with Lea at the head, and Hatcher lower down the street, and a volley was fired by the whites at the colored men in the streets, as one of their number stated, without any warning whatever.

Judge Blackwell stated that the blacks had turned to flee before the firing began. The pretense that the whites fired in self-defense, as so many of them state in answer to a stereotyped question, is not only unsustained by any fact proved, but also expressly disproven by cool and disinterested spectators like Judge Blackwell and Mr. Dugger. Upon all the evidence it is clearly established it was a wanton, wicked, and groundless attack upon unoffending men, women, and children.

During the summer nearly a hundred indictments had been found against people for carrying arms contrary to law. The colored people were influenced by this to discontinue the practice, while the whites continued to do so in violation of law. Captain Graves admitted this. After the election the indictments were dropped and have never been prosecuted.

WAS THE VIOLENCE PREMEDITATED?

The evidence on the subject is conclusive. We have already referred to the Danville circular and the resolutions to withdraw patronage from the Coalitionists.

Mivins, a colored barber, a reluctant witness, as his customers are white persons, stated that in the forenoon of November 3 white Democrats brought boxes containing pistols to his shop; that they were engaged in loading them; that they left the paper boxes with him, and he was told he had better keep off the street that afternoon. He also said a great many of his customers, whites, were armed. The boxes left were new, and have never been called for. Another witness stated he heard a conversation between 11 and 12 o'clock the day of the massacre between John Edwards and R. Williams, two Democratic ex-policemen. His statement is as follows:

I was sitting outside of a shed that Mr. Pleasants had there; two white men come, Mr. Williams and Edwards, running up the street, and had some little bills in their hands, but what they was, that I was not able to tell, and just as they got against the fence Mr. Williams walked inside of the alley and handed some to a lady at the door a little above, and came right back beside the fence I was sitting by in a sort of little cabin that Mr. Pleasants had for a workshop, and heard Mr. Williams tell Mr. Edwards: "You go to Mr. Schoolfield's and get all he has got, and from there to Colonel Grasty's store and get what he has got, and I will meet you at Mr. Joplin's—myself and Captain Graves—and then we will go from there to Captain Graves's house." But I didn't understand what they were going to do; I didn't understand that until I came down street, after they had made these expressions, and there was two white gentlemen there from North Carolina remarks in my presence, "There are going to be hell to pay here directly," to the other gentleman that was with him, and he said, "What is it?" Says he, "We are going to fire on the niggers this evening."

Neither Edwards nor Williams was called to deny this.

Another witness states he was at the store of Tyack & Schoolfield on the afternoon of the 2d of November, and gave the following statement of what occurred there:

- Q. Do you know where Schoolfield & Tyack's hardware store is?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Where is that?—A. That is down on Main street.
 Q. Were you there on that day?—A. Not on Saturday. I was there on the 2d.
 Q. What time?—A. I suppose about as near as I can come at it, about half past 3 or 4 o'clock.
 Q. In the afternoon?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Did you see any weapons there, or guns or pistols?—A. Yes, sir; I saw a great many guns.
 Q. Did you see anybody doing anything with them?—A. Yes, sir; I saw two white gentlemen loading them.
 Q. Loading what?—A. Double-barrel shot-guns.
 Q. How many?—A. I suppose about one hundred or one hundred and twenty-five; somewhere there.
 Q. Did you notice what they were loading them with?—A. I couldn't tell whether they were cartridges in the shell that they were putting in or ball.
 Q. They were breech-loaders?—A. Yes, sir. The cartridges might have been loaded with shot.
 Q. They were loading them with shells?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Do you know who the men were?—A. No, sir; I don't know neither one of the gentlemen's name.
 Q. How long did you see them at work at it?—A. I went there to get some faucets to put in some barrels, and when I got them I left.
 Q. Can you say how many they loaded while you were there?—A. I didn't take very particular notice how many they loaded.

Q. Where did they place them after they loaded them?—A. Well, they had a show-case something like that [indicating book-case] setting up a little behind the counter there, and they had right smart in that.

Q. They put them in there?—A. Yes, sir; and one was setting them down in the corner on the floor.

Q. Did you see pistols there?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any pistols.

Q. Nothing but double-barreled guns?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was your relative killed, as was reported to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was his name?—A. Jerry Smith.

Q. Where did you find him?—A. Now, going down town I met him coming out. They had him in a vehicle coming out. He was dead when I saw him.

This was uncontradicted.

Another witness, a huckster in the market, stated as follows:

Q. Now, had anything occurred in your business prior to this that led you to think there was a prejudice against the colored people there that was cropping out?—A. Yes, sir; I thought that was.

Q. Tell just what took place now in reference to your own business.—A. Well, before the election—

Q. How long before?—A. Probably a month or more—the citizens stop patronizing we colored people generally.

Q. Did any of them tell you the reason?—A. They told me the reason they didn't patronize us because they had passed a resolution in the club that they wasn't to patronize us.

Q. Wasn't to patronize the colored people or Coalitionists?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your trade was taken away from you?—A. Yes, sir, to a great extent; our heaviest trade in the market consists of white people, of course.

Q. What description of people did you furnish?—A. We furnish any of them.

Q. Boarding-houses?—A. Boarding-houses and citizens in general.

Q. Did any one make any proposition to you as to what they would do if you would join the Democratic club?—A. On one occasion they did.

Q. Who was it?—A. Mr. Jennings.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said he thought it would be better for us—now recollect this was after the election, this was not before the election.

Q. How soon after?—A. Probably a week.

Q. State it.

Mr. VANCE. I don't think that would bear upon the subject of the election. The object of this investigation is to ascertain—

Mr. LAPHAM. Yes, I supposed it was before when I made the inquiry. I won't press it if you object. (To the witness:)

Q. There was no proposition made to you before the election?—A. No, sir; not to me at all.

Q. But the trade had been taken from you?—A. Oh, yes, the trade had been taken from me.

Q. Was it by white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your white customers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have they ever come back trading with you since?—A. Yes, sir; to a great extent they have.

Q. Do you remember one occasion when you were passing the Democratic club rooms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long before election was that?—A. I don't know exactly how long it was.

Q. It was during the campaign, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir; some time during the campaign, a lot of us passing by the old post-office there—the Democrats had their club room up there—I heard some one speaking up there that night.

Q. Were the windows open?—A. Yes, I believe they were.

Q. What did you hear?—A. I heard one gentleman say in his speech that they intended to carry the election there either with fair means or foul.

Q. Could you recognize his voice?—A. I thought it was Mr. Henry Barksdale. I would not be willing to swear it was him.

Another witness states that about the first of October he was at the hardware store of Mr. Vass, on Main street, and he describes what he heard there as follows:

RUFUS HATCHET sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live on Jackson Branch.

Q. In Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

- Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there about eleven years.
- Q. Where did you live before that?—A. I came from North Carolina.
- Q. You were a North Carolinian by birth, then?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were you a slave?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What is your business in Danville?—A. Carpenter.
- Q. Who did you work for?—A. I worked for myself.
- Q. You carried on the business yourself?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you remember being on one occasion in Mr. Vass's store?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Where is that?—A. That is on Main street, near in front of the Market square.
- Q. How far from the scene of this riot?—A. I suppose, from the report which I have heard from the riot, it must have been right in front of it.
- Q. Did you see Captain Graves there?—A. At Mr. Vass's store?
- Q. Yes.—A. I did not.
- Q. Did you see any one there whom you knew?—A. Oh, yes. When I went down there—
- Q. How long before this riot was it?—A. That was about the first Monday in October.
- Q. Did you hear any conversation there about arms?—A. Here is the way I come to know what I am before you to speak.
- Q. Tell just what you heard there.—A. I went down there—it was about 8 or 9 o'clock in the morning—to Mr. Vass's hardware store to get some nails, and Mr. Fox, coffin-maker in the town of Danville, went in just before me, and when he got in he says to Mr. Vass, says he, "Is not our town in a dreadful fix?" And Mr. Vass says: "Yes, it is; and we are not going to stand it." Says he, "Before we will stand it we are going to shed blood." Mr. Fox answered him then this way: "I am old, and of course I can't do anything but just look on." And then Mr. Fox goes out, and about the time Mr. Fox got up just before the corner, coming up towards Mr. Catlin's office, Mr. Charley Holland come in, and when he come in Mr. Vass was down near the rear part of his store. He called, and says, "Vass!" Mr. Vass answered, "Sir," and came on, meeting of him. He says, "Is not your boys come yet?" And he says, "No; they have not got here yet, but I have got the bill of lading for them"; he says, "I am expecting them now on every train." And then Mr. Holland turned around and starts out. When he got out just about middle way of the counter—the partition goes between the two counters—he then says back to him, "How many did you send for?" He says, "I sent for five hundred"; and then Mr. Holland goes on out. Just as Mr. Holland got out on the street going towards the bank, in come Mr. Gerst's son—one of them, but which one I am not able to say; I don't know the names of neither one. When he got about that distance, then some gentlemen, another gentleman (I was showing him to some of these boys that are here now, Sunday, when we come down to the train; they called his name, but I couldn't call it now); the one that I pointed out; both came in together, and they called him, and said the same words to him.
- Q. Repeat what they said?—A. They says, "Vass." He says, "Hello." He says, "Is your boys come?" He says, "No, they haven't come yet, but I have got the bill of lading for them." Then, at that time, he says, "Well, if they don't get here soon we will have no time to practice." Mr. Vass said, "Yes, if they come to-day or to-morrow you will have a month now to practice," in that way. At that time in come Mr. Boisseau, and he calls him and repeats the same words, only in this way. He says, "Vass." He says, "Hello." Then Mr. Vass was right behind the counter. He says, "Is your bull-dogs come?" and he says, "No, they haven't got here yet, but I have got the bill of lading for them." Then at that time one of the clerks says, "I am ready to wait on you now." That was me, and I told him I wanted some nails, and he went around the counter and asked me how many nails I wanted. I told him, and when he was fixing up the nails for me I said to him, "Is that some new kind of dogs that Mr. Vass has ordered. He said, "Oh, no; they are pistols; pistols that you don't have to cock them at all." Says he, "Just as long as you pull you keep firing." "Oh, yes," says I. At that time I had my nails fixed up, took them, and went out.
- Q. Were these all white men?—A. Yes, sir.

No one of these persons was called to disprove this. Another witness states that Mr. Bendof, a Democrat under whom he was at work on the corporation, warned him of the danger which was imminent. His evidence on that point is as follows:

- Q. What is your business?—A. I have been a corporation hand in Danville nine years.
- Q. You work on the corporation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remember the day of this riot, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was your foreman?—A. Mr. Bendorf.

Q. Is he a white man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a Democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Prior to this riot had he said anything to you on the subject of keeping off the street?—A. Yes, sir; he had.

Q. Now, tell the committee just what he said.—A. He told me that Danville had got into the worst fix that he ever thought it would be in in the world, and there would be a riot there, but liked us not to get hurt, but could not tell exactly when it was coming on, but he knew it was coming, and be wary of it, and on Saturday—

Q. One moment. Did he say anything as to who would be killed?—A. No, sir; he didn't.

Q. Did he say why he wanted you to avoid being on the street?—A. He said he didn't want any of his hands to get hurt if they could help it. He said they was all good hands and he was sorry to have them hurt.

Q. Were all his hands colored men?—A. Yes, sir; all his hands were colored men.

Q. When did he say this to you last?—A. The last conversation me and him had about the riot was on Saturday morning, and that occurred Saturday.

Q. Where was that?—A. Working on Craghill Creek.

Q. What did he say to you that morning?—A. He told me that the riot was in about at the door, to look out, for he didn't know what minute it would take place, but it might be every day, and to look out.

Another witness stated that before the shooting he went to the store of Mr. Graves, for whom he worked, and gave the following account of what occurred:

Q. For whom were you wagoning prior to this riot in November last?—A. I was wagoning for B. W. Graves.

Q. How long had you worked for him?—A. About two months, I reckon, or three, up to that time.

Q. What was his business?—A. He keeps store there in Danville.

Q. Shortly before this riot did you go to the store?—A. Yes, sir; I was frequently there every day before it, and—

Q. I am inquiring now of the last time you went there before the affair.—A. Yes, sir; I went there, I reckon, it was about fifteen minutes before.

Q. Before the shooting began?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you go?—A. I went to the back door where I always go with my horse, and I found the door fastened; the store was fastened up.

Q. Had you ever before found it so during the day?—A. Not at that time of day.

Q. What did you then do?—A. I shook the door, and one of the clerks came down; Mr. Williamson, a clerk of the store, opened it, and I asked him, I says, "Mr. Williamson, you are all shutting up very soon. What is the matter?" He says to me, "Well, hell is to pay"; and there would be more dead men directly than I ever saw. That astonished me; I didn't know anything about it, and was not thinking about it.

Q. Did you go into the store?—A. Yes, sir; I went in. He opened the door and I went in and shut the door then behind me.

Q. What did you notice about the condition of things in the store?—A. When I got in the store I found the clerks were in there as usual, and I found the counter full of pistols and guns, and that was an astonishing thing to me; the same kind of pistols they had in the showcase, and the guns was laying out on the counter.

Williamson was called, and in form denied he said this to the witness, but the witness named Mr. Graves, and his clerks, Moore, Pascal, and Shepard, as present, and also said Mr. Burch came in, none of whom were called, and Williamson, on his cross-examination, stated he could not remember what was said.

Another witness was called who was the keeper of a boarding-house in Danville, and most of his boarders were whites. He was asked about a meeting of the executive committee of the Democratic club shortly before the massacre on the 3d of November, and what he heard said. He asked to be excused from answering, as he had to go back there, and his interests were there. On being informed by the chairman that it was his duty to answer, the following is what was stated by him:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Reed, it is not in the power of the committee to excuse you from answering any question. You have sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and no power in this country of ours is strong enough or great enough to injure you for telling the truth. The foundation of all our laws, of our courts, of investigations, and of all efforts to promote justice among men depends upon the frank and open answer to proper questions truthfully given, and it is your duty, therefore, to answer, and it is our duty to require answers to all questions that appear to be pertinent to the inquiry; and as a citizen of the United States it is your duty to do so promptly, without any fear or evasion.

Q. Tell it to the best of your recollection. You cannot be expected to do more than that.—A. Well, as far as I recollect (you remember that I didn't say he was a member of the committee) but twelve or fifteen, as far as I recollect. I wouldn't say positively, but I gather from the impression that it would be a matter to make the purpose effective to carry the election next spring; and, as far as I recollect, it must have been Dr. Keen's voice, from my acquaintance with his voice. I only recognized it being his voice—that we must have the town at all hazards, if not now, next spring, at any rate. I can't possibly remember every little technicality. I remember another expression. He said, "We have men enough, if they will only do their duty; but you know the registration is against us"; and of course some little noise between that—

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Was there anything said about violence?—A. I don't say that Dr. Keen said that, but somebody said this: "If we have to take it by violence."

Q. Well, some one said that?—A. Some one said it, but I won't say it was Dr. Keen's voice. I won't say it was his voice, but somebody said it in the middle of his talk. Of course it was a different voice from his, unless he changed his voice.

Q. You understood it to be in answer to what the doctor said?—A. Yes, sir.

Dr. Keen was not called to contradict him.

Another witness stated a conversation he had with Charles Redd as follows:

Q. Do you know Charles Redd?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the day of this riot?—A. Yes, sir; I remember.

Q. Where were you at the time?—A. I was there in front of Mr. Blair's office.

Q. Were you at work that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is your business?—A. Carpenter,

Q. Before that time did you hear Redd say anything; where was he employed?—A. He had been down to Mr. Gerst & Wood's store.

Q. He was a clerk there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you on any occasion hear him say anything about the election to the colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell the committee what he said.—A. He said to me—he never said anything to me before, but he asked me then if I would vote the Conservative ticket. I told him no; I wouldn't vote the Conservative ticket; he told me I needn't be afeared to vote it, for he says, "we are prepared and ready, and waiting to see that you won't be troubled after you vote it." He talked with me some right smart while; that was about all that passed, as near as I can think of it.

Q. Did he say anything about carrying the election?—A. Yes, sir; he stated to me that he was going to carry it if they had to carry it with balls.

Q. That is what I wanted; how long was this before the riot?—A. Two or three weeks.

Q. Did he say balls or bullets?—A. I think, as well as I can remember, he said balls.

Redd was not called to contradict this. Another witness stated that Bendorf, under whom he was working, about twelve o'clock of the day of the massacre, told him this:

Q. Tell the committee what he said.—A. It was about 12 o'clock, as nigh as I can come to it; he ate dinner at our shop right often; had his dinner brought there, especially when he was working close by the shop, and he come up that day, after eating his dinner, and stood in the door a little while and says, "There is going to be the devil to pay here to-day"; just so. He says, "If Sims puts his foot on the ground he would be a dead man." That was on Saturday.

Q. Did he say anything more?—A. I never said anything to him, he walked on and went off to his business; looked very angry.

Q. Did he say anything to you about going out on the streets?—A. Yes; he told us we had better keep off the streets.

Another witness states that on Saturday morning between 9 and 10 o'clock he was warned as follows :

Q. Do you remember a conversation you had with Mr. Young ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it ?—A. It was about between 9 and 10 o'clock on Saturday morning.

Q. The same day of the riot ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was it ?—A. Right in front of Mr. Vass's hardware store.

Q. Who is Mr. Young ?—A. A gentleman from Jacksonville, named Wimbush Young, who I was raised with. His father raised me.

Q. A white man ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A Democrat ?—A. I think he is; I don't know.

Q. What did he say to you, if anything, there on the street ?—A. Me and a couple of men were talking, and he came by me with saddlebags on his back. He is a horse trader, and he says to me, "Elijah"—told me to come to him, and called me a short distance from the other men standing listening. He says, "You get out of the street, and tell all the boys from Jacksonville to get off the street, for some of you are going to get killed here this evening."

Q. Did he say it in earnest ?—A. I did not think it was in earnest at the time he spoke, but after the thing occurred I think it was in earnest.

Q. He was a friend of yours ?—A. Of course he was; I think a very kind friend.

Q. He was brought up with you ?—A. I lived with his father until I was eight or nine years old.

Young was not called to contradict this. Another witness who was present at the massacre stated as follows :

Q. Where do you live ?—A. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there ?—A. I have been there about eleven years.

Q. Where did you live before going there ?—A. I lived in Greensboro', N. C.

Q. Were you a slave ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a family ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your business ?—A. Gas-lighter.

Q. Do you light the streets ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you followed that ?—A. It will be two years next month.

Q. That was your business in November last, then ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you this day of the firing ?—A. Right there on Main street.

Q. Did you see anybody bringing guns out of Woolfolk & Blair's office ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many did you see ?—A. I saw somewhere about five or six.

Q. What were they ?—A. They looked like these breech-loaders.

Q. Pistols or shot-guns ?—A. These breech-loaders; shot-guns, I reckon.

Q. What did they do with them ?—A. After the people commenced firing there they fetched them out; four or five men came out with them.

Q. What did they do with them out ?—A. I don't know whether they shot or not.

Q. But you saw them come out of the office with the guns in their hands ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the office where a gentleman stood with a shot-gun before the firing began ? Was it the same office ?—A. It was Mr. Woolfolk & Blair's office.

Another witness testified to what was said to him by Mr. Seward about the middle of October last, as follows :

Q. Did they say how they were going to beat ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How ?—A. They only said they were going to beat by Smith & Wesson. I can't call them.

Q. Revolvers? bull-dog ?—A. No, sir; they aint any bull-dog in this question. Smith & Wesson, double-action, five shooters, and breech-loading shot-guns. I got that the middle of October; that was the first time.

Q. Who did you hear say that ?—A. A man by the name of Seward who got shot on that occasion; I believe he was a butcher, or tangled up in the market house there.

Q. White man or colored man ?—A. A white man. He is the man that told me they were going to carry this town at all hazards, and I asked the question, "How are you to do it if you aint got the votes?" He said, "We are going to carry it, votes or no votes, with double-barrel shot-guns, breech-loading shot-guns," that was it, "and with Smith & Wesson double-actions," and his next reply was to that, saying to me, "and God damn you, we will get you. I will be damned if you aint bound to go."

Mr. Seward is one of the white men who was wounded on the day of the massacre, and he was not called to dispute this. This witness was so frightened by what occurred Saturday that he kept himself secreted in his house from Saturday night until Monday. He says his house was surrounded on Saturday night by a crowd of men. They called for him, and tried to rattle his door down. He named Dick Lowry as one whom he recognized by his voice. This evidence was not contradicted.

Another witness testified that he was a porter in Jones's drug store; that about two or three weeks before the election a man came in from the railroad. Dr. Temple was there, and the following is his statement:

Q. That is the time I refer to, state what was said, as near as you remember it.—A. The remark was made by Dr. Temple, it was, "I have been always very fond of them, but when they don't behave themselves I am in favor of shooting them down like dogs."

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Have you given the name of the man who said that?—A. I said that the gentleman who first started the conversation; I cannot remember his name, but that was the remark as well as my memory serves me was made by Dr. Temple.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. What did the gentleman say to Dr. Temple that led to that remark?

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Just repeat that remark again.—A. The remark was this, "I have always been very fond of them"—"the negroes," I think he said, I won't be positive whether he said "the negroes" or "them"—he says, "I have always been very fond of them and always been willing to treat them right, but when they interfere I don't think it is wrong to shoot them down like dogs." That is my best recollection of that, as you draw it out of me on oath, and I think that is the way it was.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. I have had to draw it out, but I have got it.—A. That is my best recollection.

Doctor Temple was not called to deny this.

Another witness testified to conversations with B. W. Graves and Mr. R. H. Woolfolk about ten days before the election. His evidence on the subject was as follows:

About ten days or two weeks before the election I was passing B. W. Graves's store, grocery merchant, and he stopped me, and we commenced talking about politics. He wanted to know how I thought the county was going, and he remarked to me that they were going to carry the town; he had no doubt about their carrying the town by a large majority. I told him I thought it would be rather closer than he expected. Then he remarked to me, "Verser, we have always been good friends, and you understand very well why, and I want to give you some advice." He says, "You take the advice of Mr. Frank Marks in your office. He says he never bothers with politics and attends to his own business affairs, and there is going to be trouble here on the day of election, and I would not like to see you hurt." He says, "You take my advice and stay in your room that day."

Q. What is Graves's business?—A. Grocery merchant.

Q. You don't speak of Captain Graves?—A. No, sir.

Q. A relative of his?—A. I think he is a nephew.

Q. Is he a Democrat?—A. He is.

Q. An active politician?—A. I don't know whether he is very active or not.

Q. Did any one else speak to you?—A. I think it was the following day, I was stopped near the Arlington Hotel by Mr. R. H. Woolfolk, who came to me and told me he wanted to see me and talk to me little while. He said there was going to be trouble on election day, and he wanted me to keep off the street. I told him I did not apprehend any danger; that I thought it was all talk for political effect. He says, "I am a friend of yours, and I want to tell you now not to be on the street." He says, "If you will vote, go to the poll early and vote, and then go to the country." He says, "Go, if you have an excuse to go. I don't want you to be on the street on the day of election." He says, "If you are, you will be killed."

Mr. Woolfolk is one of the signers of the Danville circular, and neither he or Mr. Graves was called to contradict this evidence. The witness also testified to another conversation with Mr. J. B. Westbrook, about a week before the massacre, as follows:

Q. Do you know Mr. Westbrook?—A. I did.

Q. When was that?—A. On Saturday night before the riot; some time the last of October.

Q. Just a week prior?—A. Yes, sir; he met me near the office of Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair, and told me that the people had made up their mind that time to carry that election; that they could not stand Mahone and the nigger rule any longer, and they wanted me to be on my guard, if I didn't I would be hurt, and that he didn't want to see me hurt as I had always been a good friend of his; and, if you will allow me to add, a week after the election he met me on the street and in company with Mr. Hamlin, who is our commonwealth attorney, he turned to me and said, "Jim, what I told you in regard to that difficulty you see has come to pass. It only came three days sooner than I expected."

Q. What was his position in the party?—A. He is a Democrat.

Q. An active man?—A. I think he is, very.

Neither Westbrook or Hamlin was called to contradict this evidence. As has already been stated, Captain Graves made the same remark, that the riot occurred three days sooner than he expected.

Another witness testified to a conversation he had with Thomas Lea, one of the persons who fired on the blacks on the 3d of November, about a week before the election. His evidence is as follows:

Q. State what he said.—A. He says, "On election day we white people are going to carry this election." He says, "We will either carry the election; if we don't we will kill the last damn nigger before we stop or carry this election."

Q. What then?—A. "And you had better be at home in your house and stay there, and we will protect you."

Lea was not called to contradict this evidence. Another witness testified that on the 30th of October, at a Coalition meeting in Chalk Level, in Pittsylvania County, about 35 miles from Danville, a white Democrat by the name of Jesse Keen came into the meeting and insisted on speaking. Objection was made, but he insisted on doing so, and stated if the colored men did not rally to the polls and vote with the Democrats they would be shot down like dogs and driven off as the Indians were. He also said there was a threat made in Danville that they would carry the election by ballots or balls. Keen did not deny this. Another witness testified that on the 3d of November, between 7 o'clock in the morning and noon of that day, he picked up a printed handbill in the depot in Millsborough, 150 miles from Danville, stating that the black wave had struck Danville, and there had been four colored men and one white man, a leading citizen of Danville, killed. The witness said he was certain it was before noon of the 3d of November that he saw and read the handbill. Another witness testified that about the middle of the week before the election he was at Galego Mills to get some meal. T. C. Hardy, the clerk with whom he transacted the business, asked him if he had heard of the fight or trouble at Danville. Witness replied he had not, and asked what it was about. He said there had been a fight between the colored and whites about some colored women crowding white women off the pavements, and a good many were killed, as he understood. He said that will draw the color line if nothing else will. Witness was sure this was before the Danville riot took place. Hardy was not called to contradict this.

Another witness testified that on Friday, November 2d, he had a conversation with a passenger on the train going from Martinsville to Richmond, who informed him he resided at Danville. He told witness that he expected there would be trouble between the whites and colored people at Danville on Saturday, as he had that morning received a telegram to return to Danville on account of that. He also said that “three signals from the Star warehouse bell would raise a hundred men in arms at any time.” He also said he would not admit Coalitionists into his house or eat with them if he knew it. The witness stated the person with whom he had this conversation was a white man, and got off the train at Danville.

Another witness testified that on the 29th of August he had a talk with General Hill, editor of the Scottsville Courier, in Albemarle County. Hill said to witness he had seen that he had been nominated as a candidate for the lower house in the legislature, and added “We will defeat you this time.”

Witness asked if he meant himself or the party? Hill replied, “No; we will defeat you in the State.” Witness asked him how so? Hill replied, “We have more money than you, and we intend to use it, and we mean to bully where we can’t buy.” It made such an impression that witness made a memorandum of it in his book. Hill was made the sergeant-at-arms of the last Democratic house, but he was not called to disprove this testimony. Another witness testified that he resides in Fairfax County, and that there was a current report on Friday, the 2d of November, that there had been a riot in Danville. The report came by the Midland railroad, and that he did not learn to the contrary until the published account was received on Monday. He said there were several trains coming in on Friday, and all the hands had the report; that there were no colored hands employed on the trains; the hands were all white men. Another witness testified that an exaggerated account of the Danville riot was published in Wythe County, 200 miles from Danville; that it was stated persons were killed on both sides; that it had a marked effect, together with the Danville circular, which was extensively circulated in concentrating the white vote.

During the examination the defense put in evidence a circular to the colored voters of the State, from which we quote as follows:

WHAT HAS THE READJUSTER PARTY DONE?

In answer to this, thank God, we can say that they have done much for Virginia, and in doing this they have not acted for one class of men more than another, but have worked for the benefit of all alike. They found Virginia poor, down-trodden, and oppressed. They have begun to make her strong, independent, and rich. They found her with a debt of over $31,000,000. They settled that debt, after deducting West Virginia’s share—one-third—upon a fair and honorable basis, at $21,000,000. They found the whipping-post—a relic of the barbarous ages, the savage state of society—a Funder institution in our State. They wiped it away as the morning sun melts the dew-drops from the grass. They found that a man was compelled to pay $1 before he could vote, and in many instances he could not find the Democratic tax collector when he wanted to pay this tax to vote, if the collector knew that he was not going to vote his way. And the Readjuster party said that this requirement before voting was wrong, and that a man should be allowed to vote and pay his taxes when he got able. So they wiped away that requirement which in former years, by Democratic manipulations, had disfranchised thousands of colored voters, and they made us free once again.

They found that our lunatics were kept in barracks which had been left as a relic of the war, and now little better than horse stables. So they said this was wrong, and they gave us $100,000 to build an asylum for the care and protection of our insane, and $56,000 annually for the support of this institution. They found that there were several colleges in the State for the higher education of white young men and women, supported in whole or in part by State funds, and none for the colored people; so they appropriated $100,000 for the building of a college for the education of our sons and daughters, and put the management and control of this institution entirely in the hands of colored men, and to-day that institution is open, with a competent corps of colored teachers, and though it has only been open since the first of October, there are now more than one hundred young colored men and women there drinking from the fountain of knowledge, preparing themselves for teachers, lawyers, and doctors, to work among and educate our children for the duties of life.

Another witness testified that he resides in Norfolk and is a passenger conductor; that as his train came in on Sunday morning, the 28th of October, people at the different stations inquired about the Danville riot. It was asserted that there had been a riot and eleven persons had been killed. On the next Sunday, November 4th, witness heard that such a riot had occurred the day before.

Another witness testified that on Saturday morning, the 3d of November, he was at the market in Alexandria, and it was rumored through the market that there had been a riot between the whites and blacks at Danville; that this report was in the forenoon between nine and twelve o'clock, and was talked about by the white people generally in the market.

Another witness testified that he was a postal railway clerk residing at Wytheville, and that on Monday or Tuesday before the riot the telegraph operator, in a conversation with a friend about the canvass, in the presence of witness, said "it was getting very hot—red hot—in Danville; that he heard an order go over the wires that forenoon for eight dozen pistols; that the order was from Danville to a Northern house"; and that the operator who said this was a Democrat.

Another witness testified that he heard Captain Whitehead, editor of the Lynchburg Advance, a Democratic paper, and his associate editor, a lawyer by the name of Marye, address a Democratic meeting at Lynchburg the night before the election. The meeting adopted resolutions, offered by General Early, commending the action of the whites at Danville. The witness stated the speeches were so extraordinary that he wrote down the substance at the time. The following is his account of what each said. Mr. Whitehead said:

We intend to carry this election. We have arranged everything to carry it. News from all over the State indicates that the State will be rescued from the radical Mahone rule. We intend to carry this election if we have to carry it through blood. Woe be unto the judge of election who attempts to bulldoze or attempts to make fraudulent returns; better he had a millstone around his neck and cast into the sea, for his last days will be worse than his first. Perdition will be his portion. Close up your stores to-morrow and devote one day to the rescue of this grand old State from the rule of the traitor Mahone. Watch every white man who comes to vote, and if he votes against us then we will know where to place him, for those who refuse to vote with us are against us, and we must spot every man that is against us, and the work we have to give must be given to those that are with us; vote with us. Those who vote with us are not against us. Watch the people. See that all yours, every friend, whether he be white or black, that wants to vote with us has his interests protected; and if Mahone radical judges of election interfere with you in the discharge of your sacred duty strike hard from the right shoulder. Vote your men. It matters not what the consequences may be, for we must, we will, we shall carry the election, cost what it may, and rescue the grand old State from this diabolical rule of the arch-traitor Mahone and his black Republican allies.

There was no evidence given to show that Senator Mahone had ever by word or act attempted to raise the race issue. As we have already stated, there was no motive on the part of the Coalitionists to resort to it, but the contrary was their true policy.

Mr. Marye said:

We are now on the eve of the most important election that was ever held in Virginia. These are exciting times. We must rescue the State from Mahone Radical rule and place it once more in the hands of the best people (the white people). We commend the white people of Danville for their course in their late unpleasantness. It was a desperate case and required a desperate remedy to subdue Mahone-Radicalism in the fair town of Danville, our sister city. If a row occurs here to-morrow, and I am sorry to say it may occur at any time, don't shoot the poor negroes, as was done in Danville, but commence at the office-holders first and kill down; kill every devil of them, for they will be the instigators of the row if one does occur. We have nine-tenths of the intelligence, nine-tenths of the wealth, nine-tenths of the religion—yes, all the religion, for whoever saw a Radical Mahonite inside of a church? They are all a mean set of scoundrels. There is neither honesty nor principle inside of their party. We don't intend that they shall rule Virginia. We intend to rule Virginia from this vile horde of Mahone Radicals. It matters not what it may cost. The election is ours, and as sure as the sun goes down on to-morrow night you will see, my friends, that Virginia will be redeemed by the best people (the white people). We intend to rule Virginia, it matters not what it may cost, or what sacrifice we may have to make, we intend to rule.

Mr. Whitehead had been a member of Congress, and is a Methodist exhorter, and Mr. Marye is an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

The witness testified that while Mr. Mayre was closing his speech the colored band of Lynchburg came up the street playing. The whites said the Coalitionists are coming to break up our meeting. This order was given: "Gentlemen, all form into line and protect yourselves." The Democrats formed into line, and a great many pistols were drawn. Some one then said: "These men are not against us; they are with us; for God's sake, don't have any riot." Then it was all over. This was after the speeches repeated by the witness had been made.

The foregoing is the substance of what was proven, going to show the preparations which were made for the massacre which took place at Danville on the 3d of November, and the expectation throughout nearly the whole State that such a conflict was contemplated. We submit, it is shown very conclusively that the Democrats had planned a resort to such violence in order to raise the race issue and lay the foundation for an appeal to white men to throw off their allegiance to the Coalition party and to stand with the whites in the contest then pending, while at the same time alarming the blacks in order to deter them from voting. It will be seen that in nearly every instance the names of persons were given by the witnesses, so that ample opportunity was afforded to disprove the facts stated. No attempt was made to do so, and the proof on the subject should be regarded as entirely reliable and not open to criticism.

HOW THE DEMOCRATS MADE USE OF THE OCCURRENCES AT DANVILLE.

In almost every part of the State exaggerated reports of the massacre were circulated by telegrams and printed circulars. A witness testified that on Monday before the election he heard a Democrat by the name of McKinny, in Pulaski County, over a hundred miles from Danville, declare that the white men were wading in blood in the city of Danville to assert their rights. At a jollification meeting in Waynesboro', where the Ruffin circular was published, Mr. Opie, a Democratic member-elect to the legislature, in the course of his speech said, "He thanked God from the bottom of his heart for the Danville riot; that it was God's blessing in disguise." The news of the massacre reached Lynchburg the same afternoon that it occurred. The Democrats were exultant, and received the news in a spirit of rejoicing. They said, "That secured the State to the Democrats." The reports were exaggerated that from five to eight persons and one white man were killed. The telegrams were posted on the bulletins. At a Democratic meeting held in Lynchburg on Monday after the massacre the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That we heartily sympathize with our fellow-citizens of Danville in their struggle against the domination of the negro race under the lead of renegade white men, whose hearts are blacker than the skins of their unfortunate dupes, and we assure our fellow-citizens of the white race not only of our sympathy with them in their present struggle, but of our material and physical support whenever that becomes necessary.

Resolved, That Virginia is, and of right ought to be, a white man's country and ruled by white men, and we are determined that our mother State shall not be ruled by thieves, and liars, and cowards with white faces by the aid of their allies, the colored people.

The following was published Saturday night and widely circulated on Sunday, November 4, in Southwestern Virginia :

A MASS-MEETING IN DANVILLE.—COALITION RULE IN DANVILLE CONFIRMED.—HEAR WHAT THE PEOPLE SAY!

The following telegram, received by the chairman of the Democratic county committee of Roanoke County, confirms the "Danville Circular":

"A large and enthusiastic mass-meeting of the Democrats of Danville was held Saturday, November 3d, 3 o'clock p. m. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"We, the undersigned residents of the town of Danville, have examined the circular entitled 'Coalition Rule in Danville,' sent to the valley and southwest Virginia, and signed by our fellow-citizen, W. T. Clark, and others, and we certify that it contains a substantial and true statement of the condition of things in the town for the last eighteen months, the assertions of the Richmond Whig and our Coalition judge and mayor to the contrary notwithstanding.

"GEO. C. CABELL,
"President of Mass-Meeting."

In Culpeper County, 175 miles from Danville, circulars were distributed saying that a good many white people were killed at Danville. On Sunday evening, November 4, the following resolutions were adopted at a Democratic meeting in Richmond, and republished in an extra of the Enterprise, a Democratic paper published at Wytheville, on the 5th of November:

ENTERPRISE—EXTRA.

WYTHEVILLE, VA., Monday, Nov. 5, 1883.

THE BLOODY NEGRO RIOT IN DANVILLE.—AN IMMENSE MASS-MEETING IN RICHMOND, HELD SUNDAY EVENING.—MAHONE RESPONSIBLE FOR BLOODSHED.—WHITE MEN OF VIRGINIA URGED TO BE TRUE TO THEIR OWN RACE IN THE RACE CONFLICT WHICH MAHONE HAS BROUGHT ABOUT.

[Special telegram to the Enterprise.]

RICHMOND, VA., Nov. 4, 1883.

EDITORS ENTERPRISE,
Wytheville, Va.:

This (Sunday) evening an enormous mass-meeting of white citizens was held in Armory Hall. Col. John B. Purcell was called to the chair, and stated the object of the meeting to be simply to express sympathy for the white people of Danville.

The following preamble and resolutions were unananimously adopted:

Whereas reliable information did reach this city on Saturday night that a conflict between the white and black races took place at Danville yesterday, the result, as we believe, of a conspiracy to force the race issue upon the white people in the present political canvass; and

Whereas the white citizens of Danville did lately address an appeal to their race in certain portions of Virginia, setting forth the grievances under which they labor in consequence of this conspiracy; and

Whereas the veracity of that address has been questioned by Gen'l Wm. Mahone in a card lately published in the Richmond Whig:

Therefore, be it—

Resolved by the citizens of Richmond, in mass-meeting assembled:

First. That in the conflict which took place in Danville on yesterday the white men of this city sympathize fully and cordially with their own race.

Second. That they have the fullest confidence in the truthfulness of the address written, signed, and circulated by certain leading citizens of Danville, with all of whom one or more of us are personally well acquainted.

Third. That whenever or wherever this conflict shall take place in Virginia, all white men are affectionately, earnestly, and solemnly entreated to take the part of their own race.

Fourth. That the whole history of Virginia, up to and including the present time, shows that they have never raised the race issue, but that in every case it has been forced upon the white men against their protest and in effectual form.

Fifth. That in this particular canvass the race issue has been deliberately forced upon the white men, and its irritations planned and sedulously cultivated by WILLIAM MAHONE and his conspirators for their own selfish ends, and that upon their heads must rest all the responsibility for blood that may be shed or spilled by men who are driven to the conflict in the interest of civilization.

W. D. CHESTERMAN.

MORE PROOF.

The following telegram was received this (Monday) morning by Mr. T. N. Perkinson, a well-known Readjuster in this place, from a friend in Danville :

DANVILLE, VA.,
Monday morning, Nov. 5, 1883.

To T. N. PERKINSON,
Wytheville, Va. :

If you only knew our suffering here on account of negro rule you would vote different. We are standing in our doors with guns protecting our families. Post this up at the court-house door.

P. N. ROBERTSON.

In regard to the author of this telegram, Mr. Perkinson testifies as follows :

WYTHEVILLE, VA., Nov. 5, 1883.

I am well acquainted with P. N. Robertson ; have known him from his boyhood. He is as respectable a citizen as there is in Danville, and, as far as I know, has always been a truthful man.

T. N. PERKINSON.

In accordance with Mr. Robertson's request, the original telegram has been posted at the court-house door, where it can be seen and read.

Perkinson was not called to disprove this. It will be seen that the telegram to the News by Colonel Cabell wholly omits any reference to the massacre, which had taken place, during the meeting to which he alludes.

In another locality it was shown there was a report that from one hundred to one hundred and fifty persons were killed at Danville. The Hon. John S. Wise, in his testimony, states that appeals like the one sent by Mr. Robertson to Perkinson, and before referred to, were printed and sent all over the State in the southwest where the coalition strength, amongst the whites, was the greatest. They were distributed by riders and Democratic clubs. He produced a copy, which is as follows :

DANVILLE, November 5, 1883.

For God's sake help us with your votes to-morrow. We are standing in our doors, shot-gun in hand, trying to protect our families.

See these precious morsels from the "high morality dish" (Lynchburg News' supplement), cooked by the Democratic State committee of Virginia, on Sunday, the 4th, and served to the people of Southwest Virginia on Monday, the 5th day of November, 1883 :

"RIOT IN DANVILLE.

"Mahoneism has worked out its legitimate result in Danville. Riot and bloodshed have come to pass. Inflamed and crazed by the diabolical speeches which have been addressed to them by the Mahone nihilists, the negroes have precipitated the bloody issue. * * * But how can those be fittingly characterized who have brought about this hellish business? * * * The horrors of the inquisition would be too good for them. * * * Let the incendiary devils be crushed beyond the hope of resurrection.

What, then, it is pertinent to inquire, was the condition of affairs in the city of Danville after the massacre and at the time these telegrams and reports were sent out? The Democrats came from the opera-house shouting and hallooing as they ran. They kept it up on their way up Main Street until they reached the Arlington Hotel. They yelled in exultation, "Hurrah for us Democrats." The signal bell for the people to fly to arms was sounded. The ringleaders in the massacre were placed on guard to patrol the city, as the mayor states, without his authority and without being sworn. Every white Democrat, and even boys, were armed, some with guns, others with pistols, and still others with bowie-knives. The white mob ruled the town.

When Colonel Sims returned late Saturday night the house at which he stopped was surrounded by one hundred and fifty or two hundred armed men. The negroes fled in terror from the city and to their houses. None of them were on the streets. Lawson went to Boston and Lewellyn to New York or Brooklyn, and have since remained away from Danville. The authority of the mayor was defied. He says he was warned several days before the massacre by Democrats, who were friendly to him, to keep off the streets. He testified that when his little girl notified him they were firing he went down to the scene, and white Democrats were running up and down the street with guns, pistols, and bowie knives. He was obliged to order the Douglass Guards, a colored company, not to come out. He sent the chief of police, Mr. Hall, to order out the white company, and when he returned Colonel Cabell said to him, "Young man, make yourself small; I have just kept a crowd from mobbing you." The mayor testified that after he was advised to keep off the streets, from what he heard and what came to him officially, he feared there would be trouble on the day of the election, and had selected fifty extra policemen and notified them to come on Monday. He had also notified the captains of both military companies that he feared trouble. The violence came before he expected it. He states that there were from two hundred and fifty to three hundred armed. They circulated all over the town and in the highways leading to the town Saturday night, and he thinks there were five hundred in arms on Sunday. Most of them had new arms. He says he did not see a colored man armed between the massacre and the election, and if one had appeared on the street he would have been riddled with bullets. He stated that when something was said about calling out the colored troops a man said: "If that damned company comes out we will kill the last one of them." He says appeals were frequently made to him by citizens to get the armed men off the streets, but he was powerless. His authority was defied. When he and Judge Blackwell were walking over the town to learn more about the situation, they were arrested by a squad of armed white men. He telegraphed to Governor Cameron for troops, as he had no force to suppress the prevailing violence. The telegrams he sent were as follows:

To Gov. W. E. CAMERON:

Your telegram received. A riot occurred here this afternoon; three negroes killed, two white men and four negroes wounded; the military are on duty, and quiet for the present prevails. I, however, fear another outbreak before the election is over, and hope that you will send me a company of troops as speedily as possible. Our people are so excited that I do not think that they can be safely depended on to preserve order and keep down the riot.

J. H. JOHNSTON.

DANVILLE, VA., MAYOR'S OFFICE,
November 4, 1883.

To Gov. W. E. CAMERON :

I need additional troops here to keep the peace and conduct a fair election. Citizens here are terrorizing the election under the pretense of patrolling the streets, and the roads running beyond corporate limits. I have not a force of sufficient strength to repress this disorder. The same spirit that caused the riot of yesterday prevails in unabated force, and in case of another outbreak I think that the majority of the troops here will fraternize with the riot. The election on Tuesday will be a mere farce unless the electors be assured of protection at the polls by foreign troops.

J. H. JOHNSTON.

This condition of things continued through Sunday night, and it was not until Monday, the 5th of November, that order was so far restored as to enable him to issue his proclamation placing the city under a guard of chiefs and special constables in each ward. Mr. Robinson, a white man, who had been a magistrate, but who had resigned, and a person of undoubted courage, from the account he gave, was called as a witness, and testified as follows :

Q. I will ask you whether there was any feeling among the Coalition voters, or any portion of them, as to their safety in voting at the last election, as far as you could learn.—A. I was appointed a judge of election after that riot and I declined to act. I knew something then of the feelings of the whites, what they told me, and I knew my own feelings about it.

Q. Well, did you decline?—A. Yes, sir; I told Judge Blackwell the evening before that he had better appoint somebody in my place.

Q. State your reasons for not acting as a judge.—A. One of the reasons was that I saw by the Danville papers and by the Richmond papers that the bitterness and excitement was so great against any white man who belonged to that party that it would not suit me to act. I might get in a difficulty and kill or be killed. And on November 5, the eve of the election, I read a piece in the Danville Register, a communication, I think it was, in which it went on to say, among other things, that if any disturbance occurred at the polls that day, or something of that sort—I cannot recollect the exact words, I suppose the paper can be had—if any disturbance occurred on that day, they hoped that no innocent man would suffer, but that the blood of the leaders should be shed—something of that sort.

Q. And you were looked upon as somewhat of a leader?—A. I was looked upon as somewhat of a leader. I don't know why. I never wanted any office and don't want any. I resigned the one I had, but they said there that I was the only man that ever did resign.

He also stated on cross-examination :

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. On the day of election did you go to the polls?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You did not vote?—A. No, sir; I did not vote.

Q. Well, I presume you did not vote because you were afraid to go to the polls?—A. I was not afraid, but I knew there was extreme danger.

Other white men refused to act as judges at the election for the same reasons. The evidence shows that armed men from Danville went to the polling places in surrounding precincts in considerable numbers. Forty or fifty are shown to have visited one precinct; most of them were armed.

When the negroes were urged to vote they said, "We are afraid to undertake it; if we vote our strength no doubt they will shoot us. Just look at the crowd from Danville who don't vote here." This was said to Mr. Corbin, a prominent Democrat, and he was not called to disprove it.

Captain Graves was one who was there. The result was that out of about twelve hundred colored men registered in Danville less than thirty voted. They had registered and intended to vote, but all who were called testified that they were afraid to do so. A circular was issued advising them it would be safe to attend the election, but it was not reassuring to them, and they feared it was done to entrap them.

The evidence, which is uncontradicted, shows that the counties where the white Coalitionists were the strongest are in the southwest and valley of Virginia. A great change in this vote was caused by these appeals to race prejudice and reports of violence on the part of the negroes in Danville. One witness stated that in the county in which the city of Lynchburg is situated there was a change of 800 votes. In nearly all the counties where the whites are in a majority a change in the results was shown to have taken place.

It was claimed during the examination by Senator Vance that the Democrats and Coalitionists polled more votes last year than in previous elections, and that fact furnished an answer to the charge that these causes had any influence over the election. This is easily answered. As stated, this was the first time since the Coalition party was organized when suffrage was free from restrictions.

One witness gave it as his opinion that the capitation tax and whipping-post tax disfranchised nearly 50 per cent. of the colored voters in the State. It also doubtless kept more or less of the poor whites from voting, but not so many, as three white partisans would pay the taxes of those unable to pay them. The relative increase in the vote for the Democratic ticket was so great as to leave no doubt of a return of white Coalitionists to their former political associations.

Much was said during the investigation about the solidity of the colored vote in the State. It was well accounted for by a witness who gave the following testimony :

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. Now, taking politics, which are bad enough at best, according to the usual custom of parties, was there any harm in the white men trying to unite their race when they saw the other was united?—A. I do not think there was, if you use legitimate means.

Q. There was certainly no harm in going to a white man and saying, "Now, you see the negroes are all solid one way, why cannot we be"?—A. I cannot answer that question by saying yes or no. I will say this, in answer to your question, that if the negroes were banded together in opposition to the whites per se, because the people were white, then I believe the whites would be justifiable in banding together against the negroes because they were negroes, but I do not think—

Q. But one race represented a party?

Mr. LAPHAM. Let him finish, please.

The WITNESS. I say I do not think that the solidity of the negro race is against the white people because they are white.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. But it is because they are Democrats?—A. I think it is because they are in Virginia. You must allow me to speak in Virginia. I think that in Virginia, certainly, it is because, first, of the opposition to the enfranchisement of the colored men—probably, first, the opposition to his freedom, because the white people did not want him free; in the second place, because they had nothing to do with freeing him; in the third place, because the white people were opposed to the enfranchisement of the negro; in the fourth place, they attempted, by means of the capitation tax as a prerequisite for voting, to take from the negroes the powers and facilities for voting; in the next place, because they regarded—I think they regarded—the whipping-post as aimed at the colored people because they were colored, and it would disfranchise them. I mention those as the reasons why I think the colored people were disposed to be solid against what they regarded as the Democratic party.

Mr. Dezendorf, who was called by the defense, stated that nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand colored men, if let alone, would vote the Republican ticket. The object of the Democrats in these efforts to raise the race issue to alarm the blacks and to excite the whites was twofold:

First. To intimidate the colored voters in localities where they were strong, as in Danville.

Second. But chiefly to produce such a frenzy of feeling in the State as would induce the white electors to join with their own race and escape the contumely and reproach to which they would otherwise be subjected for fraternizing politically with "niggers." The efforts which were made to gloss over this terrible outrage by the committee of forty need only a moment's notice. It was done upon ex-parte affidavits taken before a magistrate. They were wholly extra-judicial, and no one incurred responsibility for his statements. The real facts were not called out. It was a partisan effort to screen the perpetrators of the wrong from punishment. The report of the grand jury is equally open to criticism. Three at least of its members were on the committee of forty. The published report of that committee was before them and used by them. There were only seven members, and the foreman was one of the committee of forty. One was a colored man, who was examined as a witness by the committee. He stated that a great many names of witnesses were given them, but they did not consider it necessary to examine them; that he did not think they would get at the truth, and that the published statement that the "negroes advanced upon the whites with drawn pistols" was not read to him, and he thinks it must be the mistake of the printer, as there was no such evidence before the jury.

The transgressions of the law at Copiah are clothed at least with the merit of a frank avowal on the part of those concerned of the purposes they had in view.

Not so in reference to Danville. The guilty authors and instigators of the violence resorted to there, and the murder of four unoffending colored men and the wounding of many others, seek to cover up and conceal their deliberate purposes, and to have it appear they acted only in self-defense. The evidence is entirely satisfactory—indeed, it is overwhelming—that it was the consummation of a deliberate purpose for which they had fully prepared. Hence the effort to magnify and distort the character of the collision, and to make it appear not only that the blacks were the offenders, but also that the whites were "standing in their doors with guns in hand to protect their families" against the violence of a negro mob, when, in truth, the white Democrats were the mob in possession of the town, and no negro dared to make his appearance on the streets. The occurrence was one which caused rejoicing instead of regret, as we have shown.

No one has been arrested, indicted, tried, or punished for the crimes committed on the 3d of November.

How Noel, Lea, and Taylor could escape punishment upon their own confessions, it is difficult to determine. But in view of the recent acquittal of Wheeler for the murder of Matthews, as set forth in the report of this committee already made, no punishment will probably ever be inflicted upon the perpetrators of this foul wrong at Danville. There should be found some remedy for such a state of affairs as this investigation discloses. The Constitution of the United States provides that when the right to vote is denied or in any way abridged in any State the basis of representation shall be reduced accordingly.

While these resorts to terrorism and violence are kept up from year to year and the party in the ascendancy instead of providing laws to prevent their recurrence or punishing the offenders, enacts measures designed to throw obstacles in the way of a free ballot and enjoys the benefits, politically, which are the necessary consequences, the States where it occurs should be held responsible for the results.

An individual would justly be adjudged liable in reaping a similar advantage under like circumstances and by like means. The rule should equally apply to the State for its action or its failure to act, in order to redress such grievances and punish such offenses.

Your committee, in the preliminary statements and closing recommendations of the report upon the murders in Mississippi, have stated their views upon the subject of the constitutional provisions designed to protect the ballots; upon the methods by which suffrage may be abridged; upon the duty of Congress in the premises, and as to the remedies they propose, which it is not necessary here to repeat, but which are reaffirmed and adopted as part of this report.

APPENDIX.

The witness, George Adams, who, from the statement in the public press, was recently cruelly beaten by four white men, of whom George A. Lea was one, among other things testified as follows. It will be remembered Lea fired the first shot at Adams on the day of the massacre.

Q. Were you ever called before the grand jury?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is this the first time you have testified?—A. Yes, sir; the first time.

Q. Your being there was well known to everybody, was it not; that you were there and saw the riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you why you did not obey the subpoena of this committee and come last week when you were summoned?—A. The reason is that I came to the depot about two hours before the train came and I was in the room and locked the door; there was an old man in there asleep and I waked him. I asked him if I could lock the door; he said he had no objection, the key was in the door, and in about half an hour before train time Freeman came down and shook the door quietly, but it was some time before I would let him in. I thought somebody was coming there. People told me that I had better look out; if I was going away somebody might hurt me, but he kept on till I opened the door. He said, "Which way are you going, George?" I said, "I am going to Washington; I was summoned there." He said, "Have you got any whisky?" I told him, "No; I didn't have any;" and he felt all around me, just so [indicating], and he found I didn't have any, and he stepped back and touched Mr. Lea and Hatcher and Dr. Temple and pointed then to me. They all came in and they said, "What in hell do you know about that row?" I said, "Well, I saw it all, and I was summoned down there." They said, "Well, you better know but damn little when you get down there."

Q. Who told you that?—A. Mr. Freeman, and I was mighty scared. I came outside and they watched me and Mr. Lea—I would have come if he had not looked at me so vengeful. He come up and looked like he would jump right through me. I would not mind Freeman, I had known him fifteen years; but Mr. Lea looked like he would jump right through me. He didn't say anything to me. Mr. Barksdale came in, and I said I didn't believe I would go on that train, and he asked me why? and I told him about it and that they asked for whisky, and searched for a pistol or anything. He said, "Come on, they are not going to bother you." "Yes," I said, "I think they will bother me." He said, "Here are $7, and come on to-morrow; if you are not a mind to come on to-morrow, wait until I come again. I will be here before the last of the week, and you come on with me. I will have other colored men and then you can go with them, and do not be afraid."

Telegram from Judge Blackwell to Hon. John Paul in relation to the Danville circular:

DANVILLE, Nov. 1, 1883.

Hon. D. S. LEWIS or Hon. JNO. PAUL:

I have to-day seen for the first time the circular headed "Coalition rule in Danville," and addressed to the people in the southwest and valley of Virginia. I have read this circular with mingled feelings of astonishment, sorrow, and indignation—astonishment and sorrow at seeing the names of some persons of known integrity and truth (if their signatures be not false) affixed to a document containing so much falsehood, and these elements so ingeniously commingled together that entire false impression is left upon the reader; and indignation that any class of men, however morally depraved by nature or education, or however blinded by prejudice and passion, should be so far lost to ordinary reason and common sense as to indorse a paper which has been evidently prepared for a political purpose by some one who is regardless of truth.

I am free to say that I am perhaps as well acquainted with the behavior and conduct of the people of this town as any citizen in it, and I believe the great majority of the statements made in said circular are utterly false and without any foundation in fact. Indeed, I have been able to find but two statements which are true, and these are in reference to the removal of two justices of the peace.

You are at liberty to use this telegram as you think proper.

JOHN D. BLACKWELL.

Proclamation of Mayor Johnston on Monday after the massacre.

PROCLAMATION.

MAYOR'S OFFICE,
Danville, Va., Nov. 5, 1883.

To the people of Danville:

All good citizens deprecate the present disturbed condition of our town, and earnestly desire the restoration of peace and good order. For the promotion of their so proper wishes I have appointed eleven special constables in each ward, who will be under the command of chiefs, as follows: In the First ward, Capt. Harry Wooding; in the Second ward, J. M. Covington; in the Third ward, P. H. Boisseau. The special constables in each ward have been appointed upon the recommendation of their respective chiefs, and are all reliable men. And I have also called into service the Danville Grays as the military coadjutors of this special constabulary. This arrangement will go into effect this day (Monday) at 10 o'clock a. m.

So complete and reliable is this arrangement for the preservation of peace and the protection of the town, that I feel fully warranted in assuring my fellow-citizens that peace and good order will be maintained, and I therefore call upon all good citizens to resume their usual avocations; to cease appearing upon the streets armed with shot-guns or other weapons; and thus, and by quiet conduct and conversation—"the things which make for peace"—aid and assist me and the other authorities of the town in restoring peace and good order, as all good citizens should do.

J. H. JOHNSTON, Mayor.

The mayor's notice to the public as to complaints of the conduct of colored policemen.

[Register, July 20.]

PUBLIC NOTICE.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, DANVILLE, July 20, 1883.

Frequent complaints are made to me by citizens, white and colored, of alleged evils from which they have suffered at the hands of policemen and others in authority in this town, and I have invariably given these complaints a prompt investigation with intent to redress, to the extent of the mayor's powers, the evils complained of. But these complaints are nearly always informal, vague, and indefinite; or if not so have been found not susceptible of proof upon the evidence adduced, and were consequently not sustained.

It is my desire and purpose to discharge, to the full extent of the law and my ability, the duties of the office which the people of Danville have conferred upon me, and, to that end, I hereby invite and request every citizen, white and colored, who feels himself aggrieved by the conduct of any official, over whom the charter and ordinances of the town give the mayor supervision, to present their complaints to me at my office in a formal and definite manner, together with the evidence to sustain their charges; and I hereby warn every such official that whenever such charges are sustained, he will be dealt with to the full extent of the law in each such case.

Very respectfully,

J. H. JOHNSTON.

Q. Were there any complaints made after this notice?—A. Not one.

Q. Was this published in a Democratic paper?—A. Yes, sir; that is a Democratic paper. It is a Conservative paper.

Extra of the Staunton Vindicator, a Democratic paper published in Southwestern Virginia.

STAUNTON VINDICATOR—EXTRA.

FATAL RIOT IN DANVILLE—THREE NEGROES KILLED—TWO WHITE MEN MORTALLY WOUNDED.

[Special telegram to the Staunton Vindicator.]

DANVILLE, VA., Sunday, Nov. 4—1 a. m.

Yesterday afternoon the white people of Danville held a mass meeting to indorse the statements in the Danville circular, and to denounce the statements of the Coalition mayor contradicting them.

While the meeting was in session a crowd of negroes gathered in front of the building, some of them jeering the Democrats who were passing in. Presently a negro and a highly respectable young white man had a difficulty on the street. A large crowd of negroes gathered around the scene. The negro was severely punished by the white man, and several negroes in the crowd then drew pistols and dared the white men, who had also gathered around the scene, to come on.

One of the negroes fired a pistol at a group of five white men, and thereupon a fusilade of fire-arms ensued, in which about one hundred shots were fired. The negroes scattered in every direction and the white men held the ground.

Three negroes were killed and two were wounded, one of whom will probably die.

Among the white men shot was Mr. Walter H. Holland, who is dangerously wounded in the head, and it is feared mortally. He is one of the most promising young men of Danville, and his sad fate has cast a gloom over the community. He is a son of C. G. Holland, chairman of the Democratic Congressional committee of this district, and one of the wealthiest citizens of Danville.

Mr. J. B. Seward, another of the white men, was shot through the body, and will probably die.

All is quiet at the date of this telegram.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

JUNE 9, 1884.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY ON THE DANVILLE RIOT:

The undersigned, constituting the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, being unable to concur with the majority either in their view of the Constitutional duties of the Government or with their statement of facts as elicited from the testimony concerning the affair of Danville, Va., have deemed it proper to set forth their own views and conclusions in relation thereto.

In the resolution directing the inquiry to be made occurs the following preamble:

Whereas a general election was to occur, and did occur, in the State of Virginia on the 6th day of November, 1883; and

Whereas it is alleged that all the victims of said attack were of one race and of one political party, and all their assailants of another; and

Whereas it is alleged that the authorities of said State of Virginia have not brought any of the persons connected with said alleged conspiracies, violence, and homicides before the courts of justice for examination or trial, whereby the equal rights of citizenship and the equal protection of the laws have not been secured to all the people of said State; and—

Now, any lawyer with an honest disposition to ascertain the truth will see that taking all the facts to be as asserted in these whereases, the Congress is clearly not authorized by the Constitution to interfere, but would conclude at once that it was a matter of purely State concern. The “general election” referred to, was one for the selection exclusively of State officers, which fact the “whereas” unfairly omits to state. Nor is it anywhere stated that the act of firing upon a number of citizens in the streets of Danville—State of Virginia—was done by the authority of any State law in contravention of the Constitution, by the neglect of the State to pass any law in furtherance of the objects of the Constitution, or by the aid, connivance, or neglect of any officer or official of the State of Virginia, but was wholly and entirely done in violation of her laws, and in contempt of her authority as any other killing or breach of the peace committed within her borders. It was to all intents and purposes, an offense committed against the peace and dignity of the State of Virginia, and against no other jurisdiction whatsoever.

The allegation in a further "whereas," that the authorities of the State of Virginia have not brought any of the offenders before the courts of justice, though not at all material in considering the question of the Constitutionality of this inquiry, must also be noticed, because it is positively untrue, and because it omits to state with a view, no doubt, to deceive, that the said authorities, from the governor of the State to the corporation scavenger of Danville, belonged to the same political party which is responsible for this resolution, and in whose behalf this inquiry has been conducted.

The first section of the fourteenth amendment declares—

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The first section of the fifteenth amendment says—

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Unless the authority to interfere in the domestic matters of the State of Virginia be found in these two clauses, there is none.

It would seem impossible to mistake the meaning of the words quoted even without the aid of judicial interpretation; but that interpretation we have positive and unequivocal. The very latest exposition is that found in the almost unanimous decision of the Supreme Court in the civil rights cases, 109 U. S., which is but the more explicit confirmation of a series of decisions upon these amendments to the Constitution, all leading up to the same conclusion. On page 11 the court, after quoting the fourteenth amendment, says:

It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of the amendment.

Again, on p. 17, the court say:

In this connection, it is proper to state that civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against State aggression cannot be impaired by the wrongful act of individuals unsupported by State authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings. The wrongful act of an individual, unsupported by any such authority, is simply a private wrong or a crime of that individual; an invasion of the rights of the injured party, it is true, whether they effect his person, his property, or his reputation; but if not sanctioned in some way by the State or not done under State authority, his rights remain in full force; and may presumably be vindicated by resort to the laws of the State for redress. An individual cannot deprive a man of his right to vote, to hold property, to buy and sell, to sue in the courts, or to be a witness or a juror; he may by force or fraud interfere with the enjoyment of the right in a particular case; he may commit an assault against the person, or commit murder, or use ruffian violence at the polls, or slander the good name of a fellow-citizen; but unless protected in these wrongful acts by some shield of State law or State authority, he cannot destroy or injure the right; he will only render himself amenable to satisfaction or punishment; and amenable therefor to the laws of the State, where the wrongful acts are committed.

The conclusion is irresistible that unless the violence done in Danville was done against some right protected by the Constitution and by the authority or under the connivance of some law, custom, or official of the State of Virginia, that Congress has no authority whatsoever to interfere, and this whole proceeding would become a simple impertinence toward the State of Virginia, which not even the dire necessities of party warfare can justify. Concerning the fifteenth amendment, the argument is precisely the same, to wit, that the whole remedy provided by the Constitution is directed against State action, except that the United States are themselves prohibited as well as the States; and neither amendment contemplates Congressional action against the mere wrongs of individuals committed against each other. In other words, the character of the legislation which the amendments authorize is corrective of the wrongful acts of the States, and not direct against individual wrongdoers in usurpation of the authority of the States which are not in default.

As exclusive of a possible conclusion drawn from that portion of the fourteenth amendment which forbids the abridgment of the "privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States," the minority would adopt the language of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, May 26, 1870, as used in the report of Mr. Edmunds upon the petition of citizens of Rhode Island, complaining that 10,000 citizens of the United States in that State were denied by the laws thereof the right to "vote at any and all elections holden in that State." That report says:

The "privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States" mentioned in the petition as secured by the fourteenth amendment do not include the right of suffrage. If they did, the right must necessarily exist in all citizens of the United States, from the mere fact of citizenship, without the power in any State or in Congress to abridge the same in any degree; and in such case, therefore, no qualifications of any kind could be imposed, and all persons (being citizens), males and females, infants, lunatics, criminals, without respect to age, length of residence, or any other thing, would be entitled to participate directly in all elections. Every provision in every State which experience has proved to be essential to security and good order in society would thereby be overthrown. It is enough to say that the rights secured by this amendment to the Constitution are of an altogether different character.

Again, even should it be true, as alleged in the whereas, that there was a conspiracy to assault and kill persons on the streets of Danville (and it is not true), it would not amount to such a condition of things, in the absence of any action of or collusion with the State or its officials, as would justify Congressional interference. In the United States vs. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., in discussing the indictment against the defendants, Chief Justice Waite, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

The charge as made is really of nothing more than a conspiracy to commit a breach of the peace within the State. Certainly it will not be claimed that the United States have the power or are required to do mere police duty in the States.

But it is indirectly said by the committee that they propose no interference by actual legislation further than, by investigation, to expose to public condemnation the action of the rioters in Danville, and it is also intimated that should the people of that State and Mississippi not vote for the candidates of the Republican party in the pending Presidential election, then the committee recommend a further investigation of the whole people of those States, with a view to depriving them of representation in Congress under section 2 of the fourteenth amendment. The latter the undersigned regard simply as a partisan threat, in itself strongly interfering with the free exercise of the right of suffrage, which it is believed the manly people against whom it is directed will treat with the contempt it so richly merits, and the former would seem to be simply a proposition to shift the expense of printing a campaign document from the pockets of the Republican National Executive Committee out to the public Treasury.

But if the Republican party will go so far out of the course of the legitimate functions of legislation as to investigate by a committee things with which it has no lawful concern, for the purpose of making party capital and scandalizing an illustrious sister State, whose people have just repudiated with scorn the unholy political alliance with them to which they had been invited, a decent respect for the opinions of mankind should have impelled them to conduct that investigation with fairness and set forth its results with judicial impartiality. That this has not been done, a glance at the committee's report will satisfy every just mind. The examination itself was conducted with all the sharpness, the rigor, the shutting off of unfavorable testimony, the leading up to and solicitation of that which was favorable, the taking of every advantage, which usually characterize the trial of a criminal case in the hustings court. The people of Danville were all the way through treated as though they were on trial, with Republican Senators acting as prosecuting officers; and nowhere would it appear that the object was an impartial investigation by the United States Senate for the purpose of ascertaining truth. Things are assumed to be true on the rambling statement of ignorant negroes, though disproved by dozens of witnesses of greater intelligence, both white and black. The terms "murder" and "massacre" are repeated again and again with a frequency and ease which would indicate that they were actually founded in truth.

Protesting against the necessity of following the committee in their report upon the facts, for the legal reasons before mentioned, yet we deem it required of us as a vindication of those slandered people to do so in part. And first let us recount the simple story of the Danville riot as it appears by the greater part of the witnesses, both in numbers and intelligence.

In 1879 the Democratic party of Virginia divided on a purely local question pertaining to an adjustment of the State's debt, one portion desiring it settled at its face value after the deduction of that portion which it was claimed belonged to the State of West Virginia; the other advocating its settlement at a still less figure. The details of the differences are not material to our purpose. Suffice it to say, that the party opposed to the settlement in full, who called themselves Readjusters, by an alliance made with the negro element of the Republican party, triumphed, obtained possession of the State government, and adjusted the debt on their own terms. Meanwhile much ill-feeling was engendered, not only by the debt question itself, but by the evident tendency and disposition of the leading Readjusters to transfer their adherents and the State bodily to the Republican party. With this object an alliance was made with the administration, whose patronage was given to that party to the exclusion of even original Republicans who would not lend themselves to the scheme. When that scheme was finally perfected and its purposes openly avowed, the personal and political bitterness became intense, and culminated in the campaign and elections of 1883. In these elections thousands of Democrats in all parts of the State, who had acted steadily with the Readjuster party on the debt question, seeing now that matter settled, and accepted as settled by all parties, resisted the attempt to transfer them to the Republican party, and resumed their allegiance to the Democracy. In the city of Danville, which contains some ten or twelve thousand people, and is a place of considerable importance as a seat of tobacco manufacture and trade, the contest was unusually intensified by the surroundings.

The tobacco factories, by their payment of high wages, had attracted large numbers of negroes from the surrounding counties of both Virginia and North Carolina. Outnumbering the white voters by some three or four hundred, under the lead of bad and reckless men they took possession of the city government, controlling all its offices and finances. Inevitable misrule ensued, and numberless outrages and indignities were alleged to have been committed upon the people, many of which are described by the witnesses. In their efforts to free themselves from this misrule, a large number of the citizens—leading men in character, intelligence, and property—prepared an address to the people of the Southwest and Valley of Virginia, in which they set forth their grievances and appealed to them for help at the ballot-box. This document was a partisan, campaign paper; it did not profess to be anything else,—and whilst it contained the usual amount of exaggeration and heated expression, its statements were proven by many most respectable witnesses to be, in the main, correct, especially in regard to those grievances which were most irritating and offensive to the sensibilities of their people. It gave great offense to the opposition, which was then called the Coalition party, and increased the excitement which then animated both parties. A few days after its appearance, and on Friday night, the 2d November, one W. E. Sims—a candidate of the Coalition party for the legislature—addressed a large crowd of already excited negroes in the streets of Danville, in which he denounced the authors of that circular in bitterest terms as liars, scoundrels, and cowards, amid the yells and wild hurrahs of his auditors. The negroes became uncontrollable, and this was really the beginning of the riot. Numbers of them had arms, which they displayed freely, using boisterous and threatening expressions of insult and hatred towards the whites. A United States deputy marshal, who was in their midst, turned to Mr. George W. Swayne, a respectable tobacco manufacturer, who was present, and exultingly exclaimed, in the midst of the yells of the negroes:

Yes, I'll be damned if we haven't got you. We have the white men of the Southwest with us, and we have the negroes right against you; and I'll be damned if we can't turn them loose on you in five seconds.

On Saturday morning large numbers of negroes assembled in the streets, many of them armed, blocking the sidewalks, and in many ways showing the excitement under which they labored. Numbers of them failed to go to their work in the factories as usual, and many who had gone to work quit at an unusual hour and repaired to the streets. Their excuse for this appeared to be the fear of an attack on their friend Sims, but after he had safely left the town without any demonstration of violence towards him, they still remained upon the streets, boisterous and insolent. No effort seems to have been made by the Coalition authorities of the city to prevent a collision, although they must have seen that one was imminent. About twelve o'clock in the day of Saturday, a young white man named Noel was passing up Main street, preparatory to leaving town to join his family in the country, when he came in contact with three negro men named Lawson, Lewellyn, and Love.

In passing by one of them tripped Noel with his foot, who turned angrily and demanded what he meant—this rudeness on the streets being one of the chief grievances complained of against the negro population—to which the negro man, Lawson, replied:

I beg your pardon, I was getting out of the way of a lady—and a white lady at that.

To which Noel replied:

That's all right.

At this another negro man, Lewellyn, said.

It don't make a damned bit of difference whether it is all right or not.

Whereupon Noel struck him, and a fist-fight ensued, both negroes striking Noel and knocking him back from the sidewalk into the gutter.

Finding himself outnumbered, and there being no white men in sight, he abandoned the fight and went away. At that time he was unarmed. He immediately repaired to his place of business and got a pistol, but by the advice of a friend, Mr. George Lea, in consideration of the excited state of the public mind, decided to take no further notice of the insult and assault, but determined to go on to his family in the country. For this purpose he got in his buggy and started, and while passing up street in a trot, he heard a voice exclaiming, "By God, here I am"; not noticing it at first it was repeated in a still louder tone, and in turning his head he saw one of the negroes with whom he had had the fight, who yelled at him in the same manner when he saw that he had attracted his attention. This aroused Noel's hot blood. He turned his buggy and drove down towards the opera house, where his friend, Mr. Lea, had gone to attend a large town meeting which had assembled for the purpose of taking action concerning the Danville circular. As he went in that direction the negro man followed, collecting other negroes as he went. Noel left his horse and buggy in front of the opera house, went in and spoke to Lea, and another friend named Taylor, told them he was going to chastise that man who had insulted him again, and asked them to go along and see fair play, promising that he would use nothing but his fists. The friends followed him as requested, and on reaching the street they soon found the negro man Lawson standing with his friends as though waiting for him. A fight then ensued between Noel and Lawson, no weapons being used by either party, of which Noel got the better, punishing Lawson so severely about the face as to render him bloody in a few moments.

Immediately that the fight began a crowd of negroes rushed up, whereupon Lea and Taylor drew their pistols and ordered them to stand back, saying that it was a fair fight, and no weapons would be used. The black crowd, however, continued to increase and the excitement to spread. Finally, a colored policeman came up and demanded that they should be separated, whereupon Taylor took hold of Noel and the policeman took hold of Lawson, and the fight was stopped. Under ordinary circumstances this would have been the end of it, but the negroes were too much inflamed to permit the matter to stop.

By this time a large number of them were present, and their passions were greatly aroused. The negro policeman himself had displayed a pistol at first, but had been made to put it up.

Just as the combatants were separated, a large negro named George Adams ran up and seized the pistol in Lea's hand and attempted to wrest it from him. In the struggle for its possession it was discharged, many say accidentally, which greatly added to the excitement and numbers of the crowd, and it soon swelled to from 200 to 300 blacks, whilst the three white men were reinforced by from twelve to fifteen of their friends, nearly all of the white men in town being at the meeting in the opera house. More policemen arrived, and several white citizens co-operating with them, police and citizens, mingled in the crowd and urged them to disperse, saying that it was a fair fight, that all was over, and the whites promising to go away if the blacks would. But they stubbornly refused to move, saying they intended to maintain their rights; that they intended to have it out right there; that they could shoot as well as the white people, and such like threatening expressions. Many of them were armed and importunately demanded to see the "damned scoundrel who had shot George Adams." The negro, George Adams, the friend of Lawson, went twice during the excitement from the scene to the market-house for reinforcements, and returned one time accompanied by many with pistols, sticks, and knives, one negro man named Glass openly displaying his pistol, saying, "I intend to kill him with this," meaning the man who had beaten Hanse Lawson. Refusing to disperse, the police and the men who were aiding them gave up the attempt to control the negroes, who continued to crowd up and around the fifteen or twenty white men who occupied the sidewalk with their backs to the wall. Fearing for their lives they sent hurried messages to the opera house for help, and finally fired their pistols in the air, as is proven by many witnesses who are circumstantially sustained by the fact that no one was hit, although they were not more than 8 or 10 feet away from the dense mass of 200 or 300 negroes crowded around in a semi-circular front. Here there is some conflict of testimony as to whether or not the negroes returned this fire before they ran.

It is conceded that the negroes did fire, but it is claimed not until after the whites had fired a volley into them. At all events it is proven by various witnesses that the negroes ran and fired back as they went. One white man fell, dangerously wounded, and there were afterwards found many bullet marks on the walls of the houses in the rear of the whites. The negroes began to fly almost immediately, and in a short time the street was clear of them. Some straggling shots were fired in the air, apparently for the purpose of scaring the negroes only; and from the time that the first pistol shot was fired to the last straggling one, according to the testimony of the coolest and most competent witnesses to judge of time under such circumstances, no greater time than from thirty to ninety seconds could have elapsed, if so long. By this time the citizens in the opera house had poured out into Main street, and the excitement was very great, as may be supposed.

They scattered in all directions to obtain weapons, and negroes from distant parts of the town were seen running towards the place where the fight had taken place, with arms in their hands, showing conclusively that both sides were expecting a collision. The alarm bell was then rung, and the excited citizens who had possession of the streets were gotten together and addressed by Colonel Cabell, their Representative in Congress, in the interest of peace and quiet, and by the aid of many other citizens order was soon completely restored. The trembling mayor was sent for and the services of all the citizens were tendered him; he called out the white military company and placed it under the command of the town-sergeant, Wood, according to whose testimony complete order and quiet were restored to the city in thirty minutes.

Three black men were found dead, and one subsequently died of his wounds, chiefly through neglect, as is believed. On one of the bodies was found a pistol and cartridges. Two or three colored men were slightly wounded, one white man dangerously wounded, and two slightly wounded—one being fired upon while on guard that night.

That the riot was produced by the excited state of the public mind no one can deny; that the chief cause of the inflammation which characterized Saturday morning was due to the violent and incendiary speech of Sims on Friday night no one can truthfully deny; that it was accidentally precipitated by the insolence of the negroes, Lawson and Lewellyn, and the imprudence of the hot-blooded young white men, Noel, Taylor, and Lea, without any concert with others, no just man can reasonably deny. That even after the fisticuff, which they brought about, it could have been avoided if the colored men had accepted the offer of the whites—that both should leave—or if they had obeyed the commands of the police or the entreaties of the white men present to disperse, likewise cannot be denied. That the few white men standing confronted by a great crowd of blacks, numbering at least ten to their one, many of them armed and infuriated, as their exclamations proved, believed it necessary to their safety that they should use their weapons, they have themselves, every one, solemnly sworn, together with a large number of cool and deliberate lookers-on, who thought that the situation was one well calculated to put a reasonable man in fear of loss of life or of receiving great bodily harm, which is the only true test of self-defense.

This man Sims was more to blame for the bloodshed in Danville than any other man. He it was who inflamed the passions of the negroes to such an extent that the collision of races became inevitable, and defied the feeble power of the police. He it was who stood up in the midst of an excited mob and abused and vilified the best people of Danville as liars, scoundrels, and cowards, and yet the committee refused to permit those men to attack his character, and show what manner of man their calumniator is. They did permit him, however, to grossly assail and insult (if that could be) the Senator who was conducting the examination in the discharge of the duties to which the Senate had assigned him.

Such is a brief outline of the main facts of the Danville riot, as they will appear to any impartial reader who will go through the whole testimony for himself, note the general current and bearing of the evidence, and give due weight to that which is on its face intelligent and consistent. The great volume of it will be found to sustain substantially the preceding story.

The manner of conducting the examination on the part of the majority has already been adverted to as evincing a disposition to elicit everything but the plain unvarnished truth, and to shut off anything that would favor the defense of the people of Danville. The methods of the report in dealing with this testimony are, if possible, still more unfair, more partisan, and disingenuous than was the examination. Many most important statements of the most respectable witnesses are entirely ignored; many important averments are made in direct contradiction of the great mass of the testimony.

By far the greater number of the points against the people of Danville are simply set forth on the authority of "a witness" without giving either his name, his color, business, or condition, or even citing the page where his testimony can be found, so that the reader can have no means of judging who or what the witness was; and it is left next to impossible to verify or contradict or modify what the witness said without reading through near 1,300 pages of testimony in search of each quotation. Couple this with the fact that an order to print 150,000 copies of the report has been asked for, to be read by those who have not the testimony before them, and who could not find the quotations if they had, and some idea may be arrived at of the fairness of this document, and the purposes it is intended to serve.

Again, quite a number of witnesses were summoned by the prosecution, examined, discharged, and sent home—some 250 miles—without being asked if they had not said certain things to certain parties. Weeks afterward ignorant and unvaracious negroes would be brought in and made to swear to most incredible statements made to them by the absent witnesses; whereupon the report dwells upon these statements, and triumphantly observes that these men (their own witnesses) had not been recalled to deny these statements, omitting to state the fact that they had been sent home, and that no such preliminary questions had been asked them. A few indeed were summoned to disprove these wild and improbable statements, which in every instance they did conclusively, but to have met each one with a counter-statement would have kept up a perpetual see-saw of coming and going witnesses, mostly to rebut improbable or unimportant assertions. It is to be noted, too, that the majority of the witnesses, whose testimony is reported without name or page, were ignorant and unreliable negroes; and there was a constant endeavor to hurry the minority and to limit the number of their witnesses. Of the whole number examined, 109 were examined for the prosecution and 89 for the defense. One negro man who is quoted, without name or page, as swearing to having seen a great number of guns, pistols, and ammunition in a store with the doors shut fifteen minutes before the firing began, and who swears that a clerk in that store told him in explanation of the preparations that "Hell was to pay, &c.," was confronted by that clerk, whose name was Williamson, who denied the whole story out and out. Here the man was called to deny what the negro said; but the report insists that the negro is still to be believed because Graves, the proprietor of the store, three clerks, and a stranger who was present, named Beech, were not all likewise called to contradict him.

When a committee of United States Senators thus announce their intention to believe one ignorant negro unless he is positively contradicted by at least five intelligent white men, the impartial reader can well judge of the animus and reliability of the report, and he can tell at once how much weight should be attached to the conclusions of the majority when they assert again and again without citing the proof itself that the testimony on such and such points was "conclusive" or "satisfactory."

The report asserts that the negro Jerry Smith was killed by the side of George Adams by the first shot, which was fired by Lea, in the scuffle for the pistol. So far as the minority can remember, or can find by searching the printed testimony, there is not one word to be found in all the evidence to sustain this statement. Nobody was hit by that shot; nobody fell by that shot. Adams, the negro, swore himself that the shot was fired at him on the ground, and went under him before he had began to run. It is true that he likewise swore that Lea continued to fire at him as he ran, and at the third fire that Jerry fell at the corner of Market street, but this is disproved by all the witnesses, white and black, without exception, who swore that there was but one shot from Lea's pistol prior to the general firing, which began some little time afterwards. Lea made no pursuit of George Adams, and the place where Smith was found dead is at least 225 feet from the place where Lea's pistol was fired.

Again, Charles Adams, the teamster, swore that W. P. Graves shot him in the arm in front of the door of Hessberg's saloon, which opens on Market street, whilst he was holding up his hands begging for mercy, and that after Graves had ordered him to go into the saloon out of the way and whilst he was doing so. This is stated by the report for the purpose of showing unnecessary cruelty and blood-thirstiness on the part of Graves, and the evidence on which it is founded is pronounced "entirely conclusive on this point, though Captain Graves denies it." Not only does Captain Graves, a gray-headed old citizen of most excellent character and intelligence, who has been recently elected mayor of Danville, positively swear that he did not shoot Adams, but so likewise do Charles H. Conrad, a highly respectable merchant, and Mr. George E. Coleman, a respectable manufacturer of Danville, who were standing within a few feet of Captain Graves, looking at him all the time, and who described the transaction with most minute particularity

Against the testimony of these three intelligent and unimpeached gentlemen the counter-statement of an ignorant negro is "entirely conclusive." That is to say, that the usual guarantees of truth which are supposed to be found in the intelligence, position, and moral character of a witness, when arrayed against the opposite qualities testifying in behalf of the Republican party are to be utterly disregarded and set aside. The same thing may be said of the charge that Noel used brass knuckles in his fight with Lawson, as the proof of it is alleged and denied on much the same testimony as in the Graves case. The committee, however, make a very grave mistake when they state that "Noel was not called to deny it." The truth is Noel had already denied in his examination using any kind of weapon, and it was also denied by Taylor and Lea and other witnesses.

Again the assertion is made by the report that the riot was a "wanton, wicked, and groundless attack upon unoffending men, women, and children," and it is declared that this is sustained by the evidence. This is so positively and absolutely wide of the truth, in letter and spirit, that it is difficult to confine comment upon it within the limits of a proper courtesy. Laying aside the testimony of many, many witnesses that there were no women and children present at all, the very utmost that can be said with reference to them is what was testified by the Re-adjuster judge of the hustings court of the city of Danville, John D. Blackwall, who was looking on at the whole affair from the window of his room almost immediately opposite and over the scene. Page 348, he says :

Most of those in the street who congregated, looking at the fight (meaning the fist-fight), were evidently grown men. I saw perhaps a dozen negro chaps that from their size I should judge were from ten to fifteen years old, and maybe more than a dozen ; and down to the lower part of the crowd, where there was a flight of stepping-stones across Main street, leading from Jones' drug store to the upper corner of Hessberg's saloon, were a number of women, probably two or three dozen. There might have been a few children with them. I do not recollect seeing more than two or three children there. I mean by children—to be accurate I should say they were little negro girls, I thought probably with their mothers; but the majority of those women I saw did not seem attached to the crowd. They seemed to be passing back and forth.

Again, on cross examination, page 353, he says there were no women in danger when the white men fired that he could see. In truth, Freeman also testified, and at least a dozen other witnesses, that there were no women and children in the immediate crowd that was fired on.

Now, it is submitted to the fair-minded everywhere, that to characterize a fight on a public street between fifteen or twenty whitemen and at least two hundred negroes as an attack upon any women and children who happened to be passing on the street at that time, and who were in no danger, and whom it was not designed to injure, is, to the last degree, unfair and unjust. Such a statement deserves a much more severe and indignant denunciation than can here be administered. It defeats its own purposes by exposing the animus of those who make it. For, however plausible it might be to denounce the recklessness of rioters in attacking a crowd where women and children were passing and might possibly be injured, to charge that the firing was upon them and directed against them, is what no reasonable human being believes. And to speak of a lot of infuriated, armed negro men, flourishing pistols, knives, and sticks, surrounding a little knot of white men, whom they outnumbered ten to one, and whom they threatened with violence, as peaceful and "unoffending" men, is simply to state as truth that which is not truth.

Again, the statement of the report, on page 13, is so framed as to produce the impression that George Adams, the negro, ran up and seized Lea's arm whilst the fight between Noel and Lawson was progressing, in obedience to the order of the policeman, Freeman. It is enough to say of that statement that by recurring to Freeman's testimony, page 119, it will be seen that the fist-fight was over and the combatants already separated before Freeman got there.

Again, it is claimed that the refusal of the negroes to disperse, in obedience to the orders of the police and the entreaties of many citizens, was simply the desire to have the man arrested who fired the first pistol. This is disproved by a great number of respectable white Democrats, by the police officers, and others. But as that kind of testimony seems to have little weight, let us see what is said of the behavior of the negroes by Aaron Pointer, who is not only a black man, but a very ignorant and hard-looking one, rambling in his statements, and possessed, in short, of all those qualities which the majority of the committee seem to think alone entitle a witness to full credit.

On page 1057, after describing how George Adams sprang upon Lea and tried to wrest his pistol from him, and how it was discharged right under Adams, proceeds as follows :

This George Adams runs back across the street towards the market where there was a great crowd, some 200, I reckon, got up, colored people—there was any quantity from the country, colored people on the market; the streets was pretty well crowded, and a little bunch of white men was standing near the wall, I reckon about 25 or 30, and this George Adams says, "Let's go and get him and kill him" to the other crowd. He went across the street then toward the market and got the crowd and attempted to get him.

Q. Get who?—A. Get him and kill him.

Q. Get who?—A. This man who hit Hense; I don't know the gentleman's name—and he says I can't find him, and so this other fellow; I will call his name for you—Glass—while Mr. Jeff. Corbin was going up and down the sidewalk telling them all just so; had his hand in his bosom, just shaking his fingers at them, and says, "Boys, don't you all crowd in here and raise great disorders for just a half drunken man."

Mr. Jeff. Corbin didn't know me. He says, "Gentlemen, now all go away; no use of this; go off, now, go off; will you go off?" That time this George Adams went across again—across the market—and he came that last time with nearly one hundred; and in the first time, as he came, as many or more following him on, he says, "Yonder he is; I will show him to you." The other fellow, Glass, pulled his pistol out and said, "I intend to kill him with this," and I saw as many as some seven or eight pistols and several sticks and knives, and they would have killed him, too, but there was a little big-headed white man—I don't know who he was, but he was standing in the door with a gun. He was a mighty small man, mighty big head, and I says to myself, "I will get out in the street," and there was a signboard setting down there, and I concluded to myself that I would get under that signboard; but I didn't do it. I said to myself, says I—let's see; there was a man who lived in North Danville, there, and says I to him, "Let's get away from here"; and just about the time we got half way across the street this vast crowd that George Adams brought had nearly got across—mighty nigh got on the sidewalk—and then they commenced shooting—I don't know whether it was white or black—and I commenced running. I run down on the market and run into a little house where they kept things to sell, and just fell in there on a pile of turnips, and just laid there on that pile of turnips until the shooting was over, and I then slipped off towards the court-house, and I goes out to Captain Vass and I says to Captain Vass, "I don't know what in the world to do"; and he says, "You go on back down there; don't you let those boys see you." He says: "These young fellows has turned up the very devil"; that is, Captain Vass. I was in his house. By that time the white people were going up the street with guns. It seems some on the other side of the street there were several colored people coming times two, and sometimes going forty, fifty, a hundred yards apart. Then down; it seemed like they had been out of town and was coming in, but there was no more firing at all after that. But just as sure as I am a man and you a man, if that shooting hadn't commenced, they would have killed every man. They was going to kill him, no doubt, about it, and the reason of it was they was not natur- ally the citizens of Danville that was so anxious to get to that house. It was a large crowd of people from the country, and they went in with the people of Danville. They went in with us; they thought if we said anything it was so, and they went in with us, and we all just banded up and undertook to get him and kill him, and I thought they did kill him until the next day. I don't know what became of him. I have never seen him since.

Q. You say that after this first fight and the firing of that pistol George Adams went over to the market corner and proposed to a number of people there to go over and get that man that beat Hense and kill him?—A. Yes, sir. He went twice, I say. The first time they pulled him off this white man, and when they got him off he ran across and got a crowd; I reckon seventy or one hundred; somewhere along there; I can't say exactly how many; and there was a little bunch of white men—not many—with this other fellow that was attacking Hense Lawson. He got in among them some how or another. I don't know what became of him, but I think he went in the house. When he came back the last time he brought more than he did the first time.

Even the diagram which is annexed to the report of the committee quietly asserts a state of things mainly deceptive and untrue. A more bungling fraud it is impossible to conceive; and no doubt it secured a place in the report because the committee refused to accept the official map of the city of Danville, and have it explained by the city surveyor, and chose rather to adopt the rude diagram of some ignorant witness. It will be noticed in the first place that it does not give the location of the scene of the trouble at all. It does not show Woolfolk and Blair's office; it does not show where the white people stood on the sidewalk in front of that office; it does not show where the black people stood at any place, but it shows with great particularity where Violet Keeling stood, which it is supposed the majority deemed of more importance than the position of the combatants. Fig. 1 is given for the opera house in which the meeting was held, located half a block south of Market street; and Fig. 24 represents the white people as pouring out of the opera house and forming a line of battle, four files deep, at Fig. 11 in Main street just above the south corner of Market. Again, Fig. 8, on Main street, half a block north of Market street, represents people likewise rushing out of the opera house, from which we infer that there were two meetings held in two different opera houses at the same time, to wit, in Fig. 1 and Fig. 8, although the existence of an opera house at Fig. 8 was unknown to everybody except the constructor of this lying diagram, which with equal truth he styles, "Scene of the Danville massacre."

The truth is there was no line of battle formed anywhere, especially not in Main street, on the corner of Market, as represented by Fig. 11; there was no firing done there, or at any place, except in front of Woolfolk and Blair's office, save what was done by Captain Graves and one or two who were near him, and they stood on the other corner of Market street, near the front door of Hessberg's saloon, marked as Fig. 7. In front of Woolfolk and Blair's office there was no alignment, except such as was naturally created by the curbstone, along which the few white men stood to face their threatening enemies. It is also a matter of the merest truth, established by the testimony of Judge Blackwell, Captain Graves, and at least a dozen other intelligent and respectable witnesses, that the people who were attending the public meeting did not rush out of even one opera house, much less out of two, until after the fight was all over. In the nature of things this must be true, because so large a building, with such small exits as the witnesses describes, could not be emptied within the time occupied by the firing, and in fact it was not emptied of any of its occupants, with a very few straggling exceptions.

But the task of following and exposing in detail the many misrepresentations, unfair statements, and suppression of the testimony, as set forth in the report, is a tedious one indeed, and one that would be utterly needless to all who could examine the testimony for themselves. We challenge all just-minded men to so examine it, confident if they do that they will conclude the committee did not want the real facts, but were searching for the material for a political campaign.

But perhaps the most remarkable and extraordinary attempt that was ever made in a quasi judicial proceeding, since that distant day when Moses and Jethro on the hills of Midian first organized courts for the trial of causes, was made by the committee to prove that the riot was premeditated and the result of a grand conspiracy of the Democratic party of Virginia. The proof of the contrary is absolutely overwhelming. Daniel Dugger, an intelligent man, who claimed to be a Democrat, but was elected to office by the colored vote, testifies, on page 627 and on page 631, that the riot was brought about through no premeditation or political preparation, but by the indiscretion of the young men, whose excitement was caused by Sims's speech. Judge Blackwell, the judge of the hustings court and a Coalitionist, on page 379 testified that, so far as he could see, there were no facts whatever tending to show that the riot was brought about with a purpose of killing or intimidating the black people, but had its origin solely with the hot-headed young men that began the fist-fight, which, in the highly inflammable state of public feeling, as he expressed it, "was like a spark in a barrel of gunpowder."

To the same effect substantially will be found the testimony of Town Sergeant James Wood, a Republican, p. 954; of P. B. Booth, p. 832; of W. J. Dance, p. 852; of C. H. Norton, pp. 884-5; of J. J. Pritchett, p. 890; of Charles H. Conrad, p. 925; of Green Williams, p. 945; of William A. Moorman, p. 1085. Nearly all of these, and many, many more, men of the utmost respectability, and who were in the secret councils of the Democratic party, swore positively and unequivocally that there was no concert or premeditation, but that on the contrary the constant advice of the leaders was to have no violence, to submit to everything for the sake of a peaceful election, their great fear being that the returning boards, being all in the hands of their adversaries, would rob them of the fruits of their victory.

Q. Did you hear anything in the nature of premeditation about this riot?—A. I heard to the contrary exactly. It was this. That the election machinery and the State officials were Readjuster, but that we were confident of gaining a victory, and that if we were not very conservative and very cautious, they would seek on the least pretense to cheat us out of the fruits of the victory. I heard the leaders advise and caution Democrats to be very peaceful and very quiet, not even to resent any personal difficulties that might be construed as having any bearing upon politics at all. Mr. Schoolfield, one of the prominent men there, in fact advised me that way. That was the sentiment among all the leaders.

In truth, the proof of premeditation on the part of the negroes to bring about a collision is stronger and far more reliable than it is against the whites. (See testimony of L. L. Bass, p. 882; C. H. Norton, p. 884; G. W. Swain, p. 893; Green Williams, pp. 940-42-45; R. A. Prior, jr., p. 1080; W. R. Moorman, p. 1087; Frank Corbett (colored), 1033-35.

Against this mass of testimony the committee oppose the extravagant and unreasonable statements of a lot of negroes. Much of what they tell is of that wild and unreliable character of which the emotional and imaginative nature of the negro is so prolific; and purports to have been obtained by eaves dropping or by the voluntary confidence of leading Democrats, who took occasion to impart all their plans and purposes in this way to those against whom they were aimed. A few samples will suffice: A "witness"—name and page of testimony not given—who said he was a boarding-house keeper, intimated that he had terrible things to tell, but was afraid to expose them, and begged to be excused; that he was loyal to the Government (that is, to the Republican party), and wanted to tell, but it was dangerous, &c. Finally, after much persuasion and a most solemn and impressive lecture by the chairman, he mustered courage sufficient to say that on one occasion he had sneaked into a little ante-room adjoining the hall of the Democratic ward club, and through the crack in a window had listened to the voice of a man addressing the executive committee, which he thought was that of Dr. Keene, saying that they must have the town at all hazards, if not now, next spring, at any rate. To which some other voice replied, whose he did not know, "If we have to take it by violence." It appeared by cross-examination that he was neither certain of the man who spoke nor of what he said, qualifying all with the usual precaution of false swearing, "I can't possibly remember every little technicality," and "I do not swear that any violence was contemplated by any class of people."

The barber, Mivins, whose testimony is also quoted to prove premeditation, swears, page 308, that some white people told him on the morning of the riot that he had better keep off of the street that day; that he saw two men with pistols, who came into his shop and loaded them, &c. Yet these two men who had given him this kindly advice, no doubt on account of the excited state of the public mind and the great number of boisterous negroes on the streets, were quietly being shaved when the firing began, and did not leave the shop until the shaving was finished and the firing all over.

Then the committee cite another witness—name and page not given—who testified that he saw "Mr. Williams and Edwards" running up street one day with some little bills in their hands—what they were he did not know; that as they went along they handed one to a lady in a door, and he heard one of them say to the other:

You go to Mr. Schoolfield's and get all he's got, and from there to Colonel Grasty's store and get all he's got, and I'll meet you at Mr. Joplin's—myself and Captain Graves—and then we will go from there to Captain Graves's house.

What all this meant was a profound mystery to this darkey until a short time afterwards he met "two white gentlemen from North Carolina," who took him into their confidence and explained it all by telling him there was "going to be hell to pay here directly." This made it all as clear as daylight. The "little bills" which Edwards and Williams were distributing contained, no doubt, the dark and guilty secret of the conspirators, which, to avoid publicity, they had had printed, and were confiding to the women. The committee very triumphantly remark that neither Edwards nor Williams was called to deny this. It is an evidence of their great forbearance that they did not also add, nor was the "lady in a door," or the "two white gentlemen from North Carolina."

Another witness—name and page not given, of course—testified that he saw 125 breech-loading shotguns on the counter of the store of "Tyack & Schoolfield" on the day before the riot, and that two men were there busy loading them with cartridges.

Now, when it is considered that the slipping of prepared cartridges into a breech-loading shotgun (occupying fully one second) is a very slow and tedious process, we cannot but admire the forethought of the conspirators in starting two men at the work twenty-four hours beforehand, or four whole days if the riot was intended for election day! And when we consider further that not a shotgun was fired during the riot, and finally that there is no such business firm or storehouse in the town of Danville as "Tyack & Schoolfield," we may cease to wonder that this testimony was uncontradicted, as the committee triumphantly announce.

Another witness—name and page not given—is quoted as testifying that he was a huckster in the market, and that awhile before the election the white people actually ceased to patronize him. Also, that on one occasion he stopped under the hall of the Democratic club while a meeting was going on, and listening heard the voice of some speaker, he did not know who, saying that the Democrats intended to carry the election by fair means or foul. Now, if any one should doubt that what this noble eavesdropper overheard is proof conclusive of a dark and damnable conspiracy to kill and murder, that doubt must be dissipated when the significant fact of the withdrawal of patronage from the huckster is taken in connection therewith. If to stop buying vegetables from a negro huckster don't mean that you are preparing to murder him, in the name of the Sacred Ensign of the Bloody Shirt what does it mean? The "voice" of that bloody-minded speaker was "not called to deny this."

Another witness, whose name happens to be given, Rufus Hatchet, says that about the first Monday in October he was in the hardware store of a Mr. Vass and heard a conversation carried on without concealment between Vass and a man named Fox, Mr. Holland, and a Mr. Catlin, in which it was said that the town was in a dreadful fix, that it would result in bloodshed, &c.; and sundry mysterious allusions were made to a bill of lading which Vass said he had received for five hundred "bull-dogs or boys" which were expected soon by the train. Not understanding what all this meant, he applied to the clerk, who told him that it meant pistols, self-cockers, &c. Of all this jumble of disconnected and unmeaning nonsense, no one was called to disprove anything, say the committee. Of course not. The only material thing was the explanation which he says the clerk gave him, and he could not specify the clerk's name, and there were five or six in the store! The whole story of Hatchet is evidently an imaginary yarn in which he was very badly coached, as the cross-examination shows. The statement of this witness concerning declarations of Captain Graves—given on page 12 of the report—is an evident falsehood, and was made after Graves had been examined, discharged, and sent home, which is the reason why he was not specially called to deny it. Had the committee gone to Danville, as the minority desired, such wild statements as these could have been promptly met upon the spot wherever names and address were given. The truth is, as explained by the testimony elsewhere, the armory of the Danville Grays was likewise used as the hall of the Democratic ward club; the military drilled and "practiced" there; the club held their political meetings there only. Purely and commendably in the interests of peace it was that Sims was requested not to speak on the steps of the same building in which the "Grays" were appointed to have a meeting on the same night. The statements of the witness to the effect that Vass had ordered 500 double-action pistols is also evidently false. Mr. Valentine, a hardware merchant—p. 1074—testifies that the double-action (Smith and Wesson) pistol cost $10.65 apiece by the wholesale. That they usually ordered not more than a half-dozen at a time; that they sold most of the cheaper kinds of pistols to the colored people, and had sold a larger quantity than usual to them for the six weeks preceding the riot. Five hundred of the higher-priced self-cockers would have amounted to over $5,000 for one bill, and such an order is contrary to the usual course of trade. Of the cheaper ones, Valentine said, they never bought less than 100 at a time. The "bull-dog" was described by another witness as being a cheap pistol, and if Vass had really ordered 500 of them, it was evidently for the colored trade.

Another witness—name and page as usual not given—the committee quote as saying that he was at work for a Mr. Bendorf; that one day, not long before the riot, Mr. Bendorf told him that Danville was in a bad fix, which he believed would result in a riot; that he liked all his hands, and didn't want any of them to get hurt, and advised them to keep off of the streets. That a man of intelligence living in Danville during that very inflamed period should be apprehensive of a collision need surprise nobody, but that the expression of this apprehension to his colored workmen, and his kind advice to them to avoid the crowded streets, should be set down as evidence of his complicity to kill the people whom he thus desired to save is indeed a matter of very great surprise. Bendorf was not called to deny this, for the simple reason that there is no such man known living there.

Various other negroes are cited in the report, without name or page, who testify to similar declarations obtained in similar ways, eaves-dropping, pretended conversations in their presence, confidences imparted, and kindly warning given, in consequence of the excited state of public feeling. A negro named Glass, who swore that he saw a number of guns brought out of Woodfolk & Blair's office and distributed during the fray, is positively contradicted by Blair, the proprietor of the office, and Dance, his clerk, who stood guard in the door during the whole fight. This witness was one of the most active and violent of the whole negro gang, as described by the colored man Pointer and others, and the committee did well not to give his name or the page where his testimony was to be found.

Another witness, name and page of testimony not given, but which the minority were able to find from memory, is quoted by the majority as saying that a white man named Seward told him some time before the election that the Democrats were "going to carry it, votes or no votes, with double-barrel shotguns, breach-loading shotguns, and with Smith & Wesson double actions, "and his next reply was to that, saying to me "and, God damn you, we will get you. I will be damned if you aint bound to go." There is no case that better illustrates the shameful unfairness of the committee in their quotations and references to the testimony than this. This witness was named Squire Taliafero. He was a negro politician, ignorant, turbulent, and utterly without character. Being compelled to leave Lynchburg, where he formerly resided, he took refuge in Danville, and immediately became a leader of the negroes there and a coadjutor of such men as Raulston and Sims in the dirty work which was done under negro rule in Danville. He it was who threatened and bulldozed the witness Pointer, saying that he had put his name in a black book because he was a Democrat, and would see that the colored people did not notice him any more than a dog. It is in proof that he went round persuading colored married women to leave their husbands if they should vote with the Democrats. In one of his speeches a short time before the election he advised the negroes to arm themselves before they went to the polls, adding significantly that "men didn't go a-hunting squirrels with empty guns." Being convicted in the United States court of the offense of retailing whisky without license, he was of course taken up by the Coalition common council and made sanitary commissioner of the city. A story which he relates of the conversation with a man named Hatcher and a man named Cobbs, in which the same threats were made that he says were uttered by Seward, he admits in his cross-examination that Cobb denied and showed him wherein he was mistaken. (See page 581.)

A reading of his testimony, especially the cross-examination, will convince any one that he was a most worthless, dangerous, unprincipled, cowardly, lying negro, a disgrace and an injury to the whole race. After advising them to arm themselves and exhorting them to stand up, he admits that he fled at the first shot of Lea's pistol—some time before the general firing began—went to a house across the river in North Danville and secreted himself from that evening until Monday morning. So frightened was he that telegraphic messengers who were searching for him with a message and knocked at the door of the house were magnified into an armed crowd thirsting for his blood, and the citizen police who were patrolling the town, he described as a mob of cavalry and infantry! Still he said that he thought that it was a knowledge of his desperation and courage that kept them from breaking open the house and dragging him out of his hole. (See page 580.)

Now, by forbearing to make any statement as to who this witness was, and omitting to give name or page of his testimony, the committee no doubt hoped that the reader would presume he was a man of irreproachable character and his testimony not to be contradicted.

Strange to say, the absurdity of basing a charge of conspiracy to kill and murder against an honorable and Christian people on such testimony as the preceding is exceeded by that which the committee rely upon to prove that the conspiracy was well understood outside of Danville. For example, it is stated by the Report that a "witness" (name and page of testimony not given) saw a printed handbill at the depot of Millsborough, in Bath County, 150 miles from Danville, between 7 o'clock and noon of Saturday, November 3, in which it was stated that the "black wave had struck Danville, and there had been four colored men and one white man, a leading citizen of Danville, killed." In the testimony itself (page 772) the statement is that the white man who was killed was a young man. When it is remembered that the riot did not take place till between 3 and 4 o'clock on that day, and that there were just four colored men killed, and one young white man (Holland) who at first was thought to be killed, it will be seen that this paper (if it really existed) did not purport to be a rumor of what was expected to be done in Danville, but a description of what had been done. Either the author of that slip, therefore, must have had the extraordinary gift of prophecy or the witness must have had the ordinary gift of lying. As his name was Richards, and as he was an Ohio tramp who claimed to be a kind of local historian, the probabilities are submitted, without comment, to a candid world.

Another witness—much relied on by the committee—was a white man who kept a negro grog-shop in the neighborhood of Richmond, Va. He swore that about the middle of the week before the election, and therefore some two or three days before the riot, he went to the Galego Mills, in Richmond, on business, and that a clerk named Hardy there asked him if he had heard of the fight at Danville, and went on to tell him that a fight had taken place there, occasioned by the rudeness of negroes pushing ladies off the streets. As neither did this purport to be a rumor, but a statement of past transactions, it is a self-evident mistake or a self-evident lie, as the case may be.

Another witness, name and page not given, is quoted as testifying that on Friday, 2d November, he had a conversation with a stranger on the train, whose name he did not hear, who told him that he expected trouble in Danville; that he lived there, and, having gone to Richmond on business, had received a telegram telling him to come home; "that three signals from the Star warehouse bell would raise one hundred men in arms at any time;" and that he, the said stranger, wound up the blood-curdling story by declaring that he would not ask a Coalitionist into his house or eat with one if he knew it! The committee forgot to add the formula, "That stranger was not called to deny this." As the report italicizes the statement with relation to the signal bell and refers to it elsewhere, it is well enough to state that, as explained by some of the witnesses, the same bell was used for calling out the military companies, fire companies, &c., and, of course, to prevent confusion, each company who thus used the bell had its own private signal—a most ordinary and innocent thing.

Another witness testified that General Hill, of Albemarle County, Virginia, had boasted to him on one occasion that they (the Democrats) were going to beat the witness's party, using the words "We have more money than you, and we intend to use it; and we intend to bully where we can't buy." And that is relied upon as conclusive proof of a conspiracy to produce a riot in Danville!

But that which most insults the legal intelligence of the country is the testimony quoted of a railway clerk, residing in Wytheville, Va., to the effect that on Monday or Tuesday before the riot he had overheard the telegraph operator say to another man that he had overheard a message passing over the wires from some house in Danville to some house in some Northern city ordering some pistols! The truth of all this appears to have been vouched for by the fact that the operator was a Democrat, and the witness was not!

What more could be asked to endow hearsay, in the second or third degree, with all the force of positive and uncontradicted testimony!

The chief objects of complaint against Democratic rule in the State of Virginia are stated by the committee's report as follows:

It appears from the evidence that during the control of the affairs of the State by the Democratic or Funder party, a constitutional amendment had been adopted in 1876 imposing the payment of a capitation tax of $1 as a prerequisite to the right to vote, and a law had been enacted establishing the whipping-post as a punishment for minor offenses, and disfranchising every person subjected by law to that punishment for certain of such offenses.

The constitution, after the ascendancy of the Readjuster party in the State, had been amended, abolishing the capitation tax, and the law establishing the whipping-post, had been repealed; and, for the first time in the history of the State since the amendment of 1876 was adopted, suffrage at the election in November was to be free from such restrictions.

In this statement there appears more than one important mistake. It is not true that during the domination of the "Democratic or Funder" party the amendment of 1876 requiring the payment of a capitation tax before voting was adopted. At the time of the adoption of that amendment there had been no division of the people on the debt question and the Funder party had not been heard of. It was adopted by an overwhelming majority of the people, and some of its conspicuous advocates were men who afterwards figured as leaders of the Readjuster party after that party was formed in 1879. The great body of the white people voted first for its ratification and afterwards for its repeal without regard to their differences on the debt question.

Equally mistaken is the statement of the report in regard to the whipping-post. It was not established during the control of the State by the "Democratic or Funder" party. It was an old-time institution existing before the war, and was mainly directed toward white offenders, since in those days the colored people, as slaves, were rarely ever punished criminally for minor offenses. It does not per se disfranchise the criminal who is subjected to it, and never did. The disfranchisement was worked by the conviction of the felony for which whipping was the punishment. Now that it has been abolished by the votes of men of all parties, conviction for the same offences continues to disfranchise the same as when it existed. The cry therefore against the whipping-post is more matter of sentiment than anything else. It is, however, a very significant circumstance that the Coalition party of Virginia should entertain such inveterate hostility to that venerable institution, charging that it is a Democratic contrivance and the enemy and oppressor of their party. The candor with which they admit that a mode of punishment directed in all ages to the suppression of larceny is a direct blow at their rights and liberties, is commendable in the highest degree and illustrates that which philosophers speak of as "the eternal fitness of things." The oppressive and discouraging tendency of that punitive instrument upon the genius of Southern Republicanism is freely conceded, as well as that its principal victims are, and of right should be, the disciples of a free ballot and a fair count who clamor against the corruptions of Bourbon Democracy. It is also conceded that necessity imposes upon them the demand that the sacred right of suffrage should in no wise be hampered with the condition that the suffragist should himself respect the paltry rights of property, but that the glorious freedom of the ballot-box should also imply their freedom of neighboring hen-roosts. Be that as it may, the minority congratulate the majority of the committee on the strength of their sympathy and the ties of party affiliation which has induced them to champion the cause of convicted thieves so openly if not so ably; and also that the genius of Virginia statesmanship has been able, through much tribulation, to relieve their friends from this "barbarous feature of a degenerated code," introduced to the world first by an obscure legislator named Moses, and planted first, along with religious toleration (of all who agreed with them), on the shores of the New World by New England selectmen!

In reference to the charge that by such means the Democratic party of Virginia undertook to disfranchise their adversaries, the appeal for sympathy in behalf of the negro which the committee make loses much of its force by reference to the following important fact in the recent history of Virginia: In the process of reconstructing that State by the military, whilst it was District No. 1, a clause was engrafted upon the "Underwood" constitution disfranchising every man in the State who could not take the iron-clad test-oath. If adopted this would have deprived nine-tenths of the white people of Virginia of the right of suffrage, and rendered them serfs and outcasts in the land of their nativity. The proposition was so monstrous that a committee of citizens waited upon the President and earnestly supplicated him to order that that clause should be voted upon separately. He yielded to their entreaties, the vote was so taken, and every negro in the State, with the exception of about 9,000, voted to ratify that obnoxious feature and keep it in the constitution. The colored race of Virginia thus showed their disposition to disfranchise the whites absolutely, and yet whine over the law which required them to pay a capitation tax of one dollar for the privilege of voting, although the money was devoted to the education of their children. Contrast their disposition toward the whites with the conduct of the whites toward them, as proven by the witnesses examined in this investigation. Out of the one hundred and sixty sworn and examined, white and black, old and young, learned and ignorant, male and female, not a single one could be found to swear that any interference, legal or illegal, had ever been known with the black man's right of suffrage in the State of Virginia from the time when the right was first conferred upon him to this day. Not one.

For not only was the last election in Virginia perfectly free and fair, as shown by the largely increased vote everywhere, except where it was disturbed by the violence of the blacks themselves, but even in the city of Danville, as was admitted by the leading Republican witnesses themselves, white and colored, not the slightest disturbance was made or the smallest hinderance thrown in the way of any man's right to vote.

On the other hand, as a sample of the desire of this Coalition Republican party of Virginia to have peaceable and pure elections, consult the testimony of Hon. Eustace Gibson, page 1125, of what was done by the negroes in Culpeper, Va., on last election day; of C. P. Armstead, page 1126, et seq.; and of George D. Wise. From the testimony of the first two will be seen interference by open violence with the right of suffrage and free speech; and the latter shows conclusively the grossest frauds upon the purity of the ballot-box. It seems that an illegal tax-collector was appointed in Richmond for the special dirty work of issuing fraudulent tax-receipts; and under the system carried out $1 was made to pay some four hundred men's taxes, by the simple process of the first man handing it to the bogus tax-collector in a guarded room, who gave the tax-payer a bogus receipt and the dollar, which he in turn handed back to the door-keeper as he went out, who in his turn would hand it to the next free-ballot-and-fair-countist who came in. Mr. Wise was not contradicted even by a cross-examination.

Contrast this likewise with the condition of affairs in many parts of the United States where the Republican party, his professed friends, bear sway. In Massachusetts, under the law forbidding the right of illiterate persons to vote, or paupers who are unable to pay certain taxes, 144,509 persons are disfranchised who would be allowed to vote if they resided in Virginia. They are disfranchised for both ignorance and poverty, as well as for crime.

In Rhode Island the restriction upon suffrage is still worse. In fact, the government is absolutely in the hands of land-holders and their eldest sons—not more than 40, certainly less than 50, per cent. of adult males being entitled to vote. Not only are they disfranchised for crime, but for ignorance, poverty, and foreign birth if not land-owners. It is not a Republican form of government. Of course a large number of colored men are disfranchised in both States. Yet, in the face of all this, a Senator from Massachusetts signs this report, threatening to reduce the representation of the State of Virginia, whose laws allow all to vote without any condition except age and citizenship, and where black men have exercised this right without the slightest interference, to the extent of the number of negroes deprived of the right. This looks much like the temerity of a man, armed with a clod of dirt, challenging an exchange of missiles with a man who has a gun. Virginia might well indeed challenge Massachusetts to such a contest as this.

In the District of Columbia, containing a population of 177,000, the Republican party has abolished the right of suffrage altogether, and these people are governed as a satrapy of the empire. Under the very shadow of the dome of the Capitol of a great republic, the cornerstone of which is the suffrage of the governed, that great, first principle is denied and spit upon for no other reason than because 33 per cent. of the population of this District is composed of negroes who could wield the balance of power in popular elections. Whilst it is deemed the right thing to do to force negro-supremacy, even by the use of the bayonet and all kinds of illegal Congressional interference, in States where they constitute 40, 50, and 60 per cent. of the population, it is not deemed proper, safe, or pleasant for the great apostles of this doctrine to live under this rule themselves. Therefore, a people, greater in numbers than the States of Delaware, Oregon or Nevada are deprived of the right of suffrage absolutely. No man within the shadow of this Capitol can vote for any ruler, from ward constable upwards.

The committee also accuse the Democracy of Virginia of exciting the race issue in the last canvass, and quote many inflammatory appeals of speakers and newspapers to prove it, ignoring, of course, all the proof which placed the boot upon the other leg. No charge is more commonly made in Southern politics, nor is there one more utterly absurd and contemptible. It is the old cry of "Stop thief!" Not only was it proven by almost every witness who came before the committee and was examined on the point, but it is a fact notorious in the history of the negro States, since reconstruction, that the race issue was begun and has been continued in them all by the rigid banding of the black race everywhere for the support of the Republican party in open and flagrant hostility to the white race, which is Democratic. No evasions, subterfuges, or explanations can avoid this obvious fact. From the very first the utmost care was taken to see that a colored man was rendered odious and denounced as a traitor to his race if he dared vote the Democratic ticket. In many of their societies they were sworn to stand by the Republican party. Their preachers exhorted and denounced from the pulpit, and the general rule was expulsion from church membership for any failure to support the Republican party. The ostracism practiced by them, both as proven before this committee and as historically known to exist all over the South, is fearful, and often results in the barbaric cruelties which characterize a half-civilized race. All this for the purpose of keeping the black race solid against the white, and for all the instances of the kind proven before this committee, the majority have not one word of rebuke. They know too well that but for such means the colored Republican ranks could not be held solid, but would yield to the intelligence, wealth, and superior acquaintance with the management of affairs possessed by the whites in whose midst they live.

In the face of all these undisputed facts, which by their silence they justify and approve, the majority have the hardihood to complain of the white people of the South for appealing in turn to their own race in the desperate attempt to preserve their institutions, their property, their every interest, and civilization itself. There was not an intelligent witness on the stand, however unwilling, but either confessed or avoided expressing his sentiments that the banding of the negro race forced the combination of the white race. The common sense of the proposition is indisputable, and the minority believe and hope that so long as that black organization is maintained as a part of the policy of the Republican party and is headed by men of the character of those who have heretofore led it, the white people of the South will have the wisdom and the manhood to withstand it as a race—as the race to whom the Government of this country properly belongs.

When colored people learn to divide on questions of public policy, to reflect and determine and show themselves capable of being influenced by those considerations which appeal to the motives of those among whom they live, then, and not till then, would the minority expect to see the white men of the South divided as of old.

So far from its being true that the Coalition party had no motive to induce them to excite the race issue in the campaign of 1883, as the report asserts, they had the very strongest inducements for doing so. The negroes were thoroughly Republican, and viewed the new Readjuster party with distrust. They preferred the genuine article, and were disposed to cling with tenacity to their old tried leaders, Wickham, Dezendorf, Dawson, and others. To drive them to the support of a party that everywhere denied being Republican for the sake of deceiving its white adherents was the task the Readjusters had before them in 1883. For this purpose the appeal to the race issue in the black portions of the State by violence and every species of bitterness, as is proven by the testimony of Dezendorf, Wickham, Armistead, and many others. In this they were seconded by the whole power of the Administration, and the strange spectacle was presented of life-long Republicans dismissed from office for voting the Republican ticket and refusing to vote for men who still called themselves Democrats, or who at least denied that they were Republicans.

The whole treatment of the people of the South by the Republican leaders since the reconstruction rape has been one of violence, pharisaical assumption of superior purity, and insolent and unconstitutional interference with their rights and liberties. It is a story, the contemplation of which should bring the blush of shame to the cheek of all just and candid men. Consider it one moment. War was waged upon them in the first instance, on the ground that they were within the Union and could not get out of it, and were therefore bound to obey its laws. When that war closed those who had maintained this position were triumphant, and their doctrine was vindicated by arms. In violation of this position and of common sense, for purely partisan purposes, they proceeded by act of Congress to declare the seceding States out of the Union, and not entitled to the protection of the Constitution and laws which they were yet bound to obey; and they proceeded to arrange terms by which they should be restored to a Union which they had never left! All civil law and civil officers among them were overthrown. They were reduced to military districts and the bayonet was given them for their government instead of the Constitution of their country. Having disfranchised all of their trusted leaders and men who were acquainted with the management of affairs, and enfranchised without the shadow of any authority of American law their recent slaves, utterly unfitted in every way for the trust, they ordered military elections to be held for delegates to conventions to prepare constitutions for the government of those people. Four of these States whose constitutions were thus framed by ignorant negroes led by the vilest wretches of whom history makes mention, under the auspices of the bayonet, were a portion of the original thirteen whose valor achieved the independence of this great country, and whose wise patriotism established its institutions. By thus excluding the decency and intelligence of the Southern people from all participation in the formation of their own constitutions as well as from the first legislatures held thereunder, it was reasonably hoped and expected that the spirit of the Southern people and their love of democratic liberty would be broken, and those fair States would become mere outlying provinces, obedient to the will of the Republican party.

Truly it was a magnificent scheme worthy of the despotic soul of Strafford, or even of the genius of Machiavelli. But it failed, as did Strafford's "Thorough." Its authors overshot the mark, by underestimating as well the villainy and corruption of their carpet-bag tools, as the strength and liberty-loving spirit of the Anglo-Saxon race—descendants of the men of Yorktown, King's Mountain, and Mecklenburg. Nobly did their manhood stand the test, and after suffering a few years of the corruption, plunder, and outrageous misrule of the carpet-bag reconstruction governments, and witnessing scenes not known before in our history on this continent, they rose and swept them out of existence; and the places that too well knew them once now happily know them no more forever.

From that day to this, however, they have had no rest from the persecutions of the disappointed Republican leaders. Their Representatives, most reputable and generally able men, occupy their old places in the halls of Congress, laboring like all others for the public good and the common glory; their State governments, completely republican in form, have been reorganized and thoroughly equipped in all respects for the administration of their domestic affairs on the justest principles. Their people, accommodating themselves with most wonderful facility to the new order of things, have revived their industries, and with new hope and far-reaching desires, have inaugurated on the ruins of war a career of prosperity and peace such as few people in this world have ever exhibited under circumstances so adverse. Recognizing the fact that the 6,000,000 of blacks within their midst were their fellow-citizens and their very valuable co-laborers in the fields of production, they wiped away every vestige of their slave laws which discriminated against them, and set themselves everywhere in good faith to the task of cultivating the kindly relations with them which were deemed so necessary to reciprocal prosperity. It can be safely affirmed that they have done everything to further these objects except to manifest a desire or willingness to submit to them the government of their country. If any Northern State has done more the minority would respectfully ask that it be pointed out. If the people of any Northern State are willing to commit their destinies and those of their children to the keeping of the African race, let that State be pointed out, and we will answer any such possible case in theory by showing what has actually been done in the District of Columbia. It is true that occasional acts of violence have been committed by intemperate men here and there, but it is likewise true that the outrages which have provoked them have been many and terrible. It is likewise true that the policy toward the blacks of the great mass of the Southern people has been conciliatory and peaceful. When one hundred years from now the impartial historian shall pen the story of Southern reconstruction and show how so many millions of the proud people of a glorious race were made to pass through the fires of Moloch, amid so many things humiliating to their pride and wounding to their sensibilities, he will wonder at their dignity, justice, and forbearance no less than at the great length of time during which the evil machinations of politicians have been able to prevent the restoration of complete fraternity between the wise and Christian people of North and South.

The minority of your committee are of opinion that the ballot is much more free and unrestricted in the South than it is in many portions of the North. They are further of the opinion that the general treatment of the negroes in the South is better and more kindly to them as laborers than it is in the North. Even in this town of Danville it was shown by the testimony that not only were negro laborers paid from $5 to $10 per week for work in the tobacco factories, but were even furnished money and means to live upon during the season when there was no work to be done. What manufacturing establishments in the North treat their hands so well? The minority have been informed that many, if not all, the labor associations of the North exclude negroes from membership; and not only so, but that the white men will not work with blacks at the same occupations. (See report of Blair Committee on Education and Labor, Vol. IV.) It is not so in the South, where negro carpenters, masons, tailors, blacksmiths, and all other trades, work side by side with the whites.

Throughout all the North no blacks will be seen engaged in any but menial labor, unless it be that they have establishments of their own. In the South you will find them occupying offices of every character—municipal, county, State, and national; in the legislatures and in the magistracy. In the North you will find none in the legislatures and next to none in any elective offices. What became of the one whom the governor of Massachusetts attempted to appoint to the bench? How many have ever come to the Congress of the United States from Northern constituencies? How many colored postmasters have been appointed in Northern towns and cities? How many colored men are clerks in the Departments in this city or the North? How many have ever been tendered positions in the Cabinet? How many have ever been appointed ministers or consuls to any foreign countries, except negro countries? What substantial evidence has ever been given by the Republican party that it had any use for the negro race, except to obtain its vote and make use of its wrongs—real or fancied—as a means of exciting prejudice against its adversaries, the Democrats of the South? This spirit was strikingly manifested by the witness Wise, a leading Republican of Virginia, who swore that he received negro members of the legislature in his kitchen. Their votes being secured, their humble position was at the back door of a man's house, which it seems they instinctively sought in the absence of an invitation to the front. If they receive such treatment from men who thus owe all their honors directly to them, how much can the negroes expect from those whom they antagonize so zealously?

That these investigations are for mere political purposes are proven by the fact that they are admitted to be outside of the proper authority of Congress. Now, suppose the example should be followed, and a Democratic House of Representatives should order investigation into the thousand and one outrages upon law and right so frequently occurring in the Northern States. What a condition of civilization could be shown! How much of prejudice and bitterness could be excited! Whilst the Senator from Ohio was investigating the riot in Danville, and holding up his hands in horror at the shooting of four negroes in a crowd of some two hundred negroes who had attacked and crowded to the wall some fifteen or twenty whites, bloodshed, murder, and arson were running riot in his own city of Cincinnati, during which more than fifty were killed, twice that number wounded, and $1,000,000 worth of property destroyed, as is reported. This too, it is said, originated in a failure to administer the laws for the protection of life, in the corruption by bribery of the very fountains of justice. Yet, he signs a report charging the whole Democratic party of Virginia with a conspiracy to kill and murder four negroes, and recommends the debasement of that illustrious commonwealth by the deprivation of her representation in Congress, although her laws are just and indiscriminating, and her authorities who are sworn to execute them belong to his own immaculate political party. Well did that Senator describe his own political ethics when he said in his place in the Senate on the 6th April, 1881, "anything that will beat down that party and build up our own is justifiable in morals and in law." Such is the spirit that persecutes Virginia.

Suppose, too, that in pursuance of this meddlesome desire to interfere with other people's business and for the purpose of exposing the state of civilization in communities where such things are done, the committee should also be directed to investigate the notorious charges of tanning the hides of negroes and starving and poisoning paupers, and the state of the infant corpse industry in the State of Massachusetts? Suppose the committee should be directed to inquire into the killing of negroes in Ohio for the sale of their carcasses to the medical colleges and report upon the state of trade in that branch of American industry, and whether it was likely to interfere with the pork-packing business of the city of Cincinnati? Also into the driving of negroes away from their work and the killing of them for going into public bar-rooms to take a drink, as the newspapers report in New York? How much bitterness, indignation, and scandal could there not be excited! All would admit this to be wrong, yet, in law and in morals, it would be no worse than what is constantly done in the South. We must recognize the fact that if the States do not redress wrongs and punish crimes within their midst, they themselves must be the chief sufferers.

Then look at the great riots of 1877. Suppose we investigate them and show the corporate greed, the exactions and tyranny of capital, which caused all that misery, loss of life, and destruction of property, and trace it to the subserviency and fostering care of the Republican party? In Reading, Harrisburg, and Pittsburgh, several hundred were killed and wounded, while many, many millions of property were destroyed by fire or plundered by the mob; whilst on all the roads, the great lines of the North, and in nearly all the great cities from New York to Chicago, killing, burning, robbing, and destruction were the rule for some three weeks. How much of misrule, misgovernment, injustice, tyranny, and corruption would an impartial investigation of these unhappy events expose and bring to light! The reply is, and very properly, those things are liable to happen everywhere; they are purely of State concern, and Congress has no business with them.

Why is it not the same with a common street riot in the town of Danville? In law it is precisely the same, though it is true the slain men were not killed for the very thrifty purpose of selling their bodies or tanning their hides; they were simply killed in the self-defense of a few outnumbered white men, and the occasion is seized and ungenerously used to apologize for the fall of a mongrel party, which has just been repudiated by the people at the polls, and for the purpose of aiding the Republican party in the desperate straits to which it is reduced in the pending Presidential campaign.

Why should not, with equal propriety, this committee, or some other, be directed to inquire into the numerous and disgraceful bank-swindles and Wall street frauds which have recently disgraced the financial honor of the country, and, in many cases, beggared the confiding and the innocent? These things much more nearly concern the general public than does a street riot in Danville, and approach much nearer to the powers which are granted to Congress under the Constitution.

The difficulty of presenting a proper statement of the facts elicited by the testimony will be recognized as very great; as is also the task of correcting what the minority deemed unfair deductions of the report from the garbled statements which it sets forth, and of making all in such manner and within such space as would be acceptable to the ordinary reader.

The minority have done their utmost, in vindication of a people so ungenerously and improperly assailed, to so present a general view of the facts, as the witnesses actually swore to them, as would at least put a just man on his guard if he could not take the trouble to investigate the whole matter for himself.

TESTIMONY

IN REGARD TO

ALLEGED ELECTION OUTRAGES AT DANVILLE, VA.

BEFORE A SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS OF THE SENATE, CONSISTING OF SENATORS SHERMAN (CHAIRMAN), LAPHAM, AND VANCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 14, 1884.

WALTER S. WITHERS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville, Va.

Q. What is your occupation there?—A. Do you mean has been, or now?

Q. Now and has been?—A. I have been a policeman for eighteen months up until the 1st of January.

Q. Were you in Danville at the time of the recent election and on the 3d of November?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state now, in your own way, what you saw of the riot which preceded the election. State it just as you saw it, and the incidents as they occurred.—A. Well, sir; on the 3d of November, 1883, at half past 3 o'clock, a disturbance was created on the street, at first, but I was not at the fist fight. I saw a crowd gathered on Main street right in front of Market street. I went down to where the crowd gathered, and when I got down there, to the fist fight, it seemed some policemen had separated them.

Q. Who was the fight between?—A. Between Mr. Noel and Hense Lawson.

Q. Proceed now with your statement.—A. I did not see the fight between Mr. Noel and Hense Lawson; when I got down where the crowd was they had separated; then when I got down there, there was a large crowd on the street, colored people and white people, and I, being a policeman, tried to get the crowd to leave or disperse, and everybody seemed to be excited from the fight, and I advised them to leave. The colored people was kind of in the middle of the street, white people on the sidewalk, on the pavement; I persuaded them or tried to persuade them to leave there, and they were kind of slow about it, and they were disposed to look on at the fist fight that occurred. The white people was on the sidewalk, and it seemed all I saw had pistols in their hands, all the white people.

Q. Well, how was it with the colored people; were they armed or not?—A. They were not armed; I never saw any colored person that had a pistol in his hand.

Q. What was said and done by you and by them?—A. I advised the colored people to leave there; I saw the white people were armed and they might get hurt. That was my advice to them, that they had better leave there; they seemed to be kind of slow in moving, and the white people on the sidewalk kept saying: "Now, if you all want anything, you can get it, and somebody said:" "Now, if you don't leave here, you'll get hurt;" and I did all I could to make them leave, and they seemed to be kind of slow, and I stepped to the lower end of the white people, and a few minutes after that the white people fired their pistols.

Q. Who fired first?—A. The white people fired first.

Q. Well, what individual fired; do you know?—A. I could not tell; they all fired at the same time, a number of shots were fired at the same time.

Q. Go on and finish your statement; the white people, you say, commenced firing?—A. Yes, sir; they commenced firing, they made the first fire; that is, they fired first; and when they first fired, as the streets, of course, were crowded with white and colored, they did not shoot directly at the colored people the first time, they kind of shot up over them on the first round.

Q. Fired in the air?—A. Yes, sir; because the streets were mixed with white people and colored people.

Mr. VANCE. Never mind your inferences. Just state facts.

The WITNESS. And then they commenced to fire in every direction. The colored people scattered in every direction, and each corner they turned they shot at them.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did the colored people fire?—A. No, sir; they did not fire that I know of. I am glad you asked that question, because I have been misrepresented in that committee of forty just on that point there.

Q. You did not state that the colored people fired?—A. I did not state that the colored people fired; they misrepresented me through the papers.

Q. Now, you are under oath; do you state to us that the colored people did not fire?—A. Yes, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Was there any more firing after that; the first firing, you say, was in the air?—A. Then they commenced firing in every direction; whenever they would see the colored people they would shoot at them.

Q. How long did this firing continue?—A. It did not exceed five minutes; about five minutes I suppose.

Q. The colored people retreated?—A. Yes, sir; retreated in every direction.

Q. How many persons were shot on that occasion? How many were killed, and how many shot?—A. At the place where they commenced firing only one got killed right there; there were several wounded, but they killed one instantly.

Q. What was his name?—A. Jerry Smith.

Q. Who were wounded?—A. A man by the name of Peter Walters was one of the men wounded.

Q. Did that man die?—A. Yes, sir; he lived about nine or ten days.

Q. Who was the next?—A. The next one that got wounded was Hathman King; he got wounded in the neck. A man by the name of Reuben Owen; he got shot in the face; he lived, I think; his home was not in Danville. There were several wounded; I do not recall their names now. Then there were two men up above, where I was, got killed; one by the name of Ed. Henderson; one by the name of Hall. There were three men killed during the five minutes.

Q. Now let us go back to the shooting. You say you saw white men shooting. What did they use, pistols or guns?—A. They had pistols.

Q. Who did you see shoot?—A. I can name some of the men that I knew.

Q. Just name them.—A. Mr. George Lee was one of the men that shot; Mr. Ned Hatcher and Captain Graves.

Q. State any other that you saw yourself firing a pistol.—A. I saw a man by the name of N. P. Jordan shoot toward the colored people; then there are several gentlemen that I am not acquainted with who shot. I didn't know them all. I have just named some of the gentlemen. I was at the lower end of them.

Q. Others that you do not name you do not know?—A. No; I know their faces, but can't tell their names.

Q. You said a moment ago that the report of the committee of forty was in error. What was that?—A. That was in my saying that there was firing on both sides.

Q. You did not say that?—A. No, sir.

Q. What do you say now; did you see any colored person having arms or firing?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Was that a crowd composed of men only, or men and women?—A. Well, women and children were in the rear; men were in the street, and women on the opposite side of the street.

Q. How about the white people; were they crowded in a group?—A. They were formed in a line on the pavement.

Q. What do you mean by a line; formed in regular line?—A. Yes, sir; for instance, this [illustrating] is Main street, and there's the pavement, and here are the colored people right near the center of Main street, or near the neighborhood; here is the gutter along here, and there's the white people on the sidewalk.

Q. They formed on the line of the curb there?—A. Yes, sir; and had pistols in their hands. Every one I saw had pistols.

Q. At what streets did this occur; what streets in Danville; was it on Main street?—A. On Main street.

Q. One of the cross streets. Was it near Market?—A. Yes, sir; near Market street. That leads across from Main.

Q. Is that the central part of the town, well built up?—A. Yes, sir, well built up; right in front of Woolfolk and Blair's insurance office.

Q. The line you speak of was on the line of the curb, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the colored folks were out in the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is Woolfolk and Blair's store?—A. That is about half a block above the opera house.

Q. Well, where was that firing?—A. Right in front of Woolfolk and Blair's office.

Q. What effect had this riot and shooting upon the election?—A. It scared the colored people so they would not vote the next day. They were afraid to go to the polls.

Q. What day of the week was the firing on?—A. The firing was on Saturday. The election was on the 6th.

Q. And the election was on Tuesday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it with you, did you vote or not?—A. I did not vote.

Q. Why did you not vote?—A. Well, it was understood; all the colored people told me not to vote. I was afraid to go to the polls, and would not vote.

Q. You say you were constable or policeman till the first of January?—A. Yes, sir; I was on eighteen months.

Q. When you ceased to be a policeman were you removed or what?—
A. Yes, sir, I was removed.

Q. I will ask you whether any of those who fired upon the colored people that day, were they arrested?—A. No, sir, not one.

Q. Were any of them afterwards put on the police force or made constables or the like?—A. Yes, sir; the same men that were in the riot shooting were on guard that night; put them on guard that night all over town on the corners of the streets.

Q. Who appointed this guard?—A. I suppose the sheriff of the town.

Q. Who of those who participated in the firing were put on guard?—
A. I think Mr. George Lee was one of the men, and a man by the name of Joel Oliver. I suppose he was one of the men. Nearly every man who I saw that had a pistol or gun was put on. You know after the shooting nearly every man had pistols and guns; the streets were thronged then with men with guns.

Q. Joel Oliver is one of the names you give?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is he?—A. He is a lawyer.

Q. What connection had he with a military company, or otherwise?—
A. He was a lieutenant, I think, of a military company. He was either captain or a lieutenant.

Q. Where were the Democratic meetings held at that time?—A. They had called a meeting there at half-past 2 o'clock at the opera house; at half-past 2 o'clock that same day.

Q. Did they ever hold their meetings in the armory?—A. They generally held their meetings—meetings nearly every night for two months—in the armory, but that evening they had a little pamphlet printed to have a meeting at half-past 2 o'clock at the opera house.

Q. What is the name of the company that met at the armory?—A. The Danville Grays.

Q. Who are the officers of that company?—A. Mr. Noel.

Q. Who was captain?—A. Mr. Noel was captain, I think.

Q. Who were the lieutenants and sergeants?—A. Mr. Calls was one of the lieutenants. They have changed officers here lately, and I do not know.

Q. I speak of that time, not of now.—A. They have changed officers, and I do not recollect now who are the officers, all of them. I think Mr. Noel was one of the captains and Mr. Calls.

Q. You say that the colored people did not vote at the election?—
A. No, sir.

Q. Why did they not vote?—A. They were afraid to go to the polls.

Q. You said, as I understood you, that word had gone around that they were not to vote. What do you mean by that?—A. I mean by that they were all afraid to go to the polls, and there was no use in bucking and going unless all go, and it was understood that they would not go; they said they were afraid to go.

Q. Where did you get this understanding from that you were not to vote?—A. I asked several colored people and most of them that I saw, if they were going to vote, and they said no; that is where I got my information, and I did just as they did; asked them, and they said they were afraid to go to the polls.

Q. And that was the reason, then, why you did not go?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Can you read and write?—A. Yes, sir; I can read and write a little.

Q. Did you write your affidavit made before the committee of forty?—
A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Who wrote it?—A. I think lawyer Bowen was secretary for the committee of forty; F. F. Bowen.

Q. Who took down your affidavit as you dictated it?—A. Mr. Bowen.

Q. You signed it, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I signed it.

Q. Did you read it before you signed it?—A. No, sir; I did not read it over; they kept it themselves. I was just sitting there as I am sitting now. I signed it and did not read it at all.

Q. Did any one read it to you?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Bowen read it over to me, I think.

Q. Did you tell them it was not right?—A. Yes, sir; they did not read it to me like they printed it; it seemed they added something to it.

Q. They did not read it as printed?—A. Yes, sir; that is men on both sides shot; I didn't put that there.

Q. Those gentlemen put up a fraud on you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is not Mr. Bowen a respectable man?—A. Yes, sir; he is a nice gentleman; I always took him to be.

Q. What position does he hold, justice of the peace or notary public?—A. Notary public.

Q. Who appointed him notary public?—A. I don't know; I think he was appointed by the town.

Q. Was he appointed by the governor of the State?—A. Yes, sir; I guess so; he is notary of the corporation and county I think.

Q. Now, where did this riot take place; whereabouts in the town; describe it for us?—A. It all occurred about near the same place. The first fighting occurred just a door below I think Mr. Woolfolk & Blair's office. The first of it occurred right there, and all occurred near the same place.

Q. How far is that from the opera house?—A. That is nearly half block from the opera house.

Q. Do you say when you first got there that the fist fight was over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That had occurred between Mr. Noel and Mr. Lawson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many white people were there when you got to the ground?—A. When I first got there as near as I can get at it, I think there were about twenty-five or thirty white persons.

Q. Where were these standing, in the street or on the walk?—A. Standing on the sidewalk.

Q. With their backs to Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where were the colored people?—A. In the middle of the street.

Q. How many of them were there?—A. Between seventy-five and one hundred.

Q. Now, those few white men there were all together, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; all together.

Q. All in a lump or bunch?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, the colored people being more numerous then, they were all around on each side except the rear?—A. Yes, sir; all around except in the rear; they could not get around.

Q. Could not get between them and the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say you saw no pistol in the hand of any colored man?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you hear any firing in the colored men's ranks?—A. I did not.

Q. None at all?—A. The first firing they all scattered.

Q. None of them shot as they went?—A. Not as I know of; I never saw any.

Q. Was there any white man wounded?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Walter Holland.

Q. Was he standing in this group, on the sidewalk, in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. He was when I saw him, but where he got shot I could not tell exactly.

Q. Did you think the white people shot him?—A. I do not know; but from what I was told by the colored men, and from where the colored men were standing, I should say he was shot by a white man.

Q. Colored men told you that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know that is not competent testimony, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you, during the course of that riot, try to disperse the crowd?—A. Yes, sir; I did my very best.

Q. What did the people say to you when you tried to get them to go off?—A. Well, I walked up and down the line of the colored people as I suppose I understood them. I saw that the white people were angry, and, by the way, they waved their pistols, I knew there was something to be done, and I required the colored people to leave there. One of them said, "I don't care to go away; I don't want to be run over," or something like that, and I left them.

Q. Did any other parties beside you try to get them to disperse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were they?—A. Mr. Jeff. Corbin was one of the men who did his best.

Q. Is he a colored man or a white man?—A. White man; a Democrat.

Q. He tried to get them to disperse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they say to him?—A. Well, they did not seem to regard him much; stepped back a little, but didn't go away.

Q. Did they say anything to him?—A. Not as I heard of. I never heard them say anything. Then Robert Adams, he is another colored policeman that was on. He tried to get them to disperse. He was on the lower end with me; he tried to get the whites and the colored people to disperse, and they wouldn't do it.

Q. Did any white man in the crowd say to the colored people, "If you do not disperse here some of you will get hurt?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you give us his name?—Mr. Peter Booth, I think he is one. There were two men made that remark. Mr. Hatcher made that remark, also. He said "If you do not leave here, you will get hurt," or something like that.

Q. You say that the first shot the white folks shot in the air?—A. Yes, sir; they did not shoot directly, they just kind of so [indicating] fired up, and then commenced pulling down at them.

Q. Now, in your affidavit, you say "The white people shot up in the air at first as if to scare the colored people away. Then the firing seemed to be on both sides, right at each other."—A. Yes, sir; that is where they misrepresented me. I did not say that.

Q. Well you heard it read over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you say they did not read it correctly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long has this statement of yours been published?—A. That came out shortly after I went before the committee of forty; I forget now.

Q. That is some months ago?—A. Yes, sir; it came out shortly afterwards. They had it printed as soon as they made it.

Q. Did you come out in the papers and deny it?—A. I did not come out in the papers there, but I went before Colonel Raulston there to contradict it in a direct way. I contradicted that in the papers but they would not print it in the papers there. They put it in the Washington Post and the Richmond Whig and several papers, but would not put it in the papers in Danville. Lawyer Harrison has papers in his office now where I contradicted it.

Q. Were you afraid to vote; was that the reason why you did not vote?—A. No, sir; to tell the truth, I was not afraid to vote, but just would not vote because I did not think it would amount to anything.

Q. Where did those orders come from which you all got not to vote?—A. I do not know. Different colored people asked me, and it was general news among the colored people that they were not going to vote. They said, “We are not going to vote to-day.”

Q. Well, they did vote in some parts of the county, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They voted in every precinct except the town of Danville and New Design?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear of any intimidation or violence offered at the polls anywhere in the county where they offered to vote?—A. What do you mean; offered to pay them not to vote?

Q. No; was there any intimidation or violence offered?—A. No; I did not hear of any.

Q. You did not hear of any at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were there not efforts made everywhere through Danville to make pledges by the authorities that they would not be interrupted?—A. There was after that shooting.

Q. Who made those pledges?—A. There was a lot of bills printed and sent out among the colored people signed by Mayor Johnson and several other gentlemen; I cannot think of their names now.

Q. Well, they could have voted that day if they wanted to without any disturbance, could they not?—A. According to my judgment, I thought they could.

Q. You say there were no arrests made?—A. No, sir; none that I know of.

Q. Who had possession of the offices of the town; who were your town authorities?—A. I think Mr. Wood, sergeant-at-arms, had charge of it.

Q. Who was he?—A. Mr. Wood; we call him Captain Wood.

Q. What were his politics?—A. He is a Readjuster.

Q. What was the name of the judge of the hustings?—A. Blackwell.

Q. What were his politics?—A. Readjuster.

Q. What were the politics of the police officers of the city?—A. Nearly all the police were Readjusters; not all of them, but nearly all.

Q. What was the politics of the town sheriff, as you call him?—A. He was that Captain Wood, you mean?

Q. You spoke of the town sheriff. I did not know there was such an officer; you said the town sheriff appointed some of these rioters on guard that night.—A. I meant by that the sergeant-at-arms.

Q. Well, he was a Readjuster also?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, it was not the fault of the Democrats that there was no arrest made, was it, if all the officers were Readjusters?—A. I don't know.

Q. Now, you were a policeman; why did you not arrest some of them?—A. We were powerless then; we policemen could not show our authority.

Q. Well, when order was restored, when the military companies turned out and the mayor took possession of the town and everything, why were not arrests made then; why did not you do it?—A. I was afraid.

Q. You were afraid?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say some of these men who were in the riot were appointed to keep guard that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were appointed by Major Wood, the sergeant-at-arms?—A. I suppose so; he was the man who had the town in charge.

Q. Some of the patrol were shot that night, were they not?—A. No, sir; I do not think they were.

Q. Was not a man by the name of Hubbard shot that night while patrolling the town?—A. Yes, sir; at the bridge above the town.

Q. Who shot him?—A. I could not tell you that.

Q. Did not they arrest a man for shooting him?—A. Yes, sir; they picked up a colored man who they thought did it, named Coleman, I think; they arrested him. I do not think they did anything to him; they took him; thought he was the man, or something of that kind.

Q. At all events there was a man shot while patrolling the town?—A. Yes, sir; there was a man shot there.

Q. You say the colored people, some of them, told you when you were trying to disperse them that they did not intend to be run over?—A. Yes, sir; some of them said they did not intend to be run over. I didn't know who they were. I just passed on.

Q. You say in your affidavit here that you saw white men trying to persuade colored men to vote, and promising to go with them to the polls and protect them to vote?—A. No, sir; I say the colored men told me that the men that they were working for tried to advise them to go to the polls, and if they were afraid they would go with them.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say to Senator Vance that you made efforts to disperse the crowd; what efforts did you make; what did you do?—A. What I meant by that, I tried to get them to leave; go on about their business.

Q. That is, you talked to them?—A. Yes, sir; I mean I talked to them; tried to persuade them. I can prove that I went all among them to tell them they had better leave. I remarked myself that they might get hurt.

Q. What did you say to the white people?—A. I did not say anything to them at all.

Q. What did you do when the firing commenced?—A. When the firing first commenced—I saw before the white people commenced firing that there was something going to be done—I stepped on the sidewalk at the lower end of the people. By the time I got at the lower end of them the firing commenced, and after it got pretty hot, the balls got pretty wild, I stepped into Woolfolk & Blair's office.

Q. You had no power to resist, as you supposed, the force against you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Senator Vance asked you where the orders not to vote came from?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive any orders from any one?—A. No, sir; I did not receive any orders from any one at all.

Q. What you mean, then, is that you were told by colored people that they would not vote; no use to vote?—A. I just meant by this that all I asked were not going to vote; they said they were not going to vote, and I didn't vote.

Q. Did you know or learn from them of any organization not to vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any agreement not to vote?—A. No, sir. I did not know of anything of that kind.

Q. It was because you thought it was useless and afraid to vote that you didn't vote?—A. Yes, sir; I thought it was useless. I was not afraid.

Q. After the riot was over, after the crowd was dispersed, was there any further disturbance caused by firing of pistols or the like?—A. How do you mean?

Q. After the firing, after the killing there, during that following night was there any further disturbance, firing of pistols in the air or anywhere?—A. Not that I know of, only the killing of Mr. Hubbard.

Q. One of the patrolmen was fired on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Coleman was arrested on suspicion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other arrest that day?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. What became of the charge against Coleman; was he tried?—A. I think they did, but I don't think they did anything with him.

Q. It was not prosecuted, then?—A. No, sir.

Q. And there was no other arrest made that evening?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. You stated awhile ago that some of those whom you mentioned as having fired upon the colored people were members of the military company that was called out that night. Who of them was members of the company?—A. I do not know but Mr. Oliver, who was some kind of an officer—captain or lieutenant; he is one of the military company, I know.

Q. How soon was this military company called out after the affair or riot?—A. They were called out just about dark—just before sundown.

Q. How long afterwards—an hour?—A. Yes, sir; about an hour.

Q. That military company is composed entirely of white people, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Who called out that company?—A. I think the sergeant-at-arms had the town in charge, and I think they told me that Mr. George Cabell did it.

Q. Had he any authority to order out the military company?—A. I do not know whether he did or not; I think he did.

Q. You say he ordered them out; you swear to that, do you?—A. He was one of the men, I understood, that ordered them out.

Q. Do not you mean to say he was one of the men who asked that they should be called out?—A. Yes, sir; something of that kind.

Q. Did not the sergeant-at-arms call them out—the sergeant of the town?—A. Yes, sir; he is the man that called them out.

Q. And they were put under his control, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you swear before the grand jury that this affidavit was not correct?—A. Yes, sir; they didn't ask me any questions—

(The chairman objected to the witness testifying as to what occurred before the grand jury.)

JACK REDD sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live to the north of Danville about three miles.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Where I am now living?

Q. Yes. How long have you lived in that region?—A. About thirteen years.

Q. I wish you would, in your own way, go on and state what you saw of what occurred on the 3d day of November last, at the time of the Danville riot. Tell your own story in your own way.—A. I was chairman of the committee ever since the colored men had been allowed to vote.

Q. That is the Republican committee?—A. Yes, sir. On Saturday I came over to town to see Colonel Sims, and did see him when I got there. I had heard of the speech he made on Friday night, and some very heavy threats made about him. Well, I would not rest contented until I seen him; in fact, I did not know how I should do until I saw him, or at least I found him; came up in his room and had a long conversation with him, and probably it was between 12 and 1 before he got off. Well, I had a curiosity to see him get off, being there was such threats made about him. Well, he got off. I then goes down the street to Mr. Jeems Aker's store—down near the bridge; I was not anyways interested or disturbed about nothing, as I thought. Well, in about two hours—between 2 and 3 o'clock—they said there was some persons firing up street. Well, I knew it was a common thing to be done in Danville and no excitement made, and I went up. I goes up the street, and on the right-hand side going up sees a man standing in an office door with a gun pointing right up, and I commenced looking around. I was not used to such as that; I looked then, taking a certain view of them all. It seemed then that the white people from near about the square had run across the market near the Arlington, and had formed a line.

Q. On Main street?—A. Yes, on Main street, while the colored people then were standing in the middle of the street, I guess, and one man's hand was bleeding, by the name of George Adams. Says I, "George what's the matter," and he says, he called the man's name but I forgot it, shot him or cut him one in the hand, and by this time I commenced to look around to see what it was, and I never could find out. The white people had formed a line on the right-hand side; I was looking at every one, and the colored people was now in the middle of the street. I never persuaded nobody to go away nor nothing, but presently I heard a man speak to the top of his voice. What he said I cannot tell. Then he fired on us and I run, run over a wheelbarrow and everything right down to the market. Well, after the firing was over I came walking back up the street with my hands in my pockets. To tell the truth I was not noways scared, but I met Colonel Cabell right at the market. Says he, "Where are you going?" Says I, "I am walking up the street." At this time Ned Hatcher and another man, I don't remember who it was, came up, and Hatcher asked who is it. He says, "It is this d—d scoundrel." He says, "Damn him, let me blow his d—d brains out." He says, "No, let the d—d scoundrel get out of town as fast as possible. This is what I've been telling you for the last ten years." He struck me right here [indicating face], and I whirled and run again. They commenced firing at me again and I run down to the corner of the market, and by that time they got to firing by me. Just as I got there, and I found out they were firing at me they quit. I lost the hat off my head and I goes back for my hat and some of the colored people says, "Where are you going; they will kill you." I never said a word, but picked up my hat and went down Main street to make my escape.

Then, when I went down Main street I goes on across the river trying to get away from Danville. I meets Mr. Tom Lee in his two-horse buggy with two bags of pistols; he said they were. Now, he didn't open them and show them to me; that is the remark, he said he was tired of the Danville business, and looked right in my face, and if we didn't get away from there what they were going to do; and then I goes on, and Monday morning, right soon, I thought I would walk back over there to see what occurred. Tuesday was election, and I wanted to get my tickets. Near the town I met Captain Walker. He says to me, knowing me very well, "Jack, will you take a fool's advice?" Says I, "Yes." He says, "Don't you go to town; they have got you spotted." Says I, "Captain, I would no nothing to nobody in the world." Said he, "Never mind." Then the Tuesday comes of the election. I was always at the polls at 6 o'clock. I goes in the street there at my house, and to my certain knowledge they come out then about 150 voters, and this time they came up they were all consulting one another about going to election. It was a thing I hadn't never seen; the men that day walked on to election with guns as if they were going to war. I thought and we consulted one another not to go there under that circumstances. While we were standing there Mr. Walker came along and tried to persuade us to go. I reckon there was about two hundred gathered together at that time, but while he said there was no danger, and right there we counted five guns going right on up to the election. Says I, "Captain, you see yonder. We are not after this. We have got no protection. I cannot go up and face a bull that way." Then he rode off from us. I was afraid when I saw those guns. I don't deny it to nobody. I was afraid of the guns.

Q. Now, is there anything more you want to say in your own way?—

A. Nothing more that I know of.

Q. It was Mr. Edward Hatcher who first attacked you, was it?—A. Me and Colonel Cabell was talking.

Q. You and Colonel Cabell were in conversation?—A. Yes, sir; and Mr. Ned Hatcher came over and asked who was that, and he says, "Let me blow his damned brains out." Colonel Cabell said "Don't do it; don't kill the damn scoundrel; let him go home; let him get out as soon as possible;" and they fired on me then, clear down Market.

Q. Name, if you please, citizens that you saw in the crowd, among the white people who fired; who they were, so far as you know.—A. I do not know any particular individual at all, because when I went up there I was not expecting anything of that sort. I was not studying about that.

Q. The firing in the air was begun before you came up, was it?—A. No, sir; there was not a gun fired before I got there, and the first gun I heard fired I made my escape—don't know whether they fired in the air or not.

Q. Who was with Colonel Hatcher when you came up?—A. I don't know; there was two of them run across to Colonel Cabell and me standing on the market. I have thought they came across to attack Colonel Cabell. I had my hands in my pocket as if there had nothing been heard at all.

Q. Did you see Mr. G. G. Covington at that time?—A. Yes; he was there. I didn't see him shoot at me, but I saw him right there.

Q. Did you see Mr. Reagan there?—A. No, sir; I didn't know him.

Q. You say, if I understand you correctly, that on the day of the election, you, as chairman, were expected to be there at 6 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you went?—A. I didn't go.

Q. But you started to go?—A. I had gotten out in the road, in the street from my house, and, when I got there, I met a large squad; the people were excited. I had taken it for granted that we would consult.

Q. Was that crowd composed of colored people or white people?—A. They were colored people that I was going with, but then it was right along the public road, and where all the white people went.

Q. How far is this from Danville?—A. About 3 miles.

Q. The same voting precinct?—A. Yes, sir; the white people came on that morning, and I know it was not usual to carry guns to election. They every one came on with guns and breech-loaders and pistols, and they went on to Danville to my certain knowledge.

Q. They went there Monday and got the guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they went back Tuesday with guns in their hands?—A. They did, in the neighborhood of that precinct. They carried the guns home Monday night, and went to the precinct Tuesday morning with the guns.

Q. You said that when you went out and met this crowd of colored people you talked over the matter as to whether you should go.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive orders not to vote from any one?—A. No, sir; no more than seeing these guns. I thought that was enough.

Q. That is, you made up your mind it was best not to go?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you and the other colored people talked about it?—A. We consulted each other about it.

Q. And then didn't go to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any order coming to you of any Republican or Readjuster or anybody not to vote?—A. No, sir; but we had learned it was reported that if we went there what they would do, and it was better that we should stay away.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Were you at the election grounds at all on the day of the election?—A. No, sir; I was not; did not put my foot there.

Q. Where do you vote, at Danville or New Design?—A. I voted at New Design.

Q. What is generally the strength of the two parties at that precinct; how do they stand between the Democrats and Readjusters or Republicans?—A. I suppose that the two parties, each party I reckon, will work for one another. Is that what you mean?

Q. No; I meant to say how many do the white folks poll, and how many do the colored people poll?—A. I don't know anything about that, but I can tell you one thing, we were better consolidated at my precinct. I know nothing about it more than I could judge, but I know one thing that I had a large majority consolidated ready to go up.

Q. How large was the majority; how many more than the white people?—A. I forget what the list was. If I had thought of it I would have brought you the list and shown it. I forget what the list was this last time.

Q. Well, don't you think the majority could have protected themselves if they had wanted to that day?—A. If they had voted?

Q. Yes.—A. I didn't know nothing about that. We were willing to abstain for the very best of all purposes. I don't know anything about who would conquer, that was not my business. I wanted a fair show.

Q. When you first came into town on Saturday you saw a man pointing a gun in a door.—A. I didn't say that; I said when I came in town I came to see Colonel Sims in the morning and staid with him until between 11 and 12 o'clock, and when I got ready to go away I came out and saw Mr. James Ackers, and I staid there until about between 2 and 3. Can you understand? And some person said they were fighting up the streets. I walked on up the street very cheerfully. When I got up there I saw a very notable man by the name of George Adams. I went to him and said, "George, what is the matter?" He said, somebody had either cut him or shot him one.

Q. Is he a colored man?—A. Yes, sir; and I looked across the street to see if I could see where I was, and the white people had all got on the right it seems.

Q. Now tell us all about the man you saw pointing a gun in the door?—A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you know whose store he was in?—A. No, sir; it was an office.

Q. Well, couldn't you locate it; don't you know whose office it was in?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know the man?—A. I know the office, but I don't know the man.

Q. Describe the office, so we can find whereabouts it was located.—

A. It was just about between Jerry Nicholas's and the bank.

Q. What sort of an office was it?—A. It was just a little bit of an office.

Q. For a store or some other kind of business?—A. No store; it was just a little office.

Q. Which way was he pointing the gun?—A. Across the street.

Q. Toward whom?—A. No one. If he had shot it off then, it would have gone way up in the air. Then just as I was about turning to make my escape they fired on the crowd.

Q. Who fired?—A. I don't know. I never saw nobody with any pistols.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Which side fired?—A. The right-hand side. I never saw anybody with weapons.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Neither white nor black? Did you see any colored man with a pistol in his hand that day?—A. I didn't; and I will tell you I don't know what I would have seen, if I hadn't been in the hurry I was. I was seeking for myself; I got out of the way.

Q. Now, where were these white people standing?—A. They were standing between the street that runs straight across from the market to the Arlington.

Q. Were they on the sidewalk or in the middle of the street?—A. On the sidewalk.

Q. Whose store were they in front of, or were they in front of somebody's house?—A. They were bound to be in front of some store, because the stores run all the way up the street.

Q. They had their backs against some building, and were standing on the sidewalk, and were facing the colored people in the middle of the street?—A. I reckon they must have been or else they could not have shot that way.

Q. You saw no colored man with a pistol that day?—A. No, sir; when I went up there after passing through for about a second and speaking to Mr. Adams, this time the firing came on.

Q. You don't know who fired?—A. No, sir, I don't know.

Q. Where were you when you first heard the fight had begun?—A. I was away down to the lower end of the street.

Q. What street?—A. Main street, down to Mr. Acker's, way down near the bridge.

Q. Did you hear any firing there before you came up?—A. I never heard any firing at all. I just went up; there was a great multitude of people up there, and I saw them; they said they were fighting. I went on up there very cheerfully.

Q. Well, let us have your opinion as to the numbers there on the street; how many white men were standing in front of that store, and how many colored men in front of them?—A. Well, to save my life I couldn't tell you.

Q. To the best of your knowledge?—A. The Main street was crowded with colored right in the middle of the street, and it seemed to me that the sidewalk was the same with white; that is what I saw.

Q. Now, you saw Colonel Cabell there?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. Where were you going when you met him?—A. I was going up; I thought I would go and peep around and see what was doing.

Q. Was that the same day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now did not Colonel Cabell give you friendly advice that you had better not go on the street where those excited people were?—A. Colonel Cabell was on the corner and when I went up we met right on the corner, and he says to me, "Where are you going." I says, "I am going up here." He says, "You had better get out of here as quick as possible, and this time the man run right up and said "Kill him."

Q. Colonel Cabell didn't say kill him, did he?—A. Colonel Cabell says "No, let him get out of here," but at this time Ned Hatcher struck me right here, and they fired on me in the market. There was not a single soul in the market but me.

Q. Who fired at you?—A. I don't know.

Q. Are you certain it was Hatcher?—A. No, sir; I saw some person did. I am certain it was Hatcher hit me.

Q. Did you know him before?—A. I know him. I have had dealings with him enough. I ought to know him.

Q. What other name did you mention in connection with this a while ago; some other man came up, you said, whom you didn't know; some other man came up with Hatcher?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't somebody give you his name this morning on a piece of paper?—A. No, sir; nobody aint give me no name.

Q. Where do you stop in this city?—A. Where do I stop; me?

Q. Yes, you.—A. I don't know what his name is; I haven't his name I know where his door is, though, when I get to it.

Q. Were you talked with since you have been here about this business?—A. I haven't talked to a soul, sir.

Q. Not a single soul?—A. No, sir.

Q. About these guns. You say that one reason you wouldn't go to the election was you saw men went into town and got the guns and came out Monday evening?—A. They did.

Q. You didn't know whether they took them to the election or not, did you?—A. They went up that way with them.

Q. You were not at the election the next day; you don't know whether the guns were on the election grounds or not?—A. I saw them going down the road with the guns.

Q. That day or the day before?—A. That day of election.

Q. Did they pass your house both ways?—A. They passed my house both ways. I live in three forks of the road.

Q. Is the election down or above you?—A. It is just up above me, from Danville.

Q. Well, men going home would not pass your house?—A. There aint nobody ever came from Danville the day of election. I am talking about the people at large around there.

Q. Did the neighbors at large around that township pass your house going to election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did any of them have guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Give me their names?—A. Well, I saw Mose Rullman Abbott.

Q. What sort of a gun?—A. I don't know what sort; it was a gun.

Q. You don't know what kind of a gun it was?—A. No, sir.

Q. He was going to the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any other names?—A. Not that I know of. I was down below the fork, but there was numbers of them went. Captain Walker was standing consulting with us.

Q. Who is Captain Walker?—A. Jim Walker.

Q. Is he a white man or a black man?—A. A white man.

Q. Democrat or Readjuster?—A. I don't know what he is.

Q. Was he trying to get you to vote his ticket?—A. No, sir; he was trying to get us to go to vote our own sentiments.

Q. Did he have a gun?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did he tell you?—A. He told us to go and he would assure us not to be hurt, and at the time he was conversing with us we counted five guns within one hundred yards of us, and says I, "Now look at there; I'm not going to be hurt."

Q. Who had those that you saw?—A. I didn't know who they were then.

Q. You don't know any?—A. No, not at that time.

Q. You saw them going on by, though?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were going to election?—A. I know they were going to election.

Q. Or do you swear simply that they were going towards the election ground?—A. Sir?

Q. Do you swear they were gonig to the election, or towards the election ground?—A. I know they was going to the election; I believe they was; they was going that way, and was pretty close by the voting precinct.

Q. That is what I wanted to understand, whether you swear they were going to election, or going that way?—A. They were going that way. I know they were voters. They were men that I have always been seeing for the last——

Q. Were you afraid to vote that day?—A. Sir?

Q. You heard me, I think?—A. Was I afraid to vote?

Q. Yes.—A. If I hadn't been afraid to vote I should certainly have voted.

Q. What were you afraid of?—A. I was afraid of the same thing that occurred on Saturday.

Q. Notwithstanding that the white people, leading men, were there, and told you there was no danger, to go on and vote?—A. We had no leading men there.

Q. The leading men of the white folks, I speak of; didn't they vote in other parts of the county?—A. I don't know.

Q. Didn't they vote in every part of the county except Danville and New Design?—A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you know they voted at Wimbeshers?—A. I don't know.

Q. Didn't you ever see the returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are chairman of your party, you ought to know something about what they were doing; you heard they did vote at Wimbeshers didn't you, and the Republicans gave a large majority there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is not that nearer to Danville than New Design?—A. I don't know.

Q. Oh, yes, you do?—A. No, sir; I don't; I don't know.

Q. How far is Wimbeshers from Danville?—A. I don't know.

Q. Have you never been to Wimbeshers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have been to Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And don't know how far it is; can you come within 40 miles of it?—A. I don't suppose, though I have not certain knowledge, there is much difference in the distance; not much.

Q. Well, is not Wimbeshers nearer than New Design?—A. I can't say that.

Q. How far is it from New Design to Danville?—A. Three miles—so said.

Q. Where does the mile-post stand at New Design?—A. Well, sir, I don't particularly know where it stands.

Q. You have seen that mile-post a hundred times?—A. I know, but I "mout" not have been paying any attention to it.

Q. But you "mout" have been paying attention?—A. No, but I haven't done it. Now, sir, if I was telling you where any mile-post was I would be telling you something that I don't know anything about.

Q. Well, you said these men were going to election, and you didn't know anything about it?—A. Well?

Q. Now, the mile-post has always been there, right at New Design?—A. I don't know whether it has or not.

Q. What is it marked?—A. I don't know.

Q. Isn't it marked "four miles"?—A. I don't know; I can't tell you.

Q. Don't you know that Wimbeshers is just one mile from the corporation of Danville?—A. No, sir; I hear people talking about miles this way and another, but I never know anything about it.

Q. Haven't you heard people say that Wimbeshers was only one mile?—A. No, sir.

Q. Haven't you heard that New Design was four?—A. No, sir; I was living up there not noticing any mile-post. I would say that was spoke, a mile from here to Danville.

Q. Did you ever hear any one of them speak who had noticed the mile-post?—A. They might have noticed the mile-post and told me, and that is where I get it from.

Q. You swear that you don't know that Wimbeshers is one mile from Danville and New Design four?—A. Yes, sir; because I don't know anything about that. I will testify to what I know.

Q. Where did you first hear that the colored people were not going to vote?—A. Where did I hear it? I never heard it nowhere; only they came there and was consulting about their troubles, and I think there they agreed to not go on and vote.

Q. Didn't you hear others had agreed so in town?—A. No, sir; that was the day of the election. Nobody had no consultation with the Danville people out there. I know nothing of their agreement in town.

Q. You didn't see anybody in town that morning?—A. Tuesday morning?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; never saw a soul.

Q. Tell us what you heard when you came into town, about Mr. Sims's speech?—A. I heard that Mr. Sims had made a speech that night, and the Democrats said if he didn't take it back they were going to kill him.

Q. Did you hear what he said in his speech that offended the Democrats?—A. Not exactly; it was something, though, that was not correct; they deemed it not correct, but I don't know what the words were.

Q. You don't know anything about it?—A. No; only, I just heard they were going to make him take it back.

Q. You said you were uneasy about his getting off that day?—A. I said I went to see him off.

Q. You said you wanted to see whether there would be any threats carried out or not; that is what you said substantially?—A. No, I said I went to see him off.

Q. Why did you want to see him off?—A. Well, I was there with him, and I was there conversing with him; and of course I wanted to see him when he got off.

Q. Well, you saw him off, didn't you?—A. I did.

Q. Was there any violent demonstration?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody offered to interrupt him?—A. No, sir; nobody at all. I saw him when he got in his buggy.

Q. He drove right through the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nobody offered any interruption?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or insult?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you felt relieved?—A. I went on down the street about my business as usual.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The Mr. Sims to whom you refer was the Republican candidate for State senator, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was a white man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did he make his speech?—A. On Friday night, I learned. I was not there at his speech.

Q. You understood Friday night, and this rumor about the Democrats taking offense at his speech you had heard and went to see him about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If I understand you, the place of election in your precinct is somewhere between where you live and Danville?—A. No, sir; I am between my precinct and Danville.

Q. You live between the voting place and Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were the voters going towards Danville or towards the voting precinct?—A. They were going up towards the voting precinct.

Q. That would be from Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say the colored people did not fire?—A. No, sir; I never saw none fire.

Q. Did you see any one have a pistol?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You say you saw pistols in the hands of white men on the opposite side?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any attempt to conceal them; did they have them in their pockets or hands?—A. They had them in their hands when I saw them; when I got up there the row had commenced.

Q. Had the colored people any weapons in their hands?—A. I didn't see them; if they had I didn't see them.

Q. Well, did you go among them?—A. I went among the first crowd. They were all strung up, away up the street, but when I got among them I commenced retreating back pretty quick; after I spoke to one or two I commenced retreating out of the crowd because I didn't like to be in such a crowd. I went up to ask Mr. Adams a question or two, and before I got out of the crowd they commenced firing, and then I took away as hard as I could.

Q. You told Mr. Vance in response to his questions that there was a majority of Republicans in your precinct, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large a majority?—A. I stated to him that I couldn't remember; hadn't the list of them.

Q. Well, there was a majority?—A. I know that Dr. Martin has got the list, and if I had thought I could have gotten it yesterday.

Q. Now, he asked you another question that I want you to answer. If you were in the majority in your district why you could not defend yourself in voting; why, being in the majority, you could not defend yourself in your right to vote?—A. We didn't want any disturbance with the Democrats at all; didn't want to have any disturbance, and that is the reason why we didn't go to the election; we feared there might be some firebrands thrown out some way.

Q. Were the Republicans, white and black, armed?—A. The Republicans?

Q. Yes; are the Republicans of your region armed?—A. I don't know any Republicans going armed that day.

Q. The Republicans of your precinct are mainly colored people; entirely, perhaps?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they armed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Would they have any chance to defend themselves against the white people who are armed?—A. No, sir; they never had any arms.

Q. To what extent are the people of that region armed; the white people?—A. I don't know; not to no great extent. Of course, I saw them when I went to Danville.

Q. The white people generally in that region are armed, are they; provided with arms?—A. I don't know nothing about that. I am telling what they were that day; what arms I saw going to election; and I know it was not a usual thing; and then the riot in Danville made me look around and commence thinking that must be something that was not right.

Q. Though you were in a majority would you be in a condition to defend yourself against the white people of your precinct?—A. No, sir; I was not in no condition to defend myself.

Q. Were your colored people there in a condition to defend yourselves?—A. No, sir; they were not.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. As a general rule, are not all the colored men in that country, who are housekeepers and keep house, armed with a gun?—A. Well, some; right smart of them; and then there is right smart that have no guns.

Q. In proportion to the numbers, are there not as many colored people who have got guns as white people?—A. Yes, I guess so; I don't know. At the same time, if we had been armed, we didn't propose to go to election that way.

Q. Was not there a "right smart" crowd of colored people at the election at New Design that day?—A. I don't know; I wasn't there.

Q. You heard, didn't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you hear that there was a large number there that would not vote?—A. I heard that there was some there in the morning.

Q. You did not hear afterwards that there was a large number there?—A. No, sir; I never heard there was a large number there.

L. L. IVEY sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live in Danville, Va.

Q. How old are you?—A. Thirty-four.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there for about six years.

Q. Were you present on the 3d day of November last, at the time of the riot in Danville?—A. I was.

Q. I wish you would tell in your own way what you saw and heard at that time, from the time of the commencement of the alarm until the matter was over?—A. I was at my place of business, doing a huckster's business on the market, and at about 3 o'clock, as near as I can get at it, somebody ran by my door and hollered out "fire!" and people were all running up towards Main street, and I came out of my place of business and went up to the corner to see where the fire was, and I got to the corner of Market and Main streets and saw a crowd of white men standing on the sidewalk and a crowd of colored people in the street, and I asked a man what the trouble was. He said it was a white man and a colored man fighting, and I saw white men standing on the sidewalk with their pistols up, as if daring anybody to come, and the colored men were standing in the street. The white men had their pistols up, as if daring anybody to come near, and I thought they might get to shooting at somebody else and shoot me, and I went back to my place of business, and just after I got back there I heard the firing, and looked back up towards Main street and saw the colored people. The firing continued, and one man fell just a little above my door, and after the firing was all over Jack Redd came and stopped about in front of my door, and the colored people were all running down below. He said, "What are you all running for?" He said, "These white people aint trying to shoot you; they are just burning powder; and my brother-in-law, who was with me, says, "What is that man lying dead over there for, if they don't mean to shoot you?" And Jack looked over there, and went walking up towards the Main street, and when he got to the corner Mr. Ned Hatcher and somebody else—I didn't know at the time who it was—met him at the corner and asked him where he was going. I saw Mr. Hatcher coming across the street, and ask him where he was going, and I thought he said nowhere, or something of that kind, and told him to go on back, damn black son of a bitch; and Jack turned around as if some one was kicking or striking him, and kicked him from the corner right down to my door.

Q. Who kicked him?—A. Hatcher and Reagan; and when he got down to my door I was inside and they could not see me, and just after they got in front of my door Mr. Reagan shot at Jack.

Q. Who is Mr. Reagan; is he a citizen of Danville?—A. Yes; he shot at Jack but didn't hit Jack and the ball went through the cover of a wagon that was coming down Main street, and kind of aslant across the street, and Jack begged him not to shoot him, and he told Jack to run, and Jack looked as if he was afraid to run and afraid not to run, and just as he was about to shoot a second time, Colonel Cabell came along up and said, "Don't shoot him; let him alone;" and he turned away and walked up the main street, and I closed up my place of business and started home, and when I got to the Arlington House I saw a great crowd at the steps of the basement of the Arlington House, and I saw this man Ed. Davis who was shot with a hole in his forehead and about dying, and lawyer Harrison asked me if I would not get somebody to take the man up and carry him up stairs in the Arlington House. There was two or three colored men standing on the other side of the street, and I went across and spoke to them about taking this man up, and while talking to them Mr. Harrison came over and said somebody had taken him out. He said it was nobody but the low-down white people that was doing the shooting that was in this thing, and for me not to be alarmed; he would protect a colored man as soon as he would a white man. And while he was talking a man said, Colonel Sim's speech the other night had so fired these people that they were mighty near crazy; and while he was talking to me Willie Boulden, old man Boulden's son, came walking up, and this man Reagan and Ned Hatcher. Boulden said, "There's Ivey; he is one of the club leaders;" and Mr. Harrison, he had his pistol in his hand cocked, and Mr. Harrison told him to let me alone; he didn't believe I was that sort of a man.

Q. Who had the pistol in his hand?—A. Boulden Harrison had a pistol, and a shot gun too, and he told him to let me alone; he didn't believe I had anything to do with the row; and Ned Hatcher and Reagan walked up and said, "Yes, we'll end it damn quick." So I went off to a stable until it got quiet, and went around to my place of business and staid there until night.

Q. How many men did you see that were shot on that occasion?—A. I saw two men dead. I saw one that fell right opposite my door, on the other side of the street, and I saw one at the Arlington House. I didn't see the others, but I saw three others that were shot afterwards.

Q. Were they shot in front or rear?—A. Shot through the back of the head. The one up at the Arlington House dead was shot through the back of the head and the ball came out through the forehead, and Smith, who fell at the market, one ball went in his chin and another in his back. I saw his coat, and they said that is where the ball went through in his back.

Q. Who is Boulden?—A. He is the son of Editor Boulden, of the Danville Times.

Q. A Democratic paper, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is Mr. Hatcher; is he a business man there?—A. Yes, sir; he is a tobacco man there; buys tobacco, I think.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am doing a little huckster's business in the market.

Q. Did you have a conversation with Mr. Reagan after the transactions of the 3d?—A. I had a lot of chickens, and I came down on Sunday morning to feed them and give them water, after the fuss was over.

Q. That was on Sunday?—A. Yes. I was going up the street, was going up to the post-office to get my mail, and on my way up there this man Reagan was standing on the steps of the Planters' National Bank, at the old post-office; I didn't know his name; and Mr. Verser and Mr. Barksdale was standing on the street as I was crossing, and I went to them and asked them who this man was standing on the steps, and Mr. Verser said he did not know, and Mr. Barksdale said he believed his name was Reagan. There was another man standing a little below there, and he heard me, and I came back and this man and Reagan both came across the street, and Reagan said to me, "By God, I understand you have been inquiring my name; my name is Reagan. I want you to understand that I am not hiding from anything I have done." I said to him that I hadn't said anything to him, but he told me by God to go on; he knew what I had said. So I went off to my place of business.

Q. You say that the white people were armed and fired. What weapons were they armed with?—A. They had pistols, all I saw.

Q. Did they have any guns?—A. Didn't have any guns then; I didn't see any guns then. When I went up to the corner to see the crowd, I saw there was right smart colored people standing in the middle of the street and these white men were standing on the sidewalk, as if daring anybody to come near, and they said a white man and colored man was fighting in the crowd. I saw the pistols, and fearing that they might shoot for somebody else and might shoot me, I went back to my place of business.

Q. Where is your place of business?—A. Market street, on the right hand side going down from Main.

Q. Here is a portion of a map of what purports to be a portion of Danville. I wish you would look at it and say if it is a correct map, so far as it goes; whether the designations there and the numbers correspond. For instance, No. 1 is the opera house, where the white people were assembled that day. Is that the place where the opera house stands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, look at No. 2; that is Market square?—A. Yes, sir; that is Market square.

Q. That is where you sold your truck, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where people sold and bought provisions?—A. Yes, sir; to eat.

Q. Well, these lines, Nos. 3 and 11, is that the place where the white people collected together upon the occasion referred to?—A. Yes, sir; that is where the crowd was standing, just there.

Q. There's where the crowd of white people formed, is it?—A. Yes; that is where they were when I came up. I came up to the corner of Market and Main. I didn't go any further than the corner, and saw the crowd standing over here, and saw these men with pistols.

Q. That is where you saw them?—A. Yes; I went back then to my place of business down on the market.

Q. I think it was you, or one of the witnesses, spoke of Blair's office where the lines were formed, Nos. 8 and 24?—A. That is just in front of Woolfolk's insurance office. There is where they were standing on the street.

Q. I will ask you, as the shortest way to get at it, what do the figures 48, 49, and 50 represent? Perhaps others might know that better than you; still if you don't know just say so. You spoke of two being killed there that you saw dead. What signs are on the spot where they were killed, if any?—A. It is about No. 2 is where the man fell on the market. That is on the east side of Market street, or 21—about 21.

The CHAIRMAN. I will not press this examination as to the map now; but if there is any necessity to identify the places, the locus in quo, we will call the witnesses from time to time to do it. I will not offer the map now until I can identify the different points.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. When the row began, I understand you, you walked up to where the crowd had assembled?—A. No, sir; I didn't go to the crowd; I went to the corner of Main and Market.

Q. Where you could see?—A. Yes; where I could see.

Q. How many colored people were present?—A. I suppose there were twenty-five or thirty; well, there was more than that; I suppose, fifty; somewhere about fifty, I reckon; seventy-five.

Q. Can't you raise it up a little above that yet?—A. No, sir; I am just telling what I think it was; I just went to the corner and saw the crowd assembled there.

Q. Was not the street crowded?—A. No, sir; it was not crowded; there was a crowd standing in front of the office.

Q. Could you see the white people at all?—A. I could see the white people standing on the sidewalk in front of this office.

Q. Was not the crowd of colored people entirely around them?—A. No, sir; right in front.

Q. In front and reaching up beyond the sidewalk on both sides?—A. White people on both sides.

Q. Yes?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the sidewalk clear?—A. The sidewalk clear on this side or on the other side? Main street runs along like this table here. [Illustrating.] And here comes Market in here. This would represent the corner of Market and Main. Now, just above the corner of Market on Main would represent Woolfolk & Blair's office, and I came up to this corner. I was about down here, and I came up to the corner here and saw the crowd standing over here.

Q. Were not the colored people on the sidewalk too?—A. I didn't see colored people on the sidewalk; they were all in the street.

Q. Did you see them have pistols?—A. I saw white people have pistols.

Q. Did you know who they were?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear them say anything?—A. I didn't hear. They had the pistols up as if daring any one to come near.

Q. They were standing on the sidewalk, these white people with the pistols, and their backs toward the building, and the colored people in front?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say they were holding up the pistols as if daring anybody to come?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The white folks were not moving themselves, just standing their ground?—A. Just standing on the sidewalk.

Q. The crowd of colored people were pressing around them?—A. Not pressing around them.

Q. Well, pressing all around, running up just like you did?—A. Yes, sir; I thought it was a fire, somebody came running, hollering "fire."

Q. How many white people were on the sidewalk in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. I suppose twenty-five or thirty.

Q. And from fifty to seventy-five colored people?—A. I suppose so.

Q. And the number of colored people was increasing every moment, were they not, running up like you did?—A. White and colored both increasing.

Q. Where did the white people come from?—A. Come from all directions. I heard that there was going to be a meeting that day, at 2 o'clock. Bills were posted round, but I never paid attention—I didn't think anything about it; but after the first shot a great crowd of white people came up from somewhere. They said they came out of the opera house.

Q. So they were not there when they began?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear anybody warn the colored people to disperse, and not press up?—A. After the first fuss was over I saw Mr. Jeff. Corbin.

I was standing at my door and he was on the other side of the street. I heard him talking to some colored people at the corner, but I didn't hear what he was saying.

Q. Did you hear Colonel Cabell make a little speech there to the people?—A. No, sir. My place of business is down at the market, and when I saw there was a fuss I went back to my place of business and staid there.

Q. Then you didn't hear anybody try to disperse those colored people?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not hear any pistol shots from the direction of the colored people?—A. The firing was all above me, in the Main street, and I could not see or tell who was firing.

Q. Did you see the wall of Woolfolk's office after the fight was over?—A. I passed along there.

Q. Did you see bullet-marks on that wall?—A. Not just on that wall. I saw bullet-marks on the wall of Nicholas's bar-room place, and all down the street, on the palings where the colored people ran out.

Q. That was opposite to where the white men were standing, wasn't it?—A. No, sir; it was just down below, on the fence palings.

Q. According to those marks, where would the men have stood who fired the pistols that made those bullet-marks?—A. On the opposite side of the street.

Q. From where the white men stood?—A. Yes, sir; where they were then, the ones I saw. The colored people run down Main street and South Market and North Market, and the bullets that I saw were fired from the opposite side of the street. The only fighting I saw was the colored people running in every direction down Main street and North and South Market.

Q. There was one white man shot, was there not?—A. Yes; I didn't see him until after—

Q. Until after he was removed?—A. I did not see any body shot but colored men. I never saw any white. There was one white man shot; I heard them say he was shot.

Q. You saw Davis lying in front of the Arlington Hotel shot?—A. No, sir; he was not in front.

Q. Oh, well it don't make any difference. You say he was shot in the back of the head?—A. The ball came out of the forehead.

Q. Can you tell whether he was shot in the forehead, and that the ball came out of the back; what is the difference?—A. A ball will make a larger hole where it comes out than where it goes in.

Q. Did you examine the hole to see which was largest?—A. I didn't examine, but I saw the flesh where it was puffed out in the forehead.

Q. You didn't examine?—A. No, sir.

Q. So you don't know whether the hole on the back side was the smallest or not?—A. The looks of the skin of his forehead being torn out, I just judged from that that the ball went into the back of his head.

Q. You judged from looking at the front of his head that the hole in the back side was the smallest?—A. I just thought as the skin was run out in the front—you shoot a hole through a plank, it goes in and makes a very small hole, not larger than the ball, but it comes out and tears out pieces.

Q. You didn't see the back side, you say?—A. No, sir; he was lying on the flat of his back, with this wound in his forehead.

Q. What made you think that hole in the back of his head was the smallest?—A. I just judged by the looks of the hole that the ball went in through the back of his head.

Q. You don't know whether he had been taking any part in the fight or not; whether he had been firing or anything?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Who did examine him, what physician?—A. I don't know. Dr. Carter was there at the time when I walked up.

Q. Did you hear any exclamations of the colored people in the crowd before the firing began?—A. No, sir, I didn't.

Q. That they didn't intend to be run over, or anything of that sort?—A. No, sir, I didn't hear anything of that.

Q. Did you vote the next day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why didn't you vote; I mean at the election three days afterwards?—A. I didn't know but what another row might take place and I just decided not to have anything to do with it at all.

Q. Didn't the authorities of the town and the white people, and everybody assure you there should be no interruption, and invite you all to vote?

—A. Circulars went around to that effect and at the same time men walking around with guns and pistols.

Q. That was the guard to keep order, wasn't it?—A. Everybody I saw was a white man. I never saw a colored man with any. Every man even and boy had a pistol in his pocket.

Q. On the day of election?—A. Yes, sir; and every day for a week after that election.

Q. You swear that every white man that you saw had a gun or a pistol?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And even the boys?—A. Yes, sir; the boys had pistols. I didn't think it was safe to go to the polls and vote. I wasn't afraid so far as voting was concerned, but I was afraid another row might start on election. That was had on Saturday, and I didn't care to risk my life, as I had been attacked by this man. If it hadn't been for Lawyer Harrison I believe he would have shot me. I didn't think it safe, and I didn't go to the polls.

Q. How far is it from Danville to Wimbisher's precinct?—A. I guess it is about a mile, or a mile and a half; not more than a mile and a half, I think.

Q. Do you know how far it is from Danville to New Design?—A. It is called three miles, I think.

Q. Have you ever been there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know about the mile-post there?—A. I do not; I have never noticed.

Q. Do you recollect the state of the vote at the election at Wimbisher's precinct; who had the majority?—A. The Readjusters had the majority.

Q. How large?—A. I don't remember now; it is between two hundred and three hundred.

Q. Two hundred or three hundred majority?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any disturbance there that day?—A. Not that I have heard, sir.

Q. The colored people voted at all the other precincts in the county that day, didn't they, except the town of Danville and New Design?—A. As far as I know they did.

Q. They voted all over the State, so far as you know, that day?—A. So far I know.

Q. Did you hear of any disturbance anywhere in the State that day of election?—A. No, sir.

Q. None at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that the colored people polled more votes at that election than they ever had done before in Virginia?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are not much of a politician?—A. No, sir; I have not taken much part in politics; been 'tending to my own business; never taken any active part in politics at all; only voted my sentiment and let other people do the same thing.

Q. Whenever you are not afraid to vote your own sentiment?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there any inquest upon that dead man you spoke of?—A. There was a coroner's inquest; this man Davis, I think; but I was not there.

Q. Who was the man you said threatened to shoot you?—A. Willie Boulden is his name. I didn't know his name at the time.

Q. Is he here among the witnesses?—A. I don't know.

Q. As I understand, you said that No. 21 on this map represents the spot where you saw the dead man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And No. 25 is where you were when the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No. 45 is your place of business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And No. 43 is where you saw the other dead man? There is no question, I suppose, in regard to the location of the opera house and these buildings?—A. No, sir.

Q. Here is where the meeting was held of the Democrats, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

W. R. TAYLOR sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived in Danville?—A. Two years the 20th of last December.

Q. Were you examined before the committee of forty?—A. I was.

Q. I will ask you if you attended the meeting at the opera house on the afternoon of Saturday, the 3d of November, 1883, in Danville?—A. I did.

Q. What meeting was that?—A. It was a meeting in regard to reports that had been made, I believe, by the Democratic party there in Danville.

Q. It was a Democratic meeting in Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where does the opera house stand? Please look at that plat and locate the opera house. Tell us what number there stands on the place.—A. The opera house is here; No. 1.

Q. Were there any speeches made at that meeting?—A. Not while I was in the house.

Q. What was the object of the meeting as explained at the time? I do not call for conversations but for the object of the meeting.—A. It was to get the sense of the people as to this report that had been sent out by the Democratic council of Danville.

Q. What was the nature of that report? What was it about?—A. I believe it was termed negro rule.

Mr. VANCE. Negro rule in Danville, I think it was.

WITNESS. I think that was the way it was. I was only in the house for a few moments. The meeting had just been called when I went out.

Mr. VANCE (handing paper to Chairman). Here is a copy. It is called "Coalition rule in Danville."

WITNESS. This is the circular I had reference to.
It is as follows :

COALITION RULE IN DANVILLE.

To the citizens of the southwest and Valley of Virginia :

We, the undersigned, of the merchants and manufacturers and mechanics of the town of Danville, Va., earnestly request that you will permit us to lay before you a few facts from which you can form some idea of the injustice and humiliation to which our white people have been subjected and are daily undergoing by the domination and misrule of the Radical or negro party, now in absolute power in our town, and under the leadership of William Mahone, seeking to extend and perpetuate its power all over the Commonwealth.

By the census of 1880, Danville contained 7,526 persons, of whom 4,397 were colored, and 3,129 were white. The population of the town has increased greatly since that time, and the proportion between the numbers of whites and blacks has also increased, there being a much larger proportion of blacks now than in the year 1880.

The taxes actually paid by the inhabitants of the town for the year 1882, upon property, exclusive of license taxes for its corporate uses, exclusive of taxes paid to the State, amounted to over $40,000 in round numbers, of which only $1,206.63 were paid by the blacks, making $38,894 more of money paid for the support of the town by the white people than was paid by the negroes. Out of the total sum derived from taxation upon property, $2,000 were appropriated to the education of the negro children of the town—a sum, it will be seen, $794 more than the entire amount of tax paid by the whole negro population. So it appears that the negroes of the town do not contribute one single dollar to the use of the town, towards paying the interest upon its corporate debt, the improvements of its streets, the maintenance of its public works, the pay of its officers, and its incidental expenses of government. But, on the contrary, every dollar, and much more besides, paid by the members of that race in the nature of taxes, is returned to them and applied to the education of their children.

Up to the session of the last legislature the town was not divided into wards, but voted as a single precinct; and in that way the council was generally kept in the hands of the white people. But the negro party, desiring to get complete possession of the town government, that they might share in the offices as well as levy upon the treasury of the whites whatever they thought proper, applied to the legislature and obtained an amendment to the town charter requiring that the town should be divided into three wards, and that four councilmen and one justice of the peace should be elected from each ward. From the localities in which the negroes had herded themselves, it was totally impracticable to so run the ward lines without creating two wards in which the negroes had a large majority, and this they and their white leaders knew. The result was that they elected seven out of twelve of their candidates for the council and their candidates for justice of the peace from each ward.

Then began the deeds which have so humiliated us in our own estimation, and made our town, once so noted for wealth and enterprise, a by-word for shame and reproach from one end of this land to the other. Wherever it was possible for anything to be done by the council or its magistrates that would irritate and wound the pride of the whites it was executed with the keenest relish. Out of nine policemen four negroes were chosen—something before that time unknown to the history of the town—two of them acting not only as policemen, but one as a health officer and the other as weigh-master at the public scales, and clerk of the market. Out of the 24 stalls and stands at the market place, 20 are rented out by the council to the negroes. The scenes about this important and attractive institution (attractive in all cities) will give any person visiting the town a fair idea of the general state of the government under the negro rule. The market, once occupied in all its stalls by polite white gentlemen, with their clean, white aprons, and the most enticing meats and vegetables upon their boards, is now the scene of filth, stench, crowds of loitering and idle negroes, drunkenness, obscene language, and petit thieves. The white men have been driven out and forced to take up private places for vending their meats and vegetables, and the public market, erected by the money of the white people and intended to be occupied by men at least courteous and cleanly, has been converted to the use of squalid negro hucksters, and presents a spectacle of loathsomeness positively repulsive to any person who has the least idea of how a market should be kept.

The whites of the town are powerless to prevent this outrage upon their rights. In fact, it is believed that their well-known objection to such an indignity is the principal cause of its infliction. The council, which has the power of regulating the conduct of the market, is presided over by a carpet-bagger—J. B. Raulston—Mahone's collector of internal revenue for the Danville district, and the patronage of his Federal office enables him to control the council with the same undisputed power that the general does his party. Raulston is exceedingly offensive to the white people, and it is well known he takes no pains to carry out any of their wishes. Two of the negro members of the council hold positions under him at the custom-house, and they are as obedient to his will in the council as they are in the revenue office.

It is seen, therefore, that our town is practically in the hands of and actually controlled by the officers and slaves of the Federal Government, not one of whom has a dollar's worth of visible property within its limits, and this too by the most shameless usurpation; for the constitution and law of the State and the Presidential order by which the Norfolk postmaster was removed, all declare that such officials shall hold no office under the government of this commonwealth. The Federal Government, through its internal-revenue collector and the negro councilmen hired by him to scrub the floor of the custom-house and make incendiary speeches against the white people of the town, make our town laws, levy and collect our taxes, distribute our money, and elect negro policemen to watch our town while its inhabitants are asleep. This revenue collector declared, when he was elected president of the town council, that it was his intention to use the patronage of the council to build up the Radical negro party.

The police court of the town is another scene of perpetual mockery and disgrace. There the most active justice is a young negro named Jones, who first became famous by seducing a girl under promise of marriage, and was only saved from conviction upon indictment by the evidence of his partner in a junk-shop, who swore that he had had criminal intercourse with her before Jones. This court which, before the negro régime came into power, was only open a few hours every morning, is now practically open from morning till night, and nothing but actual observation can convey the least idea of the travesty of its transactions. Malice and partiality, whenever there is a motive, and ignorance, in its absence, are the rules of decision. The officials of the court, justices and policemen, co-operate in the work to make fees, and every act, or word, or deed of the citizen, whether atrocious in its character or too frivolous for the law to take notice of, is brought before a justice, and the party, if not fined, is required to pay the costs; and if there is more than one party the cost is doubled, and both parties made to pay costs. White men are arrested for the most frivolous acts by negro policemen and borne along to the mayor's office followed by swarms of jeering and hooting and mocking negroes, and tried, fined, and lectured and imprisoned by a negro justice, and then followed to the jail by the same insulting rabble.

At the October court of this year two of the party magistrates were removed from office by the judge of the hustings court, one for embezzling the money of the commonwealth, the other for "causes sufficient to the court," and one of them has fled the town to avoid indictment.

The notoriety which this state of things in our town has produced has attracted to the town large numbers of idle and filthy negroes from the border counties of North Carolina, and from Halifax, Mecklenburg, and Charlotte, Va. Although there is a law against vagrants, they are never disturbed. They infest the streets and sidewalks in squads, hover about public houses, and sleep on the doorsteps of store-houses and the benches of the market place. They impede the travel of ladies and gentlemen, very frequently forcing them from the sidewalk into the street. Negro women have been known to force ladies from the pavement, and remind them that they will "learn to step aside the next time." In several instances white children have been struck by grown negroes. We know of several cases where the lie has been given to a white lady to her face by a negro. It is a very common practice for the negroes who are employed about our houses to allude to white ladies and gentlemen as men and women and to negroes as ladies and gentlemen. This is a practice almost without exception with the negro women. They do it to irritate and throw contempt upon the white race. A short time since, when the town was in great excitement over the murder of a respectable gentleman and farmer of Pittsylvania County, in his wagon, while on his way home from Danville, by three negro highwaymen, a negro man in the town stood in the center of a crowd of his friends, with a pistol exhibited on his person, and with threatening gestures and loud oaths declared that he wanted to "start a row with some d—d son of a b——h of a white man that he might kill him."

A few nights ago the negroes were very indignant because they heard of the earnest work that was going on by the whites, to register all of their voting strength, and called a meeting, which was addressed by an incendiary negro, named Pleasants, a postal agent, and one of the town councilmen, hired at the custom-house, and they passed a resolution requesting the governor to have Federal troops sent to our town on election day, to intimidate the white people at the polls.

They have also a scheme to amend the town charter if they elect the legislature this fall, and take into the town a large negro settlement, outside of the town limits, called Jacksonville, by which they will get several hundred more black voters, and then it will be impossible for any white man to hold office in the town. We know this is their plan.

It is well known that hundreds of the North Carolina tobacco raisers who live within a few miles of Danville, and used to sell their tobacco in our market, now go five times as far to a market in their own State, on account of the negro rule in our town. At the negro meeting, referred to above, one of their speakers said they did not want the people of North Carolina to come here anyway.

Now, fellow-citizens of the Valley and southwest, we cry out to you in our affliction to deliver us from this awful state of humiliation and wretchedness. We know that, as a rule, the cries of the wretched make but little interruption of the general progress of things. The sun rises and sets all the same, and the work of the government, and the work of the feast and the torture goes on with exactness and tranquillity. But we appeal to you by that sympathy which constitutes the bond of union between honorable men struggling in the cause of freedom, to help us throttle this viper of negroism that is stinging us to madness and to death, by voting against the Coalition-Radical candidates who are yelling and screaming with delight at the prospect of fastening its fangs into us forever.

We appeal to you to say, do you think it is just that we should contribute every cent to the maintenance of our town, pay our town debt, and appropriate not only all the negro pays in the way of tax, but much more besides, of our own money, to the education of his children whom he raises upon our money to be our bitterest enemies, and then let him have possession of our town government, too? Is it right that the negro should have all this given him, and then be allowed to control our offices and plunder our treasury besides?

It is an injustice at which we know your humanity will revolt.

It is the injustice of the frozen serpent, which after being warmed into life by its benefactor, stings him to death.

Help us, fellow-citizens, by voting for the Conservative-Democratic candidates for the legislature, for unless they are elected we are doomed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When was this circular published? How long before the meeting?—A. I do not remember the exact time. It was a very short while.

Q. Was this paper read at the meeting?—A. It had not been when I left the opera house; it was to be read. The meeting was just called to order when I was called out.

Q. Did you leave there before the firing commenced?—A. Upon the street?

Q. Yes.—A. I did.

Q. You left there before the fight with Noel?—A. I did, sir.

Q. At whose request did you leave the hall?—A. Mr. Noel's.

Q. Where did you go from the meeting?—A. I went up Main street with him a short distance.

Q. Can you designate the place on this map where you and Mr. Noel went?—A. I can tell the house and the number from the corner. I do not know exactly how you have got it marked here. [Examining.] Number 8 is the number. Woolfolk & Blair's is the house.

Q. You went with Mr. Noel there. Now, you may state what occurred there. I do not care about calling out conversation, except what occurred and was said in your presence there at the time this riot occurred. You may go on and state in your own way what occurred in the order of events when you went with Mr. Noel to the place designated by you.—

A. When we got in front of Woolfolk & Blair's he stopped on the street and says, "Here's that nigger that I told you had insulted me," and I turned to him and recognized him then as a nigger that had insulted me on October 1, I think.

Q. What was his name?—A. Hense Lawson. I did not know what his name was until that day. I knew his face directly I saw him, and I spoke to him then and said, "You are the same nigger that insulted me the other evening, and now we want to know what you mean by insulting gentlemen on the street as you have." And he remarked to me it was none of my damn business. With that Noel stepped up in front of him and asked him what he meant by speaking to him as he did, insulting him. He said he had not done so. Noel told him he had, and they stepped up to each other, and both of them collared each other, and went to blows. Noel gave him a pretty good beating in the face with his fist.

Q. At that time were you armed?—A. Yes, sir; I was armed.

Q. Were you armed when you left the opera house?—A. Yes, sir; I was.

Q. What was the arm—a pistol?—A. A pistol; I had it in my coat pocket.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the laws of Virginia are, but in most of the States the carrying of concealed weapons is an indictable offense, and if that is so in Virginia I do not know but what the witness ought to be warned not to answer.

The WITNESS. I did not have my pistol concealed. I bought the pistol not more than half an hour before of Mr. White, down the street, and put it in my pocket, and it was exposed when I went in the opera house and when I came out.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that is the privilege of the witness, to decline to answer if he chooses.

The WITNESS. I know it is a fine for carrying concealed weapons, and I would have refused to answer if I had not had it exposed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Why did you buy it?—A. I bought it at White's.

Q. For what purpose did you buy it?—A. Because I wanted a pistol.

Q. Had you any particular object in view at the time other than the desire to carry a pistol?—A. No; except that I am about, traveling round, and always carry a pistol.

Q. Was it not in consequence of that previous colloquy between you and the colored man?—A. It was not. I had a pistol already, but it was an old pistol; I sold that one and bought this improved pistol.

Q. You bought it at White's, a merchant in Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you may go on and state further what occurred. You say Lawson was pretty badly beaten by Noel. What occurred after that?—A. A policeman, Adams I think the nigger's name was—either Adams or Withers, I have forgotten which one; both were present on the ground after the fight—came up whilst the fight was going on and remarked, "Good God, gentlemen, what's the matter here?"—A. I told him it was nothing but a fight, and they were having fair play; to keep the crowd back. He said he would have to separate them. I told him "all right," and put my hand on Charley Noel's arm and told him that would do, and he took hold of Hense Lawson and separated them.

Q. What occurred after that?—A. As I was pulling Charley Noel back

I heard Mr. Lea, who was present, call my name, and upon turning I saw a large negro had hold of Lea's hand.

Q. Lee was a white man?—A. A white man. George A. Lea. A negro had hold of him trying to wrench his pistol out of his hand.

Q. Did Mr. Lea go there to the ground with you and Noel?—A. He left the opera house just ahead of me.

Q. With Noel?—A. He and Charley Noel went down the steps just ahead of me. I joined them on the street.

Q. Did Mr. Noel tell you why he wanted you there?—A. He did.

Q. What did he say was his purpose?—A. He said that a negro had insulted him on the street, and that he had stopped him twice by hailing him, and he wanted us to go out there with him and see that he had fair play; that he wanted to give him a good flogging while he was at it.

Q. And Lea was standing by. You three were standing together, then, at the time the affair occurred?—A. Yes, sir; one on each side of Noel, and this negro a few steps off.

Q. Now, you may repeat, if you please, what you saw after that. When Noel and Lawson were separated in the way you pointed out, what occurred then? Go on in your own way.—A. This policeman, Adams or Withers, as I said, I have forgotten now which one, took hold of Hense Lawson and I of Noel, and separated them. In the act of doing that I heard Lea call my name, and upon turning I saw a negro had hold of Lea's hand trying to wrench the pistol out of his hand. I turned upon him, and struck him with a cane I had in my hand across the shoulders. In starting to make off he tripped me, and I fell right on the edge of the sidewalk; as I fell Lea's pistol was discharged. Whether it was accidental or not I cannot tell. It was a double action pistol. Lea had hold of it, and Lea was grappling with him with both hands as I struck him. As I got up the negro ran off towards the market corner, and I did not see him any more at all.

Q. What occurred after this?—A. The negroes commenced crowding around asking who was that shot at that negro and where he was. Some one said it was Lea, another one in the crowd pointed me out and said it was me; that it was "the man over there with a little black mustache;" they said he was the one.

Q. It was Lea that fired the pistol. Do you know what was the effect of that pistol shot; where it struck?—A. I do not.

Q. Was the man killed?—A. He was not.

Q. What occurred after that?—A. The crowd of negroes continued to increase and to press in toward the sidewalk where the few white men that were there were collected, and there were several of them that made threats; said that they had been mistreated and they intended to have their rights, and that was as good a place to settle it as anywhere else. In the mean time Withers, Adams, and Mr. Freeman, who was on the police force, were doing all in their power to disperse the crowd. Capt. Joel Oliver, who was there at the time, stepped out on the edge of the sidewalk and told the negroes if they would disperse the white men would. They said that they would not, that the white people must disperse first.

Q. Well, what then?—A. The crowd just continued to press in and seemed to increase—the negroes—and I saw one or two in the crowd exhibit their pistols. At that time Withers and Adams had disappeared. I do not know where they went. I did not see them after that.

Q. What occurred after that?—A. They continued to ask for these men that had created the fuss and for the man that shot at this negro, and this same tall black negro who had spoken to me before said I was the man; pointed me out. I stepped out then a little from the crowd and told him that I had not fired a pistol, but that I had mine there and if he wanted the contents of it he could get it.

Q. Was the negro man armed?—A. This negro that I speak of had a white-handled pistol in his waistcoat pocket, and he took it out in his hand, that way [indicating], and put it back in his pocket.

Q. What was his name?—A. I heard afterwards his name was Davis Llewellyn.

Q. Would you know him if you saw him?—A. I don't know that I would. I never saw his face before, except to know that he was a tall, black negro; that is all I know of him.

Q. What next?—A. Some one in the crowd soon afterwards said, "Fire on them."

Q. Do you know who said that?—A. I do not know; it was below me on the street.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Please state which crowd, whether the white or black?—A. I couldn't tell. It was down below me, and the whites and blacks were jammed close together, just a few steps. I then heard a voice in the crowd of negroes, right out in front of me, say they could shoot just as good as the white people could, and if they shot to kill those that started first; and a few seconds after that the firing commenced a little below me on the street. After the first shot or two was fired I heard some three or four balls pass very near me, and young Holland, who was standing just to my left, fell on the sidewalk.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was Holland a white man?—A. Yes, sir; he was shot right in the curve of his head; also had a ball in his overcoat—back of the head, right in here [indicating], just as he was in the act of stepping on the sidewalk. He was then with his face up towards the Arlington Hotel.

Q. Go on and state what further occurred.—A. The firing was quite brisk. I could not say how many shots were fired on either side, but I saw several pistols fired by negroes! I saw one negro who ran off firing back at the crowd of whites.

Q. What became of the negroes then?—A. They dispersed; at least broke and ran in every direction, and fled. In less than a minute after the general firing commenced, I saw no negroes at all, except some few that were in stores along the street.

Q. They disappeared?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how many men were killed that day?—A. I do not know. I believe there were three that fell on the street not very far from there.

Q. Do you know how many were wounded?—A. I do not.

Q. How many white men were injured that day in all, besides Mr. Holland?—A. Mr. Holland was shot, and a butcher, Seward I think his name was, received a flesh wound in his side.

Q. At the same time?—A. At the same time.

Q. Any other white men?—A. No, sir; none that I know of.

Q. Have you the means of knowing how many negroes or colored people were hurt?—A. I have heard various reports, but I do not know how many were hurt.

Q. Are you a member of the Danville Grays?—A. I am not.

Q. Was either of the three who were at the beginning of this controversy—either Noel, Lea, or yourself—a member?—A. Charley Noel is.

Q. Who is the captain of the Grays?—A. Joel Oliver.

Q. Where was Lawson wounded? How was he wounded?—A. He was beat in the face.

Q. Was he shot by a pistol?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. I will ask you if you fired a pistol on that occasion?—A. I did.

Q. How many times?—A. Five times.

Q. Was that the contents of your pistol?—A. That was the contents of it.

Q. Did you state that fact at the time your testimony was taken before?—A. I do not remember whether I did or not. I do not remember whether that question was put to me or not.

Q. Were you appointed special policeman after that affair?—A. I was.

Q. Was there any one appointed a special policeman except white men?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who were you appointed by?—A. I was sworn in by Mayor Johnson.

Q. Who was your chief?—A. John Lea.

Q. Was Mr. Noel also a member of the policemen appointed?—A. No, sir; he was a member of the Danville Grays and was called out with his company.

Q. Was either Mr. Noel, or yourself, or Mr. Lea, ever indicted or arraigned for your participation in that affair?—A. We were summoned before the grand jury as witnesses, and testified there.

Q. As witness; but there were no indictments or proceedings against you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were there against any of the white men engaged in that controversy; were they ever arraigned or tried for the results of that riot?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. You say you fired five times. When you fired, who did you fire at?—A. I fired at the negroes.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Chairman, I don't think you ought to ask him whether he fired his pistol because he could be indicted for it under the testimony he has given here himself unless there is some protection to him. I made no objection because he did not seem to hesitate at the question.

The CHAIRMAN. I think myself, in an inquiry of this kind, the question is competent, but if the witness claims exemption on the ground that it might tend to criminate him, I think the question ought not to be pressed, and I will state that to the witness or to any of the witnesses here, that, while I am at liberty to ask all these questions, yet under our Constitution, no man is obliged to criminate himself, and I will say that to all the witnesses in hearing, and if he claims exemption on the ground that it will criminate him, he is certainly protected on the general principles of our laws; but the question is a proper one, and it is for him to say whether he will answer or not.

[To the witness]. Where were the Democratic meetings usually held in Danville? Were they held in the Grays' armory?—A. The ward meetings were held there.

Q. How often were they held?—A. Each ward met every week. I think one day in each week.

Q. I will ask you this general question, whether every person appointed on the police force after this riot was not a member of one side—was a white man and a Democrat?—A. I believe they were; I think they were; I don't know.

Q. Was there any organization of a similar character on the other side among the Republicans or colored people?—A. I do not know whether there was or not.

Q. At any rate, the only open organization you know of was that of the special policemen, so called?—A. What do you have reference to?

Q. I mean that day.—A. That was all I know of.

Q. I will ask you whether you saw Mr. W. P. Graves on that occasion?—A. On what occasion?

Q. On the occasion of the firing. Was he in the crowd?—A. I saw him after the riot was over. I did not see him at the time.

Q. I will ask you the same question as to W. S. Walters?—A. No, sir; I do not know the gentleman.

Q. And Joel Oliver, was he present?—A. I saw him.

Q. Was he there present at the riot or firing?—A. I saw him on the street directly after the firing was over. Yes, sir; he was there on the ground at the time the riot took place, just before the general firing.

Q. Was he armed?—A. I don't know whether he was or not. I did not see him exhibit any arms.

Q. Did you see Mr. Reagan there?—A. I saw him after the thing was over. I did not see him at the time, not to recognize him, at the time of the firing.

Q. Was Edward Hatcher there?—A. He was.

Q. And Mr. Blunt?—A. I did not see Mr. Blunt, not to recognize him, until after the shooting was over. I saw him upon the street afterwards.

Q. Was Dr. Temple there?—A. He was.

Q. And Mr. Mittely?—A. Which Mittely?

Q. I do not know the name—any one of that name?—A. I don't know whether he was or not.

Q. Can you say that you saw either of these men that I mentioned shoot?—A. Which men?

Q. Any of the men I have named; do you know whether any of these men fired a pistol in the crowd?—A. George Lea; I mentioned that his pistol fired, but whether accidentally or not I do not know. It was fired as I fell, and George Adams, in trying to get off, tripped me after I struck him.

Q. Lea, as I understand, was then fighting with Adams?—A. I do not know whether you call it fighting or not; he was holding the pistol and Adams was trying to wrench it from his hand.

Q. And it was at that time, this attempt to disarm Lea, that you struck him with your cane?—A. I did it whilst he had hold of Lea's pistol.

Q. Did Lea fire the pistol after you struck Adams?—A. The pistol was fired after I struck him.

Q. You cannot say whether it was deliberately done?—A. I cannot say, because it was done at the time I was in the act of falling.

Q. Let me ask you—and I would like a frank answer—had you any sense of fear of danger when this riot occurred?—A. I did have.

Q. Upon what ground?—A. Upon the ground that there was so many negroes there, and it seemed to me their intentions were hostile. I had no doubt at that time that if we had given way—the few whites that were there shown any fright at all—that we would have been overcome and murdered there.

Q. How many pistols did you see in the hands of the negroes there?—A. Some two or three in the course of the whole thing.

Q. How many white men were there among you?—A. There were three white men there when the fight first commenced, and when the general firing commenced I do not think there were over twelve or fifteen.

Q. All of these were armed, were they not?—A. I could not say, as I was looking more at the negroes.

Q. As I see you are a young man, when fear is not very great, I ask you whether you were in fear of that crowd of negro people there?—

A. I was not afraid of them so far as—— I don't know what you term fear there.

Q. Were you in fear of being murdered by the negro crowd?—A. Yes; I had fear of being killed if I showed any back there at all. If I had given way at all I have no doubt whatever that I would have been killed and the white men that were right there with me.

Q. You really think you were in danger there?—A. I do.

Q. Is that the general feeling of fear among the white men of Danville in the presence of negro crowds?—A. I don't know that it is except when there are so few as they were. There was not more than half a dozen white men there.

Q. Did the negroes want anything more than that the men who had commenced the affray—you three men, Noel, Lea, and yourself—should be arrested or taken care of first. Was not that what they demanded, that you should be arrested for this?—A. They did not say arrested; never used that term at all.

Q. What term did they use?—A. They did not use any term at all, except just wanted to know where the men were that started it, and "Who was the man who shot at that negro?" and after the discussion, which continued some time there, and after they staid, there was a cry of "Fire on them!" I do not know whether it came from the whites or blacks. Then there was a reply from the negroes that they could shoot as well as the white men could, and that started it.

Q. How long after the firing before the negroes ran; did they run immediately upon the firing?—A. There were a few shots fired and the negroes did not break at all.

Q. Were they not fired in the air?—A. I could not say whether they were or not. I have heard reports that they were.

Q. Then how soon did the negroes run after the firing?—A. In the second volley when the general firing commenced. There were some dozen, I suppose, shots fired at first. A very few seconds afterwards, I suppose, there must have been a hundred shots fired. Then the negroes just broke and run; gave way in every direction.

Q. You say you fired five shots at the negroes; were the negroes running when you shot?—A. No, sir; not running when I first shot.

Q. Could you fire five shots before they commenced running?—A. I could fire five shots before they got twenty steps; before the crowd had broken at all.

Q. Then they would be retreating twenty steps at any rate before you fired five shots?—A. I do not know whether they could or not; mine was a double-action pistol, and I fired as rapidly as I could.

Q. Did you see any other man than yourself fire?—A. No, sir; I did not see any one fire at all, except negroes. As I said before, I saw some negroes fire in the crowd as they were running off. There were several shots. Some three or four balls. I heard them pass me at the time Walter Holland fell on the street.

Q. Do you know whether you hit any one?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you fire at any particular person or at the crowd?—A. I fired at the crowd of niggers in front of me, which I would most undoubtedly do again under the same circumstances, because I deemed it self-defense then and nothing else.

Q. I ask you if the white people had obtained arms recently, before this affair?—A. I could not say whether they had or not.

Q. Do you know of any weapons kept at places at that time in Danville other than in your armory?—A. Of course there were in hardware stores, I suppose. I know of no arms kept; I do not know whether private families had arms or pistols or not.

Q. Where are you employed?—A. I am in the tobacco business.

Q. Did you see any arms at the real-estate office of Woolfolk & Blair?—A. When; at the time of this riot?

Q. Yes; or after.—A. After? No, sir, I did not; I saw pistols there on the street in the hands of men after the thing was over; several men were out in the street with pistols in their hands.

Q. Do you know where they got them?—A. I do not. I know some got pistols from Schoolfield's after this firing was over, but whether these were the men that I saw or not I do not know.

Q. Do you know of one or two packages of arms that have been spoken of as being brought into Danville immediately after this affair?—A. I do not.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Do you know of any deposit of arms except that in the armory, belonging to the military company, and those that are usually kept in hardware stores for sale?—A. No, sir, I do not. I never have heard of it.

Q. I will ask you this question: was there any arrangement or understanding or combination or conspiracy on the part of the white people to bring on that row and have that fight?—A. None whatever, that I ever have known.

Q. If I understand you, the way the row began was that a negro had insulted Mr. Noel?—A. He had, sir.

Q. And Noel came up in the meeting that you were attending and told you about it and asked you to go out and see fair play?—A. Well, if you wish me to state what took place before the fighting, whilst I was in the opera house, I will.

Q. Yes.—A. Colonel Cabell appointed me to keep the gallery door. Mr. George Lea went up in the gallery with me, and we were sitting there and—I have forgotten the gentleman's name—came in and told us of the difficulty first that Noel had with this negro whilst he was going up to dinner. This negro had stepped on his heels when he was crossing the street.

The CHAIRMAN. I should say that the narrative of what occurred had better come from the witness Noel.

Mr. VANCE. Well, just state that in consequence of Noel telling you something that occurred you went out with him, at his request, did you?—A. Yes.

Q. And was there any intention to do anything out there except to have a fist-fight with the negro?—A. Nothing in the world that I know of. I did not suppose if they had he would have thought it necessary for us to go with him.

Q. Instead of being an intention to provoke a row was there not a great anxiety on the part of the citizens generally to keep down a row?—A. There was; for Noel had come into the hotel and bid Lea and myself good-bye. We told him we had heard of it, and he told us about it, and said he was not going to have anything to say or do about it then, but he was going into the country to spend Saturday night and Sunday, and said he did not want any fuss until after election, and after that he intended to thrash this fellow Hense Lawson for having insulted him. He left, and I suppose three minutes afterward he came back into the opera house up stairs and spoke to Mr. Lea, who was sitting there by me, and said, "This nigger has insulted me. Hailed me on the street again." He said, "It is more than I can stand, and I want you and Taylor to go with me and see that I have fair play." We told him that we would go. I called Charley's friend, who was there, to take charge of the door. I went out with him and went up the street and met Hense Lawson, and then occurred what I have stated.

Q. How many were present when the fight began between Noel and Lawson?—A. I did not see any other white men on the street except Noel, Lea, and myself.

Q. How many colored men were in company with Lawson when Noel got up to him?—A. I do not know exactly. I suppose some fifteen, something like that number, in groups of five and five, standing about and in groups near.

Q. Immediately on the fight beginning the crowd began to augment, did it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, by the time the fist-fight was over and the firing with pistols began, will you please state how many persons were present of both colors?—A. I suppose that from the number it looked to me in the street there must have been between two and three hundred negroes; it looked to me that in the street, and I did not see only right around me, where mostly white men seemed to be. I should not judge more than fifteen or twenty at the outside.

Q. Where were they?—A. They were standing on the sidewalk, right in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office. The streets were chock full of niggers. The whole of Main street seemed to be full of niggers.

Q. Were there any colored men on the sidewalk at either flank of the white people?—A. There were some one or two standing around among the white men. Hense Lawson was one of the number. Before the firing commenced he had been carried into a barber shop to wash his face and came out on the street again before the firing commenced, and there was a small nigger who was talking to me—Robert Calloway was his name—and a young nigger with him came up to me, and told me, he said, "I have done all I could to get these niggers to go away, and I can't do it." He says, "It was nothing but a fair fight, and the white man got the best of it." He says, "It is a fair fight, and I have got no fault in the world to say to it."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who said that?—A. Robert Calloway. He asked me what it was better to do, and I said if there was anything serious to take place there I did not want any well-disposed man to get hurt; nobody would get hurt unless it came to a pinch. My advice to him was to leave and advise all his friends to leave, and he turned to this young nigger that was with him and they turned and went up the street. I did not see any more of them until next day.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Now, when you were with that little company of white men standing on the pavement, what was the demeanor of this crowd in front of you? Did they appear to come up simply out of curiosity or were they angry and excited?—A. Several of them showed signs of anger and threats.

Q. Can you remember any remarks they made?—A. Yes, sir, I remember their asking where was the man that shot at that nigger, and where were the men that started that fuss, and pointing out to different parties and saying that they were going to have their rights; that they had been mistreated, and that was as good a place to assert their rights as anywhere else.

Q. Did you see any persons trying to disperse them and get them to go off?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were they?—A. These three policemen—Withers, Adams, and Freeman.

Q. Did you see Mr. Booth trying to pacify them also?—A. I did.

Q. Do you recollect what reply, if any, they made to these gentlemen who were trying to get them to go away?—A. There was a negro replied to Freeman, when he told them to disperse, to go away from there. He replied that he would not; that they had been mistreated, and intended to have their rights there. Freeman replied to them that if that was what they wanted they would get what they claimed, their rights, and pretty soon. This was the man that I stated I had seen take his pistol out of his pocket; a white-handled pistol. He had his pistol in his waistcoat pocket.

Q. How far were you from young Holland when he was shot?—A. I could have put my hand on his shoulder very easily.

Q. Is it possible from the way he was standing for anybody but a negro in the crowd to shoot him?—A. Not unless a white man standing down the street. He was bound to be shot with a ball coming up the street.

Q. Were there colored men down in that direction?—A. There were colored men down the street and above and in front of us; they were in a sort of semi-circle. The white men at that time, I suppose, were coming out of the opera house; they were on the sidewalk; this shot must have come from about this angle [illustrating]. Here's Main street, here. Here were the white people, and Holland was just in the act of stepping up from the gutter on the sidewalk. I was standing in the gutter, and just as he stepped up he was shot in the head.

Q. What was the character of the wall behind you, of Woolfolk & Blairs' office?—A. Wooden.

Q. Did you see any sign of pistol-bullets against that wall after the fight was over?—A. I did not see any right in Woolfolk's door; but I have seen prints of balls just above and below.

Q. In the same building?—A. There was one or two in his building just above the ledge of his door, I think.

Q. Could these balls have come from white men where they were standing?—A. No, sir, not from those men, unless they turned and fired back towards the house. There was one shot up there on the cornice or roof of Woolfolk's office that might have been from a white man firing right up in the air, and might have been fired from the crowd, from his pistol being knocked up. I do not know where it was fired.

Q. Where were the majority of the active white men that day?—A. They were in the opera house.

Q. At this meeting do you have an idea of how many were in the opera house attending this meeting, judging by the size of the room?—

A. I have not. There were a good many in there; I don't know how many. I was up in the gallery, and could not see much of the audience down-stairs.

Q. Did they come down and take part in the row?—A. There were some few men got down there from the opera house about the time the firing commenced, but very few. The firing was all over before the crowd from the opera house got out.

Q. Before the bulk of the meeting came down the firing was all over?—

A. Yes, sir; and when the body of the men from the opera house came out there was no niggers about at all, except some few that ran into stores.

Q. Had this negro insulted you in the same manner?—A. He had insulted me, not exactly in the same manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness had better state what Lawson did to him; I have no objection to that.

Mr. VANCE. Well, as showing the animus of the crowd, I suppose that would be material.

The CHAIRMAN. He states in his examination that that was some days before.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What took place then?—A. I was going up home that night after coming home from hunting. Just as I was crossing over Cornwell's corner, I believe it is known as, corner Union and Main streets, just opposite the Arlington Hotel, walking up the street with a young friend of mine, and there was a crowd of niggers, most of them seemed to be young niggers, right at the lamp-post; seemed to be scuffling and singing and carousing on the street; we passed single file, my friend first, and as he passed there I saw one of the niggers make a gesture at his back, strike at him as he passed; the fellow did not see him but he struck at him, and I looked over my shoulder to see if he made the same gesture at me, and he did, and I turned right around and looked at him in the face, and he shrunk and walked into the crowd.

There was nothing said by either party until I got across to the Arlington corner, and then this nigger, as I found out afterwards to be Hense Lawson, in the crowd said, "What in the hell did he mean by looking back?" I told him that was my business, and if he wanted to find out he could very easily, which was by coming out to see. With that he started across the stepping-stones towards me, put his hand in his hip-pocket and pulled out a pistol or pair of brass knuckles—something that glittered—put it in his overcoat pocket, and walked across towards me, with his hand in his overcoat pocket, and I told him at the time, "Now," I says, "You come across here," I had my gun on my shoulder, "If you come across that third stepping-stone I am going to kill you." At that time Jim Covington stepped out in front of me and says, "Bob, control your temper; don't get mad," and spoke to the nigger, and said, "You have gone far enough, you leave here." The nigger said, "It was not me, it was some one else in the crowd; it was not me." I said, "It looks very strange you should have drawn a pistol, or whatever it was, from your hip-pocket and looked towards me; if that was not you I have nothing to say about it;" but I says, "Just leave now and don't have nothing more to say about it at all." I told Covington that I was a great mind to have him arrested right there and see what weapon he had, and what he meant by exhibiting it, but he said no, that things were at such a pitch then he did not want any row if he could possibly help it before election; that if such a thing had to be done he wanted it after election, and I went on home and never said a word about it until this thing occurred about Charley Noel, and I mentioned it to this nigger on the street.

Q. What was the cause of there being an unusual excitement? You have never had any riots with black people in Danville?—A. No, sir; never heard of any such thing.

Q. What was the cause?—A. Well, according to my idea and judgment of it, it was that incendiary speech of Sims.

Q. Did you hear that?—A. I did; a portion of it.

Q. Why do you speak of it as incendiary? What did he say?—A. He said everything abusive of the leading men of Danville there, and called all those who had signed this report that was sent out—the one I was questioned about awhile ago, “Coalition rule”—he branded every one as malicious liars, scoundrels, and perjurers, and said that every one had known when he signed it, that he was signing a pack of lies, and had signed it willfully, and that it was some of Colonel Cabell’s work, and he was too smart to sign it, but that his nymphs had signed it; and went on in that strain.

Q. Did he say anything to the colored people about what their action should be?—A. I do not remember exactly. He brought up several things that were spoken of there in the report, but I have forgotten now.

Q. Did he give them any advice what to do or anything of that sort that you recollect?—A. He advised them to go to the polls on election day and to vote; to cast their votes and to assert their rights, and said that if any one threatened them or offered to bribe them, that if they would report them to him he would send them all to the penitentiary; just wanted them to let him know and he would send them all to the penitentiary.

Q. What effect did the speech appear to have on the crowd?—A. It seemed to have quite an exciting influence; they cheered and hurrahed considerably.

Q. More than at an ordinary political gathering?—A. I think so.

Q. Did you hear any expression of violence or disrespect towards the white people in the crowd while he was speaking?—A. He took each one of these men who signed this circular individually and collectively and put the question to the negro audience there, asked the question if they were not liars, and if they did not know it. The general reply was, “Yes,” and then a great hurrah, and he asked that question in reference to every man on that list, and then took it collectively.

Q. Then you think that speech was the cause of the unusual and dangerous excitement of the community?—A. I do; I think that was what excited the niggers.

Q. What is the character and standing of the men who signed that paper?

(The chairman objected to the question.)

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What standing had most of them occupied—what position?—A. They were the leading men in every branch of business.

Q. They were the leading men of the place?—A. Yes, sir. The leading tobaccoists, manufacturers, leaf dealers, and proprietors of those cotton factories there, the leading dry-goods men, hardware men, and men of almost every business there in town. The leading men who were, if anything, looked up to and respected by all the citizens of Danville.

Q. You say the captain of the Grays is Captain Oliver?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he was in the crowd there when the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose he was. Not more than a second before the firing took place.

Q. What was he doing and saying to the crowd?—A. He was talking, and a good many other men were there, this policeman who was ordering these niggers to disperse and leave; he told them if the niggers would disperse the white men would. The niggers replied, some in the crowd, I don't know how many, nor who they were, said that they would not disperse, that the white men had to disperse first.

Q. You were asked if you were not appointed one of the special police or patrolmen to preserve order after that?—A. I was.

Q. Who were you appointed by?—A. I was sworn in Sunday morning as a special police. Saturday evening and Saturday night I was under charge of Mr. John Lea, to whom Johnson turned the management of the whole town over.

Q. Who is Johnson?—A. He is mayor of the city.

Q. What are his politics?—A. He has been a Readjuster and Republican, I believe.

Q. And is yet?—A. He is; I think he voted the Republican ticket at the last election. If he did not vote that he did not vote at all.

Q. Well, the whole force, regular police, special police, and military and all called out were under control of the mayor, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; they were under the control of the mayor until Saturday night. Saturday night Johnson came down street and asked Lea what he should do when he met him. Lea told him just to call out the Danville Grays; and he asked him if he must call out the Douglass Guards, and he told him no, he would not advise him to, and he called out the Danville Grays, and they were ordered out, and Johnson just got Lea——

(The chairman objected to witness testifying as to the orders given.)

Mr. VANCE. I do not ask specially for any orders; my object simply was to show that the military when called out were under the control of the mayor.

Q. What are the politics of the judge of the hustings court?—A. Readjuster.

Q. What are the politics of the clerk of that court?—A. Tom Hanlan. I don't know.

Q. Do you know who draws the juries?—A. I don't know that I do. I think Tom Hanlan has that to perform.

Q. The clerk and the judge, I have been informed, select the jury?—A. Tom Hanlan is commonwealth attorney, and Mr. Reardon is clerk of the court.

Q. Well, what sort of a time did you have on the day of election? Was there any disturbance at all?—A. None whatever. Very quiet.

Q. Did you hear of any disturbance anywhere in the State of Virginia on the day of election?—A. I did not.

Q. Nowhere?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the vote of that county as compared with other votes? Was it greater or smaller?—A. Of which, Pittsylvania?

Q. Pittsylvania County?—A. I do not know how that is.

Q. How far is it from the corporate limits of Danville to the fourteenth precinct, called Wimbersher's?—A. I don't suppose it is more than a mile from the corporate limits.

Q. How far is it from the corporate limits of Danville to the voting precinct of New Design?—A. That is some three or four miles. I know that the niggers voted very freely at Wimbersher's. That is what I heard.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say that the negroes applauded Sims loudly?—A. They did.

Q. And that it excited the negroes. Did it excite the white men also?—A. I suppose it did to some extent. Though there were some white men there that night that I heard say——

Q. Not what they said, because I did not ask that; but just simply were they excited by the speech?—A. I suppose they were excited to some extent. Almost anybody is liable to be. I do not think they were to so great an extent as the niggers.

Q. Because Mr. Sims, who was a candidate for the senate, said that this statement contained lies, and that these men had signed a statement that these things were true, the white people were very much excited about it. Is that the way you wish to be understood?—A. That is it.

Q. He went over this paper and stated this was all lies?—A. He did.

Q. And therefore these men had signed a paper that was false?—A. Had signed a pack of lies, and knew them to be lies, and signed it willfully.

Q. And that excited the white people?—A. They were excited, but they governed their passion.

Q. This is a Democratic pamphlet, is it not—a political tract?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was contested by Mr. Sims, who was a candidate for senator, and he denounced it as a pack of lies?—A. He did.

Q. Suppose it should turn out that some of these statements in here are actually lies—false—would you then blame Mr. Sims for denouncing them as lies?—A. If he knew any number of them to be false; if he knew it to be a fact and they were, he would have a right to stamp them, but he would not have a right to stamp every man as a malicious liar, a scoundrel, and a perjurer.

Q. But he would have a right to say that these men had signed the allegation that these were truths when they were in fact lies. Do you say that Mr. Sims declared these men to be liars?—A. He did.

Q. Because they signed their names to this paper, which contained lies?—A. That is what he said.

Q. And that excited the white people. Now, let us go back to this transaction. You, and Mr. Lea, and Noel, three young men, I suppose—are they young men like yourself?—A. Mr. Lea, I do not know exactly what his age is; he is a married man with two or three children.

Q. That you were at a Democratic meeting, armed each of you with a pistol?—A. I do not know that the others were armed.

Q. Well, Mr. Lea was armed, because he fired his pistol.—A. I do not know where he got his pistol from.

Q. You didn't know whether Mr. Noel was armed or not?—A. I didn't.

Q. At any rate, upon the suggestion that Mr. Noel had been insulted, you went down when the public feeling of the town was at a red heat on politics, armed as you were, you three to attack one man who had insulted you?—A. We did not go to attack one man; we went to see that this man was not overpowered by the mob.

Q. You went down as witnesses and stood by and saw Noel attack Lawson, give him a good round beating, and then you saw Lea shoot down one man?—A. I did not see him shoot him down at all.

Q. You saw him shoot?—A. I did not see him shoot.

Q. Well, you heard the pistol?—A. Yes, sir; I heard the pistol.

Q. And you, armed with a club, struck him?—A. A small walking-cane.

Q. And then, because that excited the negroes, and made them demand your arrest or something to be done to you—— A. They did not demand my arrest.

Q. Well, they insisted that something be done with the men that started this thing that led to the firing upon this crowd of negroes and their dispersion.—A. I don't know whether that was what first started it or whether the niggers or whites fired first. I don't know; the firing took place below me.

Q. You think this speech of Sims, made the night before, excited your people; that it stirred up your blood so much that it led you to do this; and that Sims's speech was simply a reply to a political pamphlet?—A. I do not think it stirred up our blood to cause us to take action. I think it stirred up the niggers to be more insulting to the whites on the street than they had been and would be otherwise, and that created the fist fight.

Q. Now, let us go back of that. You say this man Lawson insulted you. That was before this meeting was held—the day before?—A. Two days before.

Q. And that that was a simple motion he made towards you. Were you armed then with a gun?—A. I had a gun just coming in from hunting—a bird gun.

Q. And because he made a motion you took offense at that, and turned upon them, and the result of that controversy you have given us in full. Did he do anything to excite your ire except what you have stated that you recall; was there any other circumstance; had you any previous controversy or quarrel with him?—A. I never knew who he was before.

Q. And on account of this gesture you had the colloquy that followed. Had you told that to Mr. Noel; did Mr. Noel know of this affair?—A. No, sir, I never had mentioned it to Mr. Noel.

Q. But Noel coming to you with his grievance against the same man induced you to go with him?—A. Charley Noel did not tell me what the nigger's name was, and I did not know what the nigger's name was until after this fuss with Noel. Then I found his name was Hense Lawson, and I knew him to be the nigger that I had met on the corner the day before.

Q. You made use of this expression that you would kill him on the spot unless he would do so and so. What induced you to say that?—A. The same as would induce you or any other man; if I was to put my hand in my hip pocket and take something out and place it in my overcoat pocket, and place my hand in my overcoat pocket, and walk toward you, and you had a gun in your hands, I would not think you were at all wrong in asking an explanation or not to come nearer.

Q. Well, did he not at once say he had no design?—A. He did not until after I had made this threat, as you may term it, and until Mr. Covington stepped out before us and spoke to this nigger.

Q. The excitement between the races had existed before this speech of Mr. Sims. I will ask you whether there was not prior to this speech of Sims' (and this in the best evidence of it), whether there was not great excitement between the whites and blacks, between the Republicans and Democrats?—A. There never had been any demonstration of it before that I know of. The niggers were insolent, more so than they had been, but there never had been any outbreak of it except they were very rude on the streets; did not hesitate to walk up against you on the sidewalk, or buck against you on the sidewalk; gave no quarters at all.

Q. Did they treat you with more insolence in that respect than was commonly extended to them? I ask you if you would regard the same treatment by white men to colored people as impudence and insolence that you would regard from colored people to white people? Perhaps that is a fair question.—A. I always, if I am walking down street, give them a quarter, and if I meet two men walking together I give them half the sidewalk; but I have repeatedly had niggers walk right square up against me, within the last twelve months, and not offer to give me a portion of the sidewalk at all, and I have seen ladies have to walk around nigger men on the street.

Q. Was that because of political excitement or because of bad breeding; what do you call it?—A. You may term it either you please; I thought it was from the government we had in town at that time. The officials in office there, and their conduct.

Q. Don't you know that the mayor had issued a proclamation in respect to such matters, and done all he could to prevent it?—A. What matters?

Q. Acts of insolence on the part of rude people, white or black?—A. I had not seen it. If he had I had never seen it.

Q. I will ask you whether you did not hear Mr. Edward Hatcher say, "Now is the time to shoot, fire!" before the firing commenced there?—

A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. I will ask you if you have never said to any one that that was so, that you had heard that remark; did you never tell any one that you heard Hatcher say so?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, at one time, after the first firing commenced, you have narrated a conversation with some colored man in which you advised him to go away, that you did not want any one hurt?—A. Did not want any well disposed colored men hurt.

Q. Did you expect at that time what occurred afterwards, the firing upon this crowd?—A. I knew that if the niggers insisted in revolting against the efforts of the policemen to disperse them and exhibiting their pistols it was reasonable to suppose that that would be the only termination of it; it would be a street fight.

Q. And you anticipated at that time that there would be a general firing upon the crowd. You say that there were 15 men with Lawson; 15 men of his associates coming in concert with him, or only walking along the street?—A. They seemed to be walking down the street leisurely in groups, some in front and some behind him, and when Charley Noel stopped and spoke they gathered around.

Q. Is not that always the case when people pass along—passing in detached groups?—A. Not at that hour of the day.

Q. This was 3 o'clock in the afternoon?—A. Yes, sir; that is time most of the hands are in the factories.

Q. But you say the crowd augmented?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And would not a crowd always augment when a fight was going on?—A. Not so rapidly nor in such numbers.

Q. Well, don't you think that in a town of 10,000 inhabitants more than a hundred people would gather in two or three minutes?—A. Yes; and there were more than a hundred.

Q. Well, that was simply to look at the fight, was it not? A dog fight would gather the same crowd, would it not?—A. I don't know whether it would or not.

Q. Were there any women and children in the crowd?—A. There were some on the streets. I did not see them; none right there by me. I suppose there were; I do not remember recognizing any. I heard that there were.

Q. The shooting of Holland, about which you have testified, you say might have occurred by firing from the line below, from some one on the edge of the pavement?—A. It had to come from some one in the street; could not have been fired from the sidewalk.

Q. Could not have been fired across that line?—A. It could have been across on the opposite side of the street from where the whites were, but it could not have been from the side of the street where I was amongst the whites there.

Q. Well, if Holland was shot by the opposing crowd he is the only one you know of that was shot?—A. He is the only one I know of that was struck right there in our crowd. Seward was shot; he was down at the market corner on a market wagon when he was shot; who he was shot by I do not know.

Q. I wish you would state whether, that being Saturday evening, when the tobacco shops I suppose, are closed earlier, a larger crowd of colored people were not on the streets than usual?—A. They generally are, later in the evening; not at that hour. The factories never close that season of the year before 4 o'clock.

Q. Is not that market evening in Danville?—A. I suppose every evening is.

Q. Is not Saturday more so than others?—A. I don't know that it is.

Dr. B. B. TEMPLE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville, Va.

Q. How long have you been there?—A. I have been there nine years, last August.

Q. Were you present on the 3d day of November, at what is called the Danville riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state in your own way what you saw there, and what you heard there; how you came to be there, and what occurred in your presence. I will ask you first if you were present at the meeting at the opera house?—A. Yes, sir. You asked me to tell in my own way. Will you permit me to go back?

Q. Well, not at present.—A. Well, I was at the opera house meeting.

Q. What led you to leave the meeting, or was the meeting broken up by the riot?—A. The meeting was held to indorse a pamphlet, which you have here, which was unanimously indorsed. Shortly after the meeting was called to order, there was a stir made in the opera house. Somebody said there was a fight out on the street. Everybody there was in a very great state of excitement; both parties, niggers and white people.

Q. Were there any negroes in the meeting?—A. I do not know. There was some six or seven hundred men there. The whole opera house was full. Nearly every available man in town was there. The crowd was quieted by the exertions of the chairman; and some other parties in the house said it was an effort on the part of some of the outside party to break up the meeting, and our men did keep quiet, and remained there until these resolutions were passed. I was somewhere near the door, and got out as soon as I could, and saw this crowd of men, some 10 or 15 (I do not know exactly how many, but certainly not over 20), fronting a large crowd of niggers, probably two or three hundred. I went on up there, and when I got there, they were using the most violent language, threatening these white men that the time had come to settle affairs there in Danville, and that they could shoot as well as white men could shoot, and using every kind—

Q. Was this before the fist fight?—A. This was after the fist fight. The fist fight did not attract anybody from the opera house. It would have done so, but it was stated by the chairman and a number of gentlemen in the body of the house that it was an effort to break up the meeting. Some few minutes probably after I got there some parties seemed to be trying to allay the excitement, probably one or two policemen—I do not know who they were—and probably one or two of the citizens there; but they would not give way, and these white men would not give way. Finally somebody fired a shot, and the shooting commenced. The negroes run, and run mighty fast, and got out of the way in very short time. They fired some few shots, I suppose some twenty-five or thirty shots, and they fired some as they ran off.

Q. When you say “they,” what do you mean?—A. The niggers. From the threats, I supposed—I knew if they remained on the ground they would very soon get whipped, because the men from the opera house would soon be there; but I had no idea but what they could get away with what was there.

Q. You need not state what you thought. You say the negroes disappeared. I will ask you if you were armed at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the body of the white people who went out into the crowd armed? How many of them were?—A. From the opera house?

Q. Yes.—A. I don’t know anything about that.

Q. Did you fire with the rest?—A. Yes, sir; I was obliged to do it.

Q. How many times?—A. Four times.

Q. Why do you say you were obliged to do it?—A. Because I was fearful that the few men there would be overpowered by this large infuriated mob of niggers.

Q. Still you did not know anything about the previous fight?—A. Nothing in the world. I only found a crowd of my own citizens contending against an infuriated mob and I took the part of my own people.

Q. And you made no inquiries?—A. Made no inquiries whatever.

Q. Did you see any one else shooting?—A. No, sir; no more than it was in line of battle; these few men in there.

Q. You were formed in regular line, with supports on the right and left, were you?—A. No, sir; it was a straight line.

Q. Do you know how many pistol shots were fired by the whites?—A. No; I could not tell. It was all over very rapidly. Probably seventy-five shots may be.

Q. When did you arm yourself?—A. Well, I had the pistol some months before this thing occurred. If you wish to hear the object of my being armed I will give it.

Q. I simply asked the question.—A. It was a notorious fact that all the niggers were armed there, and we considered it absolutely necessary for our preservation.

Q. You say that you know that they were armed?—A. Yes, I know it. I have seen them with their arms exposed. I have seen the policemen arrest them and take their arms away from them, and have seen them with them in a great many ways.

Q. Where did you get your arms?—A. I bought my pistol from Mr. Schoolfield, a hardware merchant.

Q. Were there arms obtainable in Danville besides those at the hardware store, that you know of?—A. None that I know of. I never heard of any, or never know of any. There were plenty of arms there in the hardware stores. You could get them whenever you wanted them. There were three hardware stores I think.

Q. And you knew nothing at all about the controversy that led to this shooting; but you went and shot a few white men.—A. No, sir; I knew nothing of that.

Q. How did you fire; into the crowd of colored people, or did you fire in the air?—A. Fired right into them, sir.

Q. Did you hit any one?—A. I don't know.

Q. You did not fire at any particular person?—A. No, sir; my object was simply to disperse them. It was very disagreeable to me to have to do it.

Q. Did you fire at them after they commenced fleeing?—A. No, sir; I not only did not fire, but tried to stop it.

Q. How long before they went away?—A. The first volley was fired, I think, and they returned the shot; and about the second volley they broke and ran—ran very rapidly.

Q. Did you yourself participate in the excitement that prevailed in Danville before this election?—A. What do you mean by the excitement?

Q. Did you take any part in the discussions?—A. Yes, sir; simply as a citizen. I had nothing to do with politics. I, like every good citizen there, wanted to get rid of the terrible, miserable government we had.

Q. Did you say, also, publicly that, "If we cannot carry it with votes, there is another way to carry it"?—A. I do not recollect anything of the kind. I have said very often that I would either go away from Danville—if things was not changed I would either go away—if no resistance was made, that I would leave the State.

Q. Your complaint was that the negroes were armed with the ballot. Was that your complaint? What was your complaint?—A. My complaint was the misrule in our town; the singular spectacle was presented there of our city—the people who owned the city, the people whose interests are there, had no control of it. It was under the hands of United States officials and negroes.

Q. And you thought the men who owned the property ought to rule?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that people who had nothing but their labor ought not to participate in the rule?—A. No, sir; that was not the case. These people had it all their own way.

Q. Yes; but suppose the people who work, as the negroes do, and as most of the white people do—suppose they work; would you therefore deprive them of the right to vote?—A. Never, sir; and no attempt has ever been made in Danville to do it, to my knowledge.

Q. You thought that the men who owned the property ought to rule?—A. Ought to have some say in it.

Q. Well, the men who owned the property were never deprived of the right to vote, were they?—A. Yes, sir; but the other party was so manipulated that they had no show. I know we had a murderer for our mayor—a common, cold-blooded murderer.

Q. Then, because the majority of the people elected bad men for office, you thought you were justified in subverting them?—A. Not until advised. We promised there to obey the directions of our party leaders implicitly. Every man, woman, and child in Virginia in that election was doing all they could, and we were warned by every man in authority there to avoid every collision possible that we could. The night that this man made this incendiary speech there—the most horrible that I ever listened to—I was sent there then by Mr. Hurt, who said he understood that fifteen or twenty white men were listening to that, and they had gone there to make a row, and he had made every effort he could to get these men away.

Q. And because Mr. Sims charged that the political pamphlet was a series of lies—— A. I say that Mr. Hurt was fearful that Sims was trying to create a row. He knew he was beat; he was afraid that he came up there for that purpose.

Q. Who said that?—A. Mr. Hurt, our senator.

Q. That is the opponent of Mr. Sims thought that Mr. Sims had very bad purposes in making that speech?—A. Yes; and he was trying not to have any difficulty whatever.

Q. And you thought that speech was so horrible it disposed to violence?—A. I thought it was the most villainous speech I ever heard a man make. I heard about fifteen or twenty minutes of it while I was trying to get these men, and did succeed in getting them away.

Q. What was the substance of the speech?—A. I will tell you; I heard him say (I did not hear a great deal of it, but what I did hear of it I heard him first say) that these men, calling them by name, who signed the pamphlet were liars, thieves, cowards, and perjurers. I heard that he had said that the white people in Danville were going to prevent them from voting; which he had never heard, except probably from the niggers.

Q. Well, that you do not know; that you cannot tell; we do not want hearsay.—A. No; he stated to these niggers, some large number of them (some six hundred or seven hundred probably) that they need have no fear of any white man in Danville ever injuring them, unless they came up in the dark and stabbed or shot him in the back. That was the thing verbatim.

Q. And you thought that justified you in shooting those men in the daylight in the face?—A. No; not at all.

Q. Well, let me ask you, Doctor (your name indicates a degree of intelligence), is there a purpose on the part of the Democratic people there to deny the colored people their right to vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or to express openly and boldly and freely their opinions?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the speech of Mr. Sims any other than the speech of a candidate, probably an irritable speech? I never heard a speech on one side but what it always irritated me somewhat; and so with the other. Was there anything in Mr. Sims' speech outside of the usual latitude of political discussion, especially in arraigning what he called an unjust arraignment by the Democratic party?—A. I never heard of any such speech before.

Q. Well, did you ever hear any speech on that side before?—A. I have; several of them. I never heard any such thing before. I supposed the man was drunk.

Q. Do you want to swear that the man was drunk?—A. Oh, no; oh, no!

Q. Don't you know that Mr. Sims was an educated man?—A. Yes, sir; and his education has been put to a very bad use.

Q. In other words, you have a very bad opinion of Mr. Sims, and all the men he addressed?—A. And every decent man in Pittsylvania County is of the same opinion.

Q. The decent men are all of one party?—A. It is a well-known fact that all of our people are white men, with very few exceptions.

Q. And therefore all the other side must be very wrong and indecent?—A. It is pretty well known to the country, I suppose, that the colored men are not as well civilized and stand as high as white men. They are the Republican party.

Q. And therefore you wish to deprive them—A. [Interposing]. Not at all. The record does not show that. We beat them this last time by organization I suppose.

Q. Do you suppose that the people of Danville voted at the recent election, after the riot occurred?—A. The niggers? No, sir; I never said so. Some few of them voted; some 25 or 30. I do not recollect the exact number.

Q. Why did not they vote?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Now, suppose the position had been reversed, and 150 unarmed white men—to take that to be the case, although you seem to think it differently—are overcome and fired upon, and dispersed by a minority of colored people well armed. Would you not think it a very great hardship, and would you rather not stay away from the polls than to risk your life?—A. I should have taken their side. If I had found two or three white men imposing on negroes, I would have taken their side.

Q. You say you did not know anything about the origin of the quarrel?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you did not know that the three young men armed had attacked one negro man, and that led to the quarrel? And you rushed into the crowd, and fired four times, without knowing the cause of the quarrel?—A. I don't think you state it properly. I say that they rushed upon us; we did not rush upon them. I should have been very glad to have avoided it.

Q. How did they rush upon you?—A. It is hard for me to tell, in an infuriated mob, how they did. It was only by the most vehement threats, and I cannot tell you everything they said.

Q. Were not all the white men in line, armed?—A. About ten or fifteen; yes, sir.

Q. And did you see arms in the hands of the negro men?—A. I saw several niggers fire. I did not know a nigger in the crowd; I don't think they were the best class of our niggers. I know a great many of them, and practice in their families; but there were none of our best class of niggers there.

Q. But you heard that there had been a fist-fight, and did not know what led to it?—A. I had not heard anything about it at all.

Q. And yet you went down and fired upon the crowd?—A. I certainly did.

Q. And you think that was right?—A. I don't see what else I could have done. I had no alternative.

Q. Was there anything to prevent the few white men there from stepping out of the way?—A. Except, probably, they would have got shot in the back. I think that would have been their fate.

Q. You think they would have been shot in the back?—A. I think so, yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything to indicate that that would probably be the result? Are the negroes so brave?—A. Not generally so. They are the most tractable people generally that I ever knew. I was born and raised amongst them, and they are the most tractable people I ever knew; but they can be excited.

Q. And yet, when they are excited, you would not think it right for a white man to step out of the way in order to avoid this firing upon an unarmed crowd of men, women, and children?—A. If they could do it without any danger to themselves I think probably it would be the best plan.

Q. Do you now say that they were in danger?—A. Yes, sir; I have said that before. Yes; I think they were in imminent danger.

Q. With six hundred white men in the opera house, within a few steps?—A. They were not down there.

Q. But could they not have known in a minute?—A. Could they have been there; but the firing was done before they came.

Q. What brought you there?—A. I came out before the meeting adjourned. The request was made that the people should not only indorse this paper, but should come up on the stage and sign it. I did not wait to sign it, but came immediately out of the door when the resolution was passed.

Q. Do you know of any arms being brought to Danville by any one?—A. None in the world, except the hardware stores keep arms for sale all the time.

Q. Are you a native of Virginia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you would have left Virginia if you could not have succeeded in resisting—if no resistance could be made to the powers that be. What were the evils that you were complaining of; what were the grievances?—A. Well, I do not think you would have asked me that question if you had lived in Danville as I have, but I can repeat a great many to you.

Q. I understand that crimes or violence had prevailed to a large extent?—A. Yes, niggers had waylaid men there. Our farmers coming in were waylaid in the suburbs, and some beat nearly to death and robbed. One time there they would not come in without a convoy. Our streets have been paraded ever since these people have been in power by drunken, noisy niggers, using abusive language. You could not stay out on your porch without the ladies' ears being offended with very offensive language. I have seen nigger men purposely congregate on the streets in crowds at the corners, and force ladies to walk out in the street, and they on the sidewalks. I have seen that time and time again. We have a great many streets there that are paved with a double line of rocks, just wide enough for one man to walk on. I have seen them when they put themselves purposely on both of them to drive a man out in the street. I have seen a good citizen shot down in cold blood by the mayor of the town, and I have seen him turned loose without being bailed by Coalition magistrates. I can state a great many reasons why I did not wish to live there.

Q. Don't you know that that man was indicted, tried, and acquitted by a Democratic jury?—A. I know that I do not know anything about a Democratic jury. I know nothing about the jury.

Q. Don't you know that these crimes or violences were committed more frequently against the negro than the white man?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you not seen a statement of some sixty or seventy murders and atrocities of the gravest character committed mostly upon negroes in Danville?—A. No, sir; I have not seen anything of the kind.

Q. I will ask you if you ever heard of a case of a white man killing a negro, and putting his dead body in his house and burning the house to get the insurance on his own life?—A. Yes, sir; I heard of that.

Q. Did it occur in Danville?—A. It was said to be.

Q. Were they not mainly committed against negroes?—A. That was one. That man was acquitted by a jury not from our town. He was not tried by a jury from our town; could not get a jury to agree on it.

Q. He was tried, and is in the penitentiary?—A. Yes, sir; but they had to get a jury away from our town. It was the sentiment of our people to hang him immediately.

Q. That is what you would have done?—A. Yes, sir; beyond a doubt. I don't mean to take lynch law on him. I say I would have hung him on a jury.

Q. What you say, then, is no doubt true that crimes or violence of the grossest character have been common in the county in which you live?—

A. Yes, sir; and I make no excuse for either side.

Q. But that they are committed more against black men than white men?—A. No; I never said that.

Q. Well, what do you think about that?—A. I say that heretofore, up to this present time, that the crimes have been committed, so far as my knowledge goes, by niggers against white men.

Q. Is it common to let them go by without indictment or prosecution?—A. I know nothing about that. I pay very little attention to courts of law. I only know that I am called very often to attend men who are butchered up.

Q. I ask you whether men were indicted for the murders of the 3d of November?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Would it not be utterly idle to attempt to punish the men for that offense?—A. I think so; because it is utterly impossible to find out that any one man did the killing.

Q. Do you suppose, if the thing was brought home to a particular person it would be possible to punish any man in Danville for the murders committed on the 3d of November?—A. If you prove murders, I think you could, sir.

Q. Don't you call the killing under those circumstances murder?—A. No, sir.

Q. That firing upon those retreating fugitives was not murder?—A. They were not retreating when I fired upon them.

Q. You say no effort has been made to punish these particular murderers?—A. No, sir; I don't say so. There was a great many witnesses summoned before the grand jury, amongst them one of their own people—a colored man—and they failed to find any indictments. They could get no evidence, as I understood it, to convict any man.

Q. You say that the negroes are tractable when let alone? What do you mean by "let alone"?—A. Well, what I mean by it is that they seem to be cursed by politics, and men come down there and get to talking politics with them, and get them excited, and they get tired of work, and go and attend political meetings, and all such things as that.

Q. Then your remedy would be to keep them out of politics?—A. Oh, no; you see what I mean by tractable.

Q. Well, unless they are talked to?—A. Unless they are excited against the white people, or their employers, who take care of them in the winter time, these men who have been their friends—these people come down there and excite them.

Q. Well, don't you consider them very tractable when they submit to these wrongs, when subjected to the deprivation of the right to vote?—A. We never opposed that.

Q. Do you say that the object of this excitement is not to overcome the negro vote?—A. What excitement?

Q. The object of the excitement that exists in Danville that almost threatens to drive you out of the community?—A. I think it is always right to overcome bad government.

Q. Is it right to do it by unlawful means?—A. We have never attempted that to my knowledge. Niggers have voted in Danville ever since I have been there; no obstruction has ever been put in their way.

Q. Is not the excitement growing out of politics because they voted there, and, as you think, voted wrong?—A. Well, they are ignorant, and these men come and say if our party succeeds they will be put back in slavery, and all that

Q. Did you ever hear anybody tell that they would be put back into slavery if they voted the Republican ticket?—A. I never did.

Q. Then you heard somebody else say that?—A. Yes, sir; and it is beyond doubt so. I have heard truthful men say so.

Q. Yes; and did you ever hear any speaker of any prominence state that?—A. Well, the question you asked me—those are the facts that I believe is the cause of their excitement, is, amongst other things, the threat that they are to be put back into slavery, one cause of their acting in the way they do.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. I suppose you have known colored people and have had to do with them all your life. You say they are tractable people when let alone?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are kindly, are they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you if you ever knew of an outrage or collision between the white people and the blacks in our country since the war, since they have been given the right of suffrage, that there was not some mean white man at the bottom of it?—A. That is exactly my opinion of it.

Q. When these bullets begin to fly, did you ever know one of those mean white men to stand up for them?—A. Never knew any one of them to do that.

Q. They always manage to get out of the way, don't they?—A. I think so.

Q. What politics were the authorities of your town?—A. This man, the mayor, is a Readjuster-Coalitionist, whatever you call them, I don't know what they are—anything. In other words, he is a man that is opposed to the respectable portion of the community in everything possible.

Q. Who is your sheriff?—A. The sheriff is a Republican, so he calls himself; he calls himself a Republican.

Q. And the judge of your court?—A. The judge of the court is a Readjuster or Coalitionist.

Q. And the prosecuting attorney?—A. He was elected on a Coalition ticket.

Q. Do you know if they made any threats to bring these people to trial for the riot in Danville?—A. No, sir; I know very little about the working of the law. I know there was a grand jury in session.

Q. And the grand jury failed to find a bill, did it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how that grand jury was selected?—A. I do not.

Q. Are you acquainted with the method?—A. I understand the judge and the clerk of the court generally have the direction of that. That has been my understanding; I am not certain about it.

Q. Do you know of any warrants issued by the judge, or any warrants sworn out by the prosecuting attorney, for the arrests of any persons concerned in this riot?—A. No, sir; none.

Q. No attempt at all has been made to arrest them?—A. No, sir; Judge Blackwell saw it, he says.

Q. Would there have been any trouble in executing a warrant or bringing them up for trial?—A. None in the world that I know of. The power is in the hands of the proper authorities.

Q. Well, as it is now, would any of your people there resist arrest?—A. None that I know.

Q. None at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long did the disorder that was on the street continue that Saturday, the 3d of November?—A. I suppose in an hour probably the people were quieted. Colonel Cabell was there, and he got down out of the house as soon as he could, and I never heard a man make as strong efforts as he did. There was great danger of a riot being in the town, sure enough, after this thing commenced. The people did not know what the trouble was. The people rushed out of the opera house. They did not know what had occurred, and there was great excitement. Some seven or eight hundred men run for arms, and run to the hardware stores and everywhere else, but as soon as they came out there he persuaded them to be quiet, and they did so. He used every effort in his power, and succeeded in stopping them from committing further acts of violence.

Q. Now, if I understand you, when you came out of the house and got up to the scene of where the fist fight had taken place you saw ten or fifteen, or not to exceed twenty, white men standing on the sidewalk in the presence of two or three hundred infuriated negroes?—A. Yes, sir; I think probably twenty men in all went along as I went, probably in the whole number about twenty.

Q. The whole number of the white race in that crowd did not exceed twenty?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you say you did see colored men shoot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did see them have weapons in their hands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did hear them use angry, violent expressions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That they did press on to that little crowd of white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You thought they were in imminent danger or you would not have drawn your weapon and fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say that on the second fire the colored people broke and ran?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You then ceased and tried to restrain everybody else?—A. I did, sir. I made every effort in my power to assist Colonel Cabell to stop the further pursuit, and stop the shedding of blood, if possible; and he was successful in doing it. We had a very infuriated mob of people there at the time. If it had not been for his efforts I don't know what would have happened.

Q. Do you know any fact decisive, if so I charge you to tell it, tending to show that this riot was procured to be brought about and brought about by the white people for the purpose of intimidating the negroes at the election?—A. None whatever. I can swear on the Bible that our instructions were exactly to the opposite—to do nothing that would produce a disturbance. In all the club meetings it was the effort on the part of the leaders to let nothing be done that would create the slightest disturbance that we could possibly avoid.

Q. Was there anything said about it in the meeting that day in the opera house, to refrain from violence?—A. It was stated, as I have stated here before, that it was nothing but a street fight outside, and for men to keep their seats.

Q. Who stated that?—A. A number of men. I think Colonel Cabell.

Q. Who presided over the meeting? Did Colonel Cabell preside?—A. I can't say certainly.

Q. And if there had been any design to provoke the riot there, there would not have been efforts made, would there, to have kept the people in the house when the riot began?—A. The fight, sir, was nothing but an accident, so far as I could see.

Q. Did you know this man, Hense Lawson?—A. No, sir; I never heard the name.

Q. You don't know what his character is as a man of violence, or anything of that sort?—A. No, sir; I knew nothing of him at all.

Q. You were interested, were you not, in the efforts to throw off this government of the town of Danville that was injurious, and you were uniting with other citizens to try to throw it off, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If there had been any plan to produce this riot for this purpose, don't you suppose you would have been informed of it, naturally?—A. I suppose so. I only know that the clubs, which includes all our citizens—we had every man registered—and I don't think hardly a man absented himself from the club—and those instructions were given to all—to try to avoid anything like difficulty in every possible way; to do nothing that would excite any trouble.

Q. Did you attend any of the wounded that were wounded in this affray?—A. Yes, sir; I attended Mr. Seward, who was shot through the side; and I assisted in performing an operation on Mr. Holland's head; and I made a post mortem, Sunday morning, on a nigger. I was summoned by the coroner to do that.

Q. What negro was that?—A. I do not know his name.

Q. Where was he shot?—A. He was shot right through the head.

Q. How many were there killed in all or died of their wounds?—A. I don't know of my own knowledge. I only knew three that were killed there that evening. The one that was wounded, Doctor Douglass said he was not dangerously wounded, but he afterwards got erysipelas and died from the effects of it, which makes four. I don't know how many were wounded. I saw two or three niggers walking around a day or two afterwards with slight wounds.

Q. Did you see any marks of bullets on the walls of Woolfolk & Blair's house?—A. I never examined it. I have seen on a brick house just below it several shots. I never noticed the wooden house. Woolfolk & Blair's is the wooden house.

Q. Well, in the situation in which the whites were standing, and the colored people, which party do you think shot those bullets against the brick house?—A. I don't see how the whites could have done it. They had their backs to it.

Q. You say it is a well-known fact that the most of the colored people there go armed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far is it from the town to Utimbeshers' precinct?—A. I suppose it is three-quarters of a mile from the suburbs. I don't know that exactly. It is a mile and a half from the center of the town, probably.

Q. Do you know whether there was a large colored vote polled there that day?—A. I only know the report that night at the club meeting, brought by the election officer.

Q. What was the report of that meeting?—A. Well, they had some three or four hundred majority there.

Q. Was that their usual majority, or more than usual?—A. I don't know. He said that the majority was larger than it had been.

Q. How far is it from Danville to New Design precinct?—A. That is about 4 miles, I think.

Q. Were you at New Design on the day of election?—A. Yes, sir. I went down there with a message for our electors in regard to something, I don't know now exactly what it was; I carried a message down there.

Q. Did you see the crowd that was there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were any colored people present?—A. I saw two or three hundred of them on the road. There were a great many out on the road; I suppose they were hunting.

Q. Out for a holiday?—A. For a holiday and hunting. I don't think they came armed for the purpose of creating a row; but most of them had shot-guns, I think, probably, for hunting.

Q. Do you know whether they voted there or not that day?—A. I heard they did not.

Q. Did any of them give you any reason why they did not vote in town?—A. I asked several of them why they did not vote, they said simply, "feared."

Q. Was any effort made to get them to the polls, and assure them of protection?—A. I think there was. There was a card issued to that effect—that they would be protected.

Q. Now, in your opinion, could colored men have voted there without restriction?—A. Why, they had troops there to protect them, and not only white men did not interfere with them but I saw numbers of white men trying to persuade them to vote.

Q. They had troops sent there by the governor of Virginia to protect them, had they not?—A. I saw a number of men trying to have them vote; I did not myself. I did not care a cent myself whether they voted or not. Some took a different view of it, and tried to get them to vote.

Q. Pittsylvania is Democratic anyway, with a full vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not need, in order to carry that county, to intimidate voters in Danville?—A. Yes; we could give them all the votes they claimed, and have the county.

Q. You had the county beyond a doubt?—A. Yes, sir—the book shows the statistics—if every man had voted.

Q. Referring to the statement that you have made in corroboration of this circular, that the city government was very bad, state who your magistrates were.—A. One of them was a man by the name of Walter Luxor. He has since absconded for theft, I understand.

Q. Run away on a charge of theft?—A. Yes, sir. The other was a yellow boy. I didn't know anything about him specially one way or the other. The three Coalition magistrates, as they call them. The other was a man by the name of Robinson. I think, probably, the yellow boy was the best of the three.

Q. Were two of your magistrates discharged from office?—A. Yes, sir; they were appointed officers by Judge Blackwell.

Q. Were there two discharged before that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom were they discharged?—A. I don't know. I know that there were two magistrates that were discharged for malfeasance; but I don't know.

Q. And there were two put in their places by Judge Blackwell?—A. No, sir; I don't say that. I thought you were trying to get at the three original magistrates that were elected on the Coalition ticket.

Q. Yes; but there were two of them, I am informed, that were discharged for malfeasance.—A. I don't know that fact. I know that there were two others afterwards that were, as I understood.

Q. That were discharged?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you a member of the coroner's inquest on one of those negroes killed?—A. I was summoned there to make an examination of him; yes.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Mr. Sherman asked you if this man, your mayor, was not acquitted by a Democratic jury. What was your answer to that?—A. I don't know; I don't recollect it.

Q. Where was he tried?—A. At Danville. I don't know what the jury was composed of. I think I might have answered in the affirmative; he asked me so rapidly.

Q. You cannot state how the jury were?

By Mr. SHERMAN:

Q. You were not on the coroner's jury then?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you summoned to make the autopsy?—A. I was going up the street, and met this coroner's jury, and they said they could not find a physician, and would I go and do it.

Q. There was no question in regard to your being present at the killing?—A. No, sir.

Q. You spoke about the people being excited and running for arms; was not that the white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The negroes did not run for arms, did they?—A. No, sir; that was before they found out what was the matter.

Q. Yes; in the evening after the riot.—A. Immediately after the riot.

Q. They called out the Danville Grays, and ran for arms—the white people?—A. No, sir; the Danville Grays was not called out until after the disturbance had been quelled.

Q. Don't you know that they were there within ten minutes after the shooting?—A. No, sir; nor in thirty neither.

Q. But you heard of no attempt on the part of the negroes to arm themselves for a conflict?—A. No, sir; nor did these people, except for protection of both parties. There was no attempt made——

Q. [Interposing.] And you think it was for the protection of both parties, then?—A. It was supposed to keep good order in the town, to prevent any further trouble. The disturbance was all over when he got his troops out, and the sheriff took charge of them, and read the riot act.

Q. Don't you know that during the excitement there was a threat to proceed with a mob of white men to clean out the internal-revenue officers?—A. I don't know; I was afraid probably it might be done, but I know of nothing of the kind.

Q. You know of no movement in that direction? Didn't you hear Colonel Cabell claim the credit for preventing that?—A. No, sir; I only know that Colonel Cabell made every effort in his power to stop the disturbance. Colonel Cabell and I never did it with anybody.

Q. Were you present at Colonel Cabell's speech on Main street, near Union?—A. Near where?

Q. Near Union street; near the junction of Union and Main, opposite the Arlington. I infer from the inquiry that it was probably a meeting after the riot was over.—A. No, sir; they congregated there. The people came from every direction there, and he got upon the steps and begged them to desist and go home, and not to have any trouble. He used every effort in his power to quell the disturbance.

Q. You say there were instructions to do nothing to produce a disturbance; but did you not regard the actions of these three young men, under the circumstances, as a violation of those instructions?—A. I know nothing about that; I don't know anything about the fist fight on the street; I know nothing about that whatever.

Q. You do not know whether that was in violation of instructions or not, and whether it was in pursuance of the plan?—A. Oh, I think it would have been better for these young men not to have got into the disturbance.

Q. You do not know whether it was part of the plan or their own impulse?—A. Taking everything into consideration, I suppose if it had been part of the plan that these men would have rushed down, instead of being told that nobody knew anything about it or thought anything of it.

Q. Still there were enough there?—A. There were enough men there to have swept all the niggers away. If those men had been out there this thing would not have occurred; they would have dispersed and gone away without it.

Q. The negroes would have been overawed you think?—A. Yes, sir, I think so.

A. H. BLUNT sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you been there?—A. I have been there about five years, or nearly six years, I believe.

Q. Were you in Danville on the 3d of November last, when the riot occurred?—A. I was.

Q. Were you examined in regard to this matter before the committee of forty?—A. No, sir; I was not. I was not examined there; I was examined before the grand jury.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am a photographer.

Q. When did you first know or hear of the riot that occurred on that day?—A. I was in the opera house.

Q. At the meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what occurred.—A. Well, I went into the opera house, but did not take a seat as I went in, but went in the back portion. It was remarked that some one had been shot on the street up about Mr. Woolfolk's, and I looked out the window and I heard the remark that Mr. Ferguson was shot, a gentleman who resides in Danville, and I immediately rushed to the door and met Mr. Bill Averett, the shoe-store-man, at the door; he deals in boots and shoes. As I started down the steps Mr. Averett remarked to me, "Why don't you fellows go up the street? Go ahead quick. They are fighting up there;" in about that kind of a tone of voice. I was not armed. I never carried any arms. I rushed in to Mr. Valentine's store, went by the counter in his presence and picked up a revolver and rushed up the street as hard as I could go, and as I got opposite Mr. Gray's shoe-store the firing commenced—I suppose forty or fifty paces, within sight of where the firing commenced; and as I got at Mr. Averett's corner the stampede had commenced and several negro men ran over me, pushed me over, knocked me down at Mr. Averett's corner. I suppose that was thirty paces from where the firing commenced; that was as far as I got.

Q. Within thirty paces?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was about that.

Q. Did you fire?—A. I didn't shoot at any one.

Q. You didn't shoot?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was your pistol charged when you got it?—A. Yes, sir; the pistol was loaded.

Q. You didn't fire it then?—A. No, sir; didn't fire at any one at all.

Q. I again put the question to you, whether you did not yourself shoot your pistol at the crowd that day? You say you did not?—A. I said that I did not shoot; yes, sir.

Q. Your pistol, then, still had its charges in?—A. Yes, sir; I loaned my pistol to a gentleman who was summoned on the police force in twenty-five, I suppose, or thirty minutes after that, and remarked to him at the time that he would find it as I picked it up in Mr. Valentine's store.

Q. Who is Mr. Valentine? Is he a hardware man?—A. Well, he has an auction house and sells pistols out of that house.

Q. Is that part of his regular business?—A. Yes, sir; he sells pistols as part of his regular business. He has done it ever since he has been there. I have been near him for five years.

Q. Was there any firing near you?—A. No, sir; the firing had ceased when I got just beyond Mr. Averett's shoe store, when these colored persons run up against me. I heard three or four shots just about the time I got there. I had the pistol in my hand making for the firing as fast as possible. I was accused of having shot, and several white people said they saw me shoot, after these pistols went off. I had my pistol in that position [indicating]. Now, a gentleman in the market said he was confident that I shot. He told a gentleman so in Danville. But I didn't shoot. My pistol did not go off. If it did I didn't know it, and it had the balls in it afterwards; but I went there with the intention to shoot if my fellow-man was being shot down.

Q. Did you know the cause of the controversy?—A. I did not know a thing about it. Mr. Averett says, "You fellows go up the street quick; they are fighting up there."

Q. How many white people in the line fired?—A. Oh, I could not see any firing at all; I didn't see any firing at all; didn't see any man fire.

Q. The firing had all ended before you got there?—A. Yes, sir; I saw some gentleman in front of me; I didn't know who he was; don't know whether he fired or not; but when I had my pistol that way [indicating] there were several shots being fired at that time after the bulk of the shooting had ceased.

Q. It is but fair to you that I should say to you that we were informed by a witness that he saw you fire, and fire into the crowd after they were in full retreat, but we give you the benefit of your denial with great pleasure.—A. I can prove by the most reliable colored man, I reckon, in Danville—I can prove that to be erroneous by him. I can prove by a dozen good colored people and white people, too, that I got no further than that, and went from there over to Mr. Joplin's store, and then I went up to where Colonel Cabell was with one pistol—I was accused of having two, one in each hand. Several gentlemen in this crowd said they thought I had two, but I never had but one.

Q. Did you go up to the Arlington where Colonel Cabell spoke?—A. I was within three paces of Colonel Cabell while he was speaking.

Q. Was there any movement made or suggestion made in that crowd to go to the internal-revenue offices with a view to cleaning them out?—A. I never heard of that until the day after that. I never heard a word of that at the time.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. There was a state of excitement there very extraordinary, wasn't there?—A. Very extraordinary state of excitement.

Q. Among both races?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what do you attribute the most of it?—A. Well, I attribute it to insolence on the part of negro women and negro men in that town of Danville. That is my attribution of the fact. I think if those two gentlemen there had seen their daughters slapped off of the street as I have there, and knocked off in the mud by negro women, they would have been like Dr. Temple; they would have felt like not only leaving Danville, but the State of Virginia.

Q. And you think that was intensified by the speech of Sims?—A. I think it was, to some extent.

Q. Now, when this row occurred that day, do you know of any circumstance, direct or indirect, tending to show that that was a preconcerted thing?—A. Not at all. It was not a preconcerted thing on the part of any white men in Danville.

Q. If it had been preconcerted do you suppose you would have been informed of it?—A. I heard such remarks as this the evening prior about such men as Mr. Harrison. I heard three negro men there say, "Cuss old Harrison," and such remarks as that I heard the night before that in front of my gallery. Three negroes met out there and cursed the Conservative party, and everything of that kind. I can tell you a great many little things, and thousands of them enough to infuriate any respectable class of citizens.

Q. So you saw nothing to show that the riot was preconcerted?—A. A premeditated affair? No, nothing at all.

Q. You think it grew naturally out of the intense sharp state of excitement there was there between the two parties, intensified by rudeness and insolence?—A. Yes; I think that rudeness and insolence had been increased by a class of low down niggers, who, I think, had drawn with them some good colored people. There are some I like very much there, but then there was a low class of colored people there that created all the trouble.

Q. In a town like Danville, which is a flourishing town and attracts a great many laborers and capital, is there not generally a large class of floating negroes coming, you don't know from where?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Having no connection with the people, white or black?—A. Yes, sir; I have heard it remarked by a great many ladies and gentlemen, too, that the bad class of negroes from the country all flock to Danville; but I must say for Danville that they have some good colored people there, and I respect and like them very much, and they act as good citizens.

Q. Did you see any colored men engaged in that row that you know?—A. No, sir; I didn't see one. I didn't see a nigger that I knew at all, and I have thought about it frequently since, and I could not imagine or think that I had seen one in the whole town that I was acquainted with.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

Q. You think that the cause of the excitement there among the white men, Democrats, was because of the disrespectful language and conduct by colored men and women?—A. I do, certainly. I think it was brought about in that way.

Q. Don't you think it may also be fairly attributed to the overbearing manners and insolence of white men who have been accustomed to slaves? Assume that the great body of the white people were the owners of slaves, masters of slaves, and owned these men as property, would they forbear and tolerate any conduct from these blacks, except such as became slaves?—A. How do you mean that?

Q. Don't you think that the fact of this excitement grew out of the previous existence of slavery?—A. The authority and privilege that existed over slavery prior to their freedom?

Q. Yes.—A. I do not hardly think so.

Q. And that a degree of deference was demanded from the colored people that would not be expected of any class of white people? I mean, by the common sentiment and natural instincts of education, would not that be the natural effect?—A. Well, sir, it might probably be true that way.

Q. Would these people resent, on the part of laboring white people, the same conduct that they resented so severely from the colored people?—A. They had not in Danville; they had resented but very little from the niggers. They had taken more, and it seemed they were trying to take everything; and they became much worse toward the last.

Q. Did you see any cases of the kind you refer to, of gross insolence?—

A. I certainly have. I heard a very nice lady in Danville tell me—

Q. That is not the question. I did not ask what the ladies say, but what you saw yourself. Did you see this thing?—A. Yes, sir; I saw a negro woman slap a little girl off the street.

Q. Might not that happen with rude people at any place or any time?—

A. Well, it was a general thing. I live upon Main street right above the Arlington, and I have seen several cases of that kind. I have seen women knock up against white ladies. I have seen them do it on purpose. I have seen gentlemen carrying a lady to church or to the opera house, and have seen a negro man burst right through their arms; burst right through them.

Q. Would not such acts of rudeness occur in any community, and would it not occur especially in great cities?—A. No, sir; I don't think it would at all.

Q. Can you give the name of any such person?—A. I can give you the name of this gentleman, Dr. Matthews, a gentleman who occupied a room in my gallery. If it had been a rare occurrence I would not suggest it at all, but it was an every-day occurrence. It was all the time; it got worse; white people could not live in Danville. Negro women said prior to this riot that they wanted to see the streets run in blood.

Q. I am not asking what the women say, but what you say, you yourself. I ask you would not the same acts occur in any city of the United States?—A. No, sir; I don't think there has been anything to compare with the town of Danville. The people there are worse than any town in America. I would not have staid there. I had made my arrangements. I had written off to sell out there and leave Danville.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 15, 1884.

E. M. HATCHER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there twenty-two or twenty-three years.

Q. Were you present at the time of the riot in Danville, on the 3d day of November?—A. I was not present at the time it commenced.

Q. When did you first know of it?—A. I didn't know of it until after it had commenced; I don't know how long after it commenced. I heard of it, and went to where the crowd was.

Q. What was the first thing you saw; where were you; in the opera house?—A. No, sir; I was not in the opera house.

Q. Where were you when you heard the first cry?—A. I was in the Virginia House at the time of the commencement of the riot.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. I went down in front of Ruffin & Woolfolk's office.

Q. On Main street?—A. On Main street, in Danville.

Q. Were you armed when you went there?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you get arms on that occasion?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have no arms?—A. I had nothing more than a pocket-knife.

Q. How many white people were there at that place when you joined them?—A. There was, I suppose, some twenty-five or thirty on the sidewalk.

Q. How many colored people?—A. Well, the streets were pretty well filled up; the middle of the street was pretty well filled up with colored people.

Q. Men, women, and children?—A. I didn't see any women; no children; I only saw men.

Q. What occurred? Give your own narrative of what you saw there after you went up.—A. When I got there I saw the darkies crowded in on the white people. The white people were upon the sidewalk, and the darkies in the middle of the street.

Q. Had the fight occurred at that time?—A. The fight had commenced down at the lower end, below where I was. I didn't see any part of the commencement of it.

Q. Go on; what did you see?—A. I saw the darkies crowding in upon the white people, and after I had been there, I suppose, a few minutes, the firing commenced, but I could not say which side it commenced on, whether it commenced with the whites or the blacks.

Q. Where did you stand; among the white people?—A. I stood among the white people.

Q. On the pavement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the command of fire given?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who gave that word?—A. I could not say positively who it was gave it.

Q. Did you not give it?—A. I don't know whether I was the first one that gave it or not.

Q. At that time were you armed?—A. I was not.

Q. Were you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure you gave it?—A. I am not sure.

Q. Did you at any time during the firing have any weapon in your hand?—A. Never had anything more than a pocket-knife, and never carry anything more than that. I have not carried a pistol for twenty years.

Q. Why did you give the word fire; you are uncertain whether you gave it or not?—A. I don't know whether I gave it at all or not.

Q. You don't know who gave it, then?—A. I do not.

Q. Well, there was a volley fired into the crowd, was there?—A. Yes, sir; there was a volley fired into the crowd.

Q. Was there any previous notice or warning given to the colored people?—A. Not that I ever heard of.

Q. What was the result of that fire—how many killed and wounded?—A. I didn't see but three that was killed.

Q. How many wounded?—A. I never saw but one man that was wounded.

Q. Give the names of those who were killed.—A. I could not tell you the names of those that were killed.

Q. Were they colored people?—A. Yes; they were colored.

Q. And you say you did not yourself fire any pistol or any weapon into the crowd?—A. No, sir; I didn't have a pistol on that day.

Q. How many shots were fired?—A. I couldn't tell you that.

Q. About how many?—A. Oh, I have no idea how many was fired; I could not tell.

Q. Did you see any persons firing?—A. I could not say that I did, and I could not say that I saw any white or black fire; there was pistols in the hands of a good many.

Q. Well, could you hear them?—A. I could hear the bullets; yes. I could hear reports, and could not tell how many there were.

Q. Can you name any persons who had pistols?—A. I can't say that I could name any man that had pistols. I think the majority of them there had pistols, but I could not go on and say, in the excitement, who had and who hadn't them.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Which side are you speaking of, the whites or blacks?—A. I am speaking of both sides.

Q. Do you think there were as many as twenty shots fired at that time?—A. Yes, I think there was.

Q. Or two hundred?—A. No, I don't think there was as many as two hundred; there might have been.

Q. Then you would not be willing to fix any number between the twenty and two hundred?—A. No, sir; I would not, because I could not tell.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you present when Jack Redd came up on the ground?—A. Jack Redd?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't know that I know him.

Q. Don't you remember striking somebody?—A. I don't think that I ruck any one on that day.

Q. You say you did not strike any one on that day?—A. I don't think I did.

Q. Didn't you strike a man near where Colonel Cabell stood?—A. I think not.

Q. You didn't?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure about that, Mr. Hatcher?—A. I think I am.

Q. Did you hear the testimony of Redd yesterday?—A. I did not.

Q. You did not?—A. I did not hear his testimony; no, sir.

Q. Do you remember to have seen Colonel Cabell?—A. Oh, yes; I recollect seeing Colonel Cabell.

Q. But you don't remember striking any one in his presence?—A. No, sir; I don't think I struck any one on that day.

Q. Did you see Redd struck by any one?—A. I don't know Redd.

Q. Did you see a man struck near Colonel Cabell?—A. I did not. I may know him by his face. I am the poorest hand in the world to recollect names.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Do you know Ivey?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He swore that you struck Jack Redd, and shot at him as he ran down there by the market.—A. Yes, sir. I was not anywhere near the market.

Q. You were not there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you present when Colonel Cabell was remonstrating that night?—A. I was present at the Arlington.

Q. Yes; but down here near the market?—A. No, sir; I was not present at that time.

Q. You say that before the firing began you heard no one give any warning?—A. Any warning of what?

Q. Of firing.—A. No, sir; there was no warning given that ever I heard of.

Q. Did you see or hear anybody try to disperse the colored people—make them go away?—A. There was a good many trying to disperse the colored people, and asked them to get off the streets and avoid a difficulty.

Q. Who were they?—A. Mr. Corbin was one and this policeman, Withers, was another, and there were several parties there.

Q. Mr. Peter Booth?—A. Yes, sir; Peter Booth was another.

Q. He tried to get them to disperse?—A. Yes, sir; tried to get them to disperse; get off the streets.

Q. Did you hear Captain Oliver, of the Grays, say to the colored people that if they would disperse the whites would?—A. Yes, sir; Oliver was trying to disperse them.

Q. That was before the firing?—A. No; that was after the firing—trying to get the black people to get off the sidewalks and avoid any further difficulty.

Q. That was before the shooting, wasn't it? The black people ran as soon as the shooting began?—A. There was a good many that run, and there was some few that remained, and they asked them to go away to avoid further difficulty. I wasn't there before nor at the time of the commencement of the firing. I was not present at the commencement, nor before that.

Q. Well, I don't understand your testimony. You said just now in answer to Mr. Sherman that you did not know whether you gave the order or not.—A. I said that the difficulty had commenced before I got there. There was a difficulty between—

Q. That is the fist fight?—A. Yes, sir; the fist fight occurred before I got there. I was not present at that time. That was what I alluded to.

Q. When you got up, there were twenty-five or thirty whites on the sidewalk and the streets were filled with colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they angry or excited?—A. They seemed to be excited, and I heard several remarks among the black people if we had to have a difficulty it was just as well to have it then as any other time.

Q. Did you see any arms in the hands of the colored men?—A. Yes, sir; but then I could not name any particular man that had arms on either side.

Q. Under the circumstances, did you think it necessary for the defense of the white men that they should fire?—A. Yes; I thought so from the way the black people were crowding upon them.

Q. How long did the firing last?—A. I suppose it lasted some two or three minutes; probably five minutes.

Q. How long after the firing began until the colored people broke and ran?—A. The colored people commenced pretty soon after the firing commenced; they commenced to break and get out of the way.

Q. Did you see any white men killed or wounded?—A. I saw Mr. Holland, that was wounded—Walter Holland.

Q. Any one else?—A. I saw a butcher there, that was in the market, that was wounded; I have forgotten his name; a white man—Seward.

Q. Did you see any bullet-marks on Woolfolk & Blair's office or house the next day?—A. I didn't see any on Blair & Woolfolk's office, but I saw on the barber shop just below that, and on Nicholas & Hessberg's bar-room, and on the building occupied by Averett & White's shoe store.

Q. Were those buildings in the rear of the white people that stood on the sidewalk?—A. They were in the rear of the white people that stood on the sidewalk.

Q. And in front of the colored people that stood in the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judging from the sign of the bullets, from which crowd do you say those bullets come?—A. They must have come from the black people.

Q. From the black people?—A. Yes, sir; it is in the rear of the white people.

Q. Well, the firing ceased soon after the colored people broke and run, didn't it?—A. As soon as they broke and run the firing ceased.

Q. Do you know whether the first volley was directed toward the negroes or whether it was shot into the air?—A. I think the most of them was shot into the air.

Q. The first volley?—A. Yes, sir; I don't think it was the intention of the white people to injure the black people; that they merely wanted to frighten them off to avoid a difficulty.

Q. Did you belong to any political club or organization in the city?—A. I did.

Q. What club?—A. I belonged to the club of the third ward.

Q. A political club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you if there was any premeditated scheme or plot to bring about this fight?—A. There was none that ever I heard of.

Q. Did you ever get any orders to arm yourself and prepare for a fight on the street?—A. I never did; never got orders or heard of any.

Q. If you did you did not obey them, because you say you had no weapons.—A. I had no weapons on that day.

Q. Was that an ordinary pocket knife?—A. Yes, sir; a twenty-five-cent knife that I bought at an auction there.

Q. You say you struck nobody and inflicted no blow that day?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Shot no pistol?—A. I haven't had a pistol in fifteen years; I haven't had one in that length of time. I don't suppose it would be any trouble in the world to substantiate that fact.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Didn't you hear any threats made toward the colored people before this?—A. Never heard any threats there; there had been a disposition there to keep perfectly quiet.

J. C. REAGAN sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you been there?—A. I have lived there, I suppose, in the city, a little over two years; I have been in business there longer.

Q. What are you engaged at?—A. In the tobacco business.

Q. Were you present on the 3d of November, at the time of the riot?—A. I was.

Q. When did you first see any part of the riot?—A. I was in the opera house.

Q. You were in the opera house?—A. They first cried out there was a fight on the street, and I broke out of the opera house immediately.

Q. When the alarm about the fight was made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, where did you go?—A. When I got down on Main street there was a pistol fired and a crowd of niggers was gathered up there. They broke and I met them going down the street and I kept on up where the crowd was; a friend of mine, Lea, and these other boys that were all raised in the same county, and I got up where they were. The fist fight was over. Noel was standing in front of Lawson and the negroes commenced crowding on the street right in front of them, making their threats.

Q. What threats did they make; what was said on either side?—A. They said they was going to have revenge out of it; that they had been mistreated there.

Q. They complained that they had been mistreated?—A. Mistreated; yes, sir; and been tried to be run over, and they were going to have it out right there, as near as I could understand. I left the crowd immediately and went into Bass's hardware store, about a door below there, and told them there was going to be a hand-to-hand fight out there.

Q. What did you say to them?—A. I told the clerk in there that I wanted a box of chop-axes; that there was going to be a hand-to-hand fight out there; that the negroes were crowding around out there, and they were going to massacre them. The clerk was excited and would not give them, and I asked him where they was, and he said, "Back behind the counter," and I hunted and could not find them, and I returned on the sidewalk. The time I got there the street was just crowded with niggers.

Q. Were you armed then?—A. I had a pistol.

Q. Any other weapon?—A. No, sir; I didn't get any chop-axes.

Q. When did you get that pistol, or did you have a pistol in the opera house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do then?—A. The time I got out there then I suppose was about a minute or two after the firing commenced.

Q. Who commenced the firing?—A. I could not tell you who.

Q. Who gave the order for firing?—A. I couldn't tell you anything about that; I didn't hear the order for firing.

Q. Do you know who fired the first shot?—A. No, sir; couldn't tell whether it was colored or white.

Q. Then did you fire?—A. Well, I could not tell whether that is a fair question or not; I won't answer.

Q. Well, I put the question.

Mr. VANCE. You are not obliged to answer that unless you want to.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you fire on that occasion?—A. I don't care to answer that question.

Q. You decline to answer that question?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was anybody killed by that fire?—A. I don't think there was right there; I didn't see any.

Q. Right in your neighborhood?—A. Right there; no, sir.

Q. How long did that firing continue?—A. I don't suppose it was over five minutes; no, I don't suppose it was that long.

Q. The colored people immediately dispersed?—A. They didn't when the firing first commenced, but they pretty soon—

Q. Went off?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What direction did they take from the scene of the affair?—A. I suppose they went every direction in which they could go.

Q. Mr. Reagan, please come here a moment and look at this map. Does this represent [indicating] where the white people were?—A. That was right in front of Woolfolk's.

The CHAIRMAN. That is represented by the numbers 36, 37, and 38. Here were the colored people?—A. They was all out there on Main street, and in on each side of the sidewalk. They had crowded up when I got back out of the hardware store; they had crowded up clean back.

Q. Was this the direction the colored people went [indicating]?—A. They went every way.

Q. Did any of them come back this way?—A. I suppose they went every way; I couldn't see.

Q. Did some people come out of the opera house during that firing?—A. I couldn't tell you anything about it, because I never noticed anything about what was going on after the thing commenced.

Q. This represents where the white people were.—A. The white people were on the sidewalk, crowded up just as close as you could crowd them up.

Q. When did you see Redd?—A. Who?

Q. Redd, the witness who was examined here yesterday.—A. I never saw him at all that I know of. I don't know him.

Q. You don't know him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you get into any controversy with any colored man at a time when Colonel Cabell was present?—A. I don't know whether I did or not.

Q. You say you don't know whether you did or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you strike a man there in a controversy?—A. I don't think that's a fair question.

Q. What do you answer to that?—A. Well, I don't know, I am studying.

Q. Do you decline to answer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you say? I will again put the question pro forma. Did you at the time referred to strike any one shortly after the firing ceased? What do you say to that?

Mr. VANCE. I think you ought at least to give him the name of the man he struck.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Redd is the man, or any other one. You say you don't know Redd?—A. No, sir; I don't know him.

Q. Well, did you strike any one on that occasion near where Colonel Cabell was?—A. I don't know whether I ought to answer that question or not.

Q. Well, I want to know whether you will answer it or not?—A. I don't think I shall.

Q. You decline to answer then. Did you fire at this man on that occasion?—A. Well, I don't think I can answer that.

Q. You can't answer that?—A. Well, I can say that I didn't. I can say that much.

Q. You did not?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. You did not fire at that man?—A. No, sir; I shot at no one especially.

[The reporter was requested to read over the last answer.]

Q. You say you shot at no man especially. Did you have a controversy with any one?—A. I didn't say I shot at no man especially. I didn't say "especially" at all. I didn't say I shot at all. I say that I did not shoot at him.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You say you did not shoot at this man Redd?—A. No, sir; I did not.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Mr. Reagan, I want to get your answer to that question. Did you shoot on this occasion at any man after the firing had ceased, in the presence of Colonel Cabell?—A. I did not.

Q. I ask you again, so that there will be no misunderstanding, how many times you shot into the crowd that day?—A. Well, I don't think that is—I shall not answer that.

Q. You decline to answer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you wish to say anything further in respect to this matter, and especially in answer to the questions I have put to you in regard to this shooting? Do you desire to add anything to what you have said?—A. I will answer any questions.

Q. Were you examined before the committee of forty?—A. I was.

Q. Did you say anything there about being armed and this shooting?—A. They did not ask me any questions of that sort.

Q. Your testimony was given correctly, was it, in the published report of the committee of forty?—A. I think so.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Mr. Reagan, how many white people were on the sidewalk?—A. At the time the firing commenced, you mean?

Q. When you got up there? I understand you were not present at the fist fight.—A. Well, there were very few when I got there. They collected when I was in the hardware store. There were very few when I got there—I suppose half a dozen.

Q. How many negroes in front of that half a dozen?—A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. In your best judgment?—A. What do you mean—when I first got up?

Q. Yes; when you first got up.—A. I don't suppose there was more than fifty or one hundred, and they kept gathering like bees going to hive.

Q. From any direction?—A. From every direction.

Q. Now, do you recollect any expressions of the crowd showing whether they were angry or in good humor?—A. They seemed all to be angry, so far as I could see.

Q. Was there any inquiry made for the man who had fired the first pistol?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was said by any of the crowd?—A. They pointed at a man that had shot, I suppose; he was standing aside of me.

Q. Whom did they point to?—A. Bob Taylor; they said he was the man that done the shooting.

Q. Did Taylor have a pistol?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any colored men have pistols?—A. Yes, sir; I saw colored men have pistols.

Q. How many do you think you saw in the hands of the colored people?—A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. Did you see anybody try to disperse them?—A. Yes, sir; Withers was trying; done all he could, I thought—tried to disperse them.

Q. Did you hear Captain Oliver?—A. Yes, sir; I was there when Oliver came up.

Q. Mr. Corbin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What reply did they make to the threats of the policemen and Captain Oliver and others, to get them to disperse?—A. They said they was not going to do it; they were not going to be run over at all.

Q. That they were not going to disperse; they were not going to be run over?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, by the time the firing began, how many whites were present and how many colored men?—A. I suppose about twenty; about two hundred I reckon. The streets were crowded with them; they kept crowding in like bees going to hive, in all directions.

Q. Mr. Reagan, as a prudent man, a man of reasonable firmness, do you think it was necessary for that crowd of white men to fire for their own safety?—A. I think it was.

Q. You think it was?—A. Yes, sir. As I stated before, I thought there was going to be a hand-to-hand fight. I didn't think anything else.

Q. Why were there not more white people there to help; where were they all?—A. They were in the opera house. I was there myself, but I broke as soon as ever the alarm was made.

Q. Did not the others break also?—A. No, sir; I was about the only one that left. The meeting had just been called to order.

Q. When you left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The streets then were comparatively deserted by white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were most of the active people in the city in that opera-house meeting?—A. Yes, sir; it was a pretty full meeting; the house was pretty full.

Q. Did you think that Corbin and Oliver and the others there were in earnest in trying to get the colored people to disperse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To avoid a row?—A. Yes, I do.

Q. You think they were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect what was said by any of those gentlemen?—A. I don't know. As I said, I was not out there many minutes until I went into the hardware store.

Q. You thought it was going to be a desperate hand-to-hand fight, and went into the hardware store to get a hatchet?—A. Yes, sir. Corbin was right in the street among the colored people.

Q. Did you say you saw these men wounded?—A. No, sir; I saw one; they carried him across the street.

Q. I mean the white men?—A. No, sir; I saw Holland.

Q. How long was it after the row until the city was quieted and order was restored?—A. A very few minutes.

Q. No disturbance after that?—A. None at all.

Q. Colonel Cabell made an address to the people there on the streets, didn't he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Urging them to be quiet, and so on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Every body seemed disposed to obey?—A. Yes; Sergeant Wood did the same thing, and every man seemed to obey him; I did, I know.

Q. Was not there a patrolman shot that night in the suburbs of the city somewhere?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Hubbard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the place where he was shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of people live there; white or black?—A. Colored people.

Q. Altogether?—A. Yes, sir; I don't think it was in the corporation where he was shot; I think it was across the dry bridge; I think it was the second house across the dry bridge.

Q. How wide was that sidewalk where the white people stood?—A. It was tolerably narrow; I don't suppose it is over six feet.

Q. Not over six feet wide?—A. It is not over eight, I know.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Can you name any colored man who fired that day?—A. I cannot, sir.

Q. Cannot you name any white man who fired?—A. I cannot, sir.

Q. And you decline to answer as to whether you fired; you still decline?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw three men killed at the first fire, didn't you?—A. No, sir; I never saw a dead man at all; I saw one that they say died pretty soon after; they carried him off the streets there; some white people toted him across the street at the Arlington.

Q. You are a member of the Democratic party, are you not?—A. I am.

Q. Were you appointed a special policeman?—A. I was.

Q. How soon after this?—A. I couldn't tell you. I sent my folks out of the city.

Q. I didn't ask that.—A. But I say I couldn't tell you the exact time. I don't think I was appointed until about the third day, or second day, anyhow.

A BYSTANDER. It was Sunday morning.

The WITNESS. No, I wouldn't take any duty, you know, until I sent my folks out of town. I sent them out of town Monday; they could not leave Sunday.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You say you heard Colonel Cabell address the people there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was that?—A. It was near the Arlington.

Q. Was anything said about going to the Government building?—A. I never heard a word said about the Government building.

Q. Did he say anything about going to any place?—A. Who?

Q. Colonel Cabell.—A. No, sir; I think all he said was to try to keep the people quiet.

Q. Was not he addressing them, trying to dissuade them from going to any place? Had you heard anything said to any one about going to the United States building?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear anything of it.

Q. Where was Colonel Cabell?—A. He was up by the Arlington.

Q. Well, there is a Government building near there, is there not?—A. One right above there.

Q. And the post-office opposite?—A. No, sir; the post-office and Government building are all one.

Q. Well, the old post-office is opposite?—A. Well, the Government building was not in that then, I don't think.

Q. How far from the Arlington?—A. I suppose it is 100 yards; near about it.

Q. How far were these persons apart when the firing commenced?—A. They were right together, as thick as men would generally stand.

Q. No distance between them, then?—A. None at all; I don't think.

Q. How near was any colored man to you?—A. I could put my hand on them, I suppose.

Q. Then you could reach him with your pistol, couldn't you?—A. I could.

Q. Now the whites were thrown into line, were they not?—A. I don't think a man could hardly have got into line ; they were all on the sidewalk, crowded.

Q. Could not they be in line on the sidewalk ?—A. I don't know as there was any line formed. I have been in a good many battles, and I never saw any yet in a battle.

Q. Were not they standing in the form of a triangle there ?—A. No, sir ; they were crowded up just like men would be crowded up here. I suppose the white were all together, and the colored were pretty well all together.

Q. Did not white people come there in large numbers after this firing began ?—A. No, sir ; they were scattered all over the street, I suppose. Well, it was all over before any white men got there, only what was there.

Q. Did not they come from the opera house ?—A. Well, it was all over before they got there.

Q. Are you sure there was no firing after they came up ?—A. I don't think there was.

Q. How soon did they come out of the opera house after the firing began ?—A. I suppose they got out as soon as they could.

Q. How many ?—A. All of them.

Q. Well, how many were there ?—A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. How many would you judge there were ?—A. I couldn't tell you that.

Q. How many will the opera house hold ?—A. I couldn't tell ; I suppose it holds about six hundred or seven hundred.

Q. It was full, wasn't it ?—A. I couldn't tell you that ; there was a right smart crowd in there.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. You say that the two crowds of white people and colored people were very close together ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the white people were on a narrow sidewalk ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not more than fifteen or twenty of them, with their backs to the house ?—A. They were standing, I suppose, most every way ; I suppose facing mostly towards the niggers ?

Q. Did the white people display their pistols ?—A. A few did.

Q. And the colored people knew that these white people were armed ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And pressed on them notwithstanding ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. You spoke of some man being killed later in the evening on the outskirts of the town ?—A. No, sir ; I don't think I did.

Q. You testified in answer to questions by Mr. Vance that there was a white man shot ?—A. I didn't say he was killed, though.

Q. No, shot ; did you know anything about it ?—A. I know he was shot ; I saw him after he was shot ; I know he was shot.

Q. You saw he had been shot ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you don't know anything about the circumstances of his being shot ?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was all hearsay ?—A. I know he was shot because I saw him.

Q. He may have shot himself ?—A. I don't think he could.

Q. Well, that is reasoning. You don't know anything about it personally yourself, do you ?—A. No, sir ; I heard the gun, though, and heard the firing.

S. F. TERRY sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. You were examined before the committee of forty, were you not?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the first you saw of this trouble?—A. The first of it.

Q. The first you saw of it?—A. About two hours, I reckon, before the firing commenced I was loading a wagon right in front of our store.

Q. I mean the trouble between the two crowds that assembled there?—A. The first of it?

Q. Yes.—A. The time the firing commenced the first of it I saw was a white man with his arm up this way [indicating], and a nigger trying to wrench a pistol out of his hand, and that went off.

Q. Who was that man?—A. I don't know who he was.

Q. Would you have known him if you saw him; did you see him?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him, but he was standing with his side to me; a side view; and I cannot tell positively; with his back up the street.

Q. Well, he held up the pistol, and the colored man was trying to take it away from him?—A. He held the pistol up, and the colored man was trying to get it out of his hand and then it fired. That was the first pistol fired.

Q. That pistol, you say, was discharged?—A. That was discharged; I saw it go off. This nigger sort of jerked this man down and the pistol went off.

Q. What time in the day was this?—A. I don't know; I suppose it was about 3 or 4 o'clock. I never noticed particularly.

Q. Well, now, did not you name the white man who had this pistol in your testimony before the committee of forty?—A. No, sir; I never named him.

Q. What?—A. I do not think I ever did; not before that committee.

Q. You do not mean that Noel had the pistol?—A. No, sir; I saw Mr. Noel, but did not see any pistol at all. I know him, and took him up in my room for a wash off.

Q. I will ask you if you did not make this statement, "I saw the fight between Noel and a colored man, and saw a negro grasp a white man's wrist and try to take a pistol from him?"—A. Yes, sir; but I did not say the pistol was in Noel's hands. I stated that I did not know the white man.

Q. Now, how soon after this pistol was discharged before the firing commenced?—A. It was some little time; some few seconds. I was standing on the street. I thought it would all be over before the general firing commenced.

Q. Did you hear the order for firing?—A. No, sir; I did not. I was right across the street opposite, standing on the pavement.

Q. Did you see any colored men with arms?—A. I saw one with a knife.

Q. Where?—A. Coming across the street.

Q. Is that the one who cut your finger?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose so. I didn't see him cut it.

Q. How long was that after the firing began?—A. That was about the winding up; they were running; they ran through the store that I live in, I think.

Q. He probably hit you accidentally?—A. Yes. I do not think it was on purpose.

Q. You do not think he meant it?—A. No, sir; I think it was accidentally.

Q. Did you see any white man with a double-barrel gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was that?—A. Mr. Dance.

Q. Do you know whether he fired it?—A. I do not; he was standing in the door.

Q. Standing in the door with his gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far from the colored men?—A. Right where they were.

Q. Was he taking aim with the double-barrel gun?—A. No, sir; he had his gun elevated, just holding it up there.

Q. Then the only person you can swear you saw have arms was one white man with a pistol which the negro was trying to take from him?—

A. I saw several pistols there, but I could not tell who had them. I only saw one white man with a pistol.

Q. Did you see any more than one with a double-barrel gun?—A. No, sir; only one with a double-barrel gun.

Q. Did you hear anything said about going to the government building and raiding that?—A. No, sir; I don't think I did.

Q. Is that what Colonel Cabell was trying to dissuade them from doing?—A. I did not see Colonel Cabell.

Q. Did not see him at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not near enough to hear the order for firing?—A. I did not hear any order at all.

Q. Were you near enough if it had been given?—A. Yes, it looked like I might be. I was right across the street. I heard Mr. Peter Booth trying to disperse them; to get the niggers to leave; they were pressing forward.

Q. Were you armed?—A. No, sir; I did not even have a pocket-knife. I had just lent my pocket-knife to Ed. Wheeler to mend a pencil.

Q. You did not have any arms at all?—A. No, sir; not a thing.

Q. How many did you see have pistols?—A. I do not know how many. I saw several pistols up.

Q. How many do you think were fired that evening?—A. I cannot tell; I think some fifty or seventy-five probably, may be a hundred; I could not tell; would not say positively.

Q. Did you see any colored men fire?—A. No, sir; I did not see any one but this one pistol.

Q. No; but you can answer whether you saw a colored man fire?—A. No, sir; I did not see any.

Q. Were you appointed a special policeman?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not serve on the force?—A. I went round with them but I was not appointed.

Q. But you served?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon did you commence service?—A. I went round that night a little while; went round with Mr. Booth.

Q. Who is Mr. Booth?—A. He is a merchant there in Danville.

Q. You went in his company?—A. I just went in his company.

Q. You belonged to the same political party, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; well I do not know about that.

Q. Well, you are a Democrat, are you not?—A. A Democrat, yes, sir; I do not belong to any club and never did.

Q. How long did you serve as a policeman; any more than that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. You only served that evening?—A. That evening.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. Mr. Terry, your place of business is nearly right opposite Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. Just a little above and opposite.

Q. Were you engaged in business that day or were you out in the street?—A. I was engaged in business in the store.

Q. Now you saw this whole matter, pretty much, did you?—A. Yes, pretty much all of it.

Q. Did you see the fist fight between Noel and Hense Lawson?—A. I saw them when they had their backs turned; I saw them when they were parting.

Q. The first thing you saw was a white man holding up a pistol and a negro trying to wrest it from him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not know who the white man was?—A. I do not know.

Q. You say in the scuffle the pistol went off?—A. The pistol went off.

Q. You do not think it was fired intentionally?—A. No, it looked to me accidentally.

Q. You did not go over to where they were, did you?—A. I started over and I saw Mr. Holland shot, and as soon as I found out who he was I started and got about half across the street and the niggers broke and ran.

Q. Who do you do business with?—A. Hamlin & Hayden.

Q. How long after this first firing of this pistol accidentally was it until the firing began generally?—A. It looked to me like it was several seconds; it was not more than half a minute; not exceeding a minute.

Q. Now, both parties were coming up after the firing of the pistol, were they not—the negroes assembling and the whites assembling?—A. Yes, sir. I suppose when the first pistol fired there was not more than fifteen or twenty whites.

Q. How many was there when the firing became general?—A. I don't reckon there was more than that.

Q. Not more than that then?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many colored people do you suppose there was?—A. Somewheres about a hundred or a hundred and fifty; a good many.

Q. At the lowest a hundred?—A. Yes; I do not think there was less than a hundred.

Q. They were between you and the white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did the white people appear to be surrounded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With their backs to the wall of that building?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the negroes in the street appear to be crowding on them, or were they standing; what were they doing?—A. Just before the general firing it looked like a sway of niggers made a rush forward on them along about the center.

Q. Just before the firing began you could see a swaying toward the white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it appear to you from where you stood to be necessary for the safety of the white men that they should fire?—A. Yes, sir; I thought so.

Q. How long did the firing last?—A. It was over very quick. It did not last more than two minutes, I don't think.

Q. How long before the negroes broke and ran?—A. They commenced right away; pretty soon.

Q. How long was the whole crowd of them in going?—A. I do not think after the first fire it was more than five minutes.

Q. Then they were all in full flight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice any man fire after the negroes had run?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know of any shots coming from the ranks of the colored people?—A. No, sir; I was not looking towards them much about the time of the firing. I saw Holland fall, and my attention was called that way.

Q. I want you to say, if true, was there any firing at all from the negroes.—A. If there was I did not know it; I did not see any; I did not notice who did the firing; I just noticed it was general firing.

Q. From your position, as I understand it, the negroes were between you and the white people?—A. A little below me.

Q. And you could not tell who did the firing, whether it was negroes or white men?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you saw Mr. Holland fall there, and then your attention was attracted to him?—A. Yes, sir; in that direction.

Q. Where was Mr. Holland standing when he fell?—A. He was going up street and immediately opposite our door.

Q. Was he on the sidewalk?—A. I think so.

Q. Near the white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could he have been shot from the position he occupied and the white people occupied; could he have been shot by anybody but a colored man?—A. I do not know; he was shot in the back of the head.

Q. Was he stepping up on the sidewalk?—A. I do not know; he was on the sidewalk, I think, when I saw him fall.

Q. You don't know which way his face was?—A. His face was up the street, I think.

Q. Well, that is indefinite to me. Was his face towards the colored people?—A. No; his back was toward the colored people.

Q. And he was shot in the back?—A. Shot in the back of the head.

Q. You say his back was towards the colored people?—A. Yes.

Q. And he was shot in the back of the head?—A. Yes, sir; he was shot in the back of the head.

Q. You say you saw men trying to disperse the crowd?—A. Yes, sir; I saw Mr. Peter Booth trying to disperse them.

Q. Were you close enough to hear what he said and what they said to him?—A. I saw him hold his hands up and ask them to leave; I did not hear what they said; he said it was best not to have any disturbance; to get away.

Q. Who is Mr. Booth?—A. He is a merchant there.

Q. Did you notice coming down from the opera house the crowd that was up there?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did not see when they got there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where was Mr. Holland taken?—A. He was taken in the room, I think.

Q. Into your store?—A. No, sir; across on the opposite side.

Q. Did you go to him?—A. No, sir; I did not go to him. I started and turned back to fasten our door.

Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Holland was not killed, was he?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know who shot him?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Where was he walking, up among the white people who were there?—A. He was a little above them, I think.

Q. By above which way do you mean?—A. Where they were firing. He was just a little above them; above where they were firing.

Q. By above which way do you mean?—A. Up towards the Arlington Hotel.

Q. He was not as near the firing himself as the balance of the white men?—A. There was some colored men scattered above him, I think.

Q. Now, did not people come out of the opera house as soon as this firing commenced and before it ceased?—A. I did not see any come out of there. I was away above; the opera house was on the next block below.

Q. You did not see the crowd coming from there at all, then?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know how many came from there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you in the opera-house?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many people will it hold?—A. I do not know; some five or six hundred, I suppose.

R. W. GLASS sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where were you on the day of this disturbance?—Answer. I was in the town of Danville.

Q. Do you live there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you at the time the disturbance commenced?—A. I was at Mayor Johnson's, just above the post-office.

Q. Now, go on and state just what occurred in your own way, without me asking questions, as far as you saw.—A. Well, sir, I really do not feel safe in telling what I do know about it.

Q. Why not?—A. I live in Danville, and have got to go back there, and am afraid.

Q. Oh, I guess you will be taken care of; why are you afraid? what is the reason for it?—A. Well, I have heard it said that any nigger that testifies in behalf of these things——

Mr. VANCE objected to hearsay.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Do you speak now of threats made before or since that happened?—A. Since.

Q. Did not you hear any before?—A. No, sir; I never heard any before.

Q. Did not you hear any that day, before the firing?—A. I heard it off and on. This firing was expected to be.

Q. Well, tell us now what occurred. You heard the first shot, you say; did you go down there?—A. Yes, sir; I was at Mayor Johnson's, coming out at the gate of his boarding place, Mrs. Lawson's. I heard a pistol fired. I run down as quick as I could get down there to see what it was, as colored people always do when they see a gathering. When I got down there there was a large crowd there.

Q. How many should you judge, when you first got there?—A. Well, it seemed to be about seventy-five or a hundred colored, and I reckon twenty-five or thirty whites standing there.

Q. Now, what did you see after you got there?—A. I heard white men telling negroes to leave here; said, "You all leave here; if you do not you are going to get hurt." The negroes were saying, "We are not doing anything but standing here looking, and we do not intend to leave." I heard a policeman tell them to leave; I heard some of the colored people say, "Why don't you tell these white men to leave? We are not doing anything but looking; they are kicking up all the fuss; why don't you tell them to leave? We are not doing anything but looking, and don't intend to leave." A very short time after that remark I heard Mr. Hatcher say that "this is a white man's town, and white men are going to rule it;" and "I will be damned if you niggers don't leave here we are going to kill you." And a short time after that they drew pistols out of their pockets and began to wave them round.

Q. Who drew pistols?—A. The white men.

Q. How many did you see draw them?—A. I saw four draw pistols that I know. That man over there [pointing], Mr. Freeman, was trying to get them to leave, saying "You all must leave here;" saying, "somebody is going to get hurt if you don't leave." The colored people says, "Well, make the white people leave; we don't intend to leave; we have not done anything; we don't intend to leave."

Q. Do you mean that was repeated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Said it more than once?—A. A very short time after that Mr. Hatcher, Mr. Lea, Mr. Covington, and Joel Oliver came to the front with their pistols, and Mr. Lea says, "Fire," and they did fire, and after they fired a great many more fell in and fired, and they continued to fire for three or four minutes. I reckon before they got through there was thirty or forty fired. Then people were coming from every direction. The colored people were leaving and white people were coming.

Q. Did the white people come out of the opera house?—A. Yes, sir; pouring out just as fast as they could get there; running to different stores getting pistols.

Q. How many did you see come from the opera house?—A. It looked like three or four hundred coming from every direction.

Q. Do you know they got pistols, any of them?—A. Yes, sir; I saw them go in stores and come out with pistols in their hands.

Q. What stores did you see them come out of?—A. I saw them go in Mr. Graves's store; I saw them going in Mr. Tyack & Doe's store, hardware store, and come out with pistols; and after the shooting 40 or 50 of them going out in the street shooting. I got afeared and run up the street and down. I steps right behind the white people where they were shooting; I gets right between them and this little office they speak of, Woolfolk & Blair's. I looks in there and saw pistols in there, and saw men going in there to get pistols. I saw a bag of cartridges sitting in there.

Q. In Woolfolk & Blair's real estate office?—A. Yes, sir; I saw a bag of cartridges sitting in there. I saw, I reckon, 25 or 30 pistols lying there on the table; saw men go in there and get them coming out and shooting. Finally all the colored people left, pretty much; there was myself and Withers, I think, was about the only colored people there on the street at all, and I was right behind them. They got in the street and hollered, "Hurrah for we Democrats," just as loud as they could holler. All the negroes was gone.

Q. And they were having a jubilee?—A. I just followed the street right up as they did until I come up to Mr. Paxton's store. I went in there; they went on up to the Arlington. I went out the back way and come out of an alley between Brown's bar-room and Moulton's barber-shop. I came out on Union street and went across to the Arlington, and went on up near the custom-house.

Q. Did you hear anything said about "going for that?"—A. I did not. I did not hear anything said about going for the custom-house at all.

Q. Did you see Holland shot?—A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. Who shot him?—A. I think one of those four first men shot him; one of them.

Q. The four who came to the front, as you said? Why do you think one of these shot him?—A. Well, from the position which they held and Holland held, I think they were compelled to shoot him. In fact, I did not see any shot come from the other way at all.

Q. Did you see any colored men shoot?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any one have pistols?—A. I did not see a one.

Q. Repeat the names of those four men who came to the front and fired.—A. Mr. Hatcher, Mr. Lea, Mr. Oliver, and Mr. Nat. Covington.

Q. Did Holland fall as they fired?—A. When Holland first got shot he threw his hands back of his head and seemed to tumble over.

Q. Were they pointing their pistols in the direction of Holland?—A. Yes, sir. Holland came across to the sidewalk where I was, and when I first got there and he asked me—I don't know whether he came from the opera house or not, but I don't think he did; I think he came from up the street above the opera house—he came to me and asked me—

Q. Now the four men who came to the front and fired, were they pointing toward Holland?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When they fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon did you know Holland was hit?—A. Well, soon after they shot I saw Holland fall.

Q. You saw him when he fell then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other place in the city where there were arms that night other than you have mentioned?—A. No, sir; I don't know as I do.

Q. How large a bag of cartridges was in this shop?—A. It seemed to be a half-bushel bag; it was nothing like full; I think it was about a half-bushel bag.

Q. What sort of pistols were they?—A. Very large pistols; I do not really know what kind.

Q. Do you know whose manufacture?—A. No, sir; I do not know.

Q. How many balls would they hold?—A. They seemed to be five-shooters.

Q. What length of barrel?—A. I do not really know.

Q. They were large size pistols?—A. They were large size pistols.

Q. And they were breech-loaders; they loaded from the breech with cartridges?—A. Yes, sir; it seemed so.

Q. Did you hear anything more by way of threat than what you have stated; that afternoon as the whites were coming up street did you hear anything further said?—A. I think I heard some of them holler out and say, "Kill every damn nigger we see," and some of them seemed to say, "No; they have run, and it is not worth while to kill them."

Q. Did you hear that said?—A. I think I heard Mr. Corbin say they have run, and it ain't no use to proceed after them.

Q. Now, do you know anything as to whether this preparation to kill the colored people was premeditated; whether it had been planned beforehand?—A. I think it was.

Q. What makes you think so?—A. Well, sir, they used to hold meetings in the hall of the Virginia House, called the Grays' armory. I live right back of it. I passed there at night and heard them speaking.

Q. What did you hear said?—A. I heard them say, "We intend to carry this election; if we cannot carry it by fair means we intend to carry it by foul."

Q. Could you tell from within who said that; could you tell from the voice?—A. One man who was speaking was Henry Barksdale; I heard him speaking one night.

Q. How long before this occurrence?—A. I guess it was a week before.

Q. When did you first see arms in that shop?—A. That was only after I got there.

Q. You had not seen them before?—A. I had not seen them before.

Q. Well, at any other place had you seen them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were they kept for sale in the hardware stores you have named?—

A. Yes, they were kept for sale.

Q. Do you know whether they had any extra number there?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Now, I will ask you this general question: Do colored people usually or generally go armed in Danville?—A. No, sir; they don't generally go armed; very few of them go armed. Some rowdies that go round and drink whisky at night carry pistols.

Q. Do the whites go armed?—A. A great many of them do.

Q. They generally go armed, do they not?—A. They generally go armed. Most of the colored people generally know it is against the law to carry pistols, and whenever a white man knows a negro carries a pistol they make him pay for it. If they carry them they carry them at night.

Q. Who made this threat you speak of since the riot? You spoke of some threat that put you in fear of telling what you know about this.—

A. Well, sir, I hear it as a general thing round town that any negro—

Mr. VANCE. I do not think that is testimony.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Can you name any one?—A. I do not think I can name a particular man, but I do not feel safe in testifying in this thing. I did not feel safe after what I had heard in testifying, and don't feel safe now.

Q. Well, did you hear it said that night?—A. No, sir; that night the colored people were afraid to come out.

Q. How soon after did you hear any such thing?—A. I heard it on Monday, and I have heard it since. I heard it a week or two afterwards—the time this committee of forty was coming around.

Q. Have you named any one who was on the grand jury?—A. No, sir; I do not know who was on the grand jury.

Q. Have you named any one who was on the committee of forty?—

A. I do not know who was on it. I was not before the committee of forty.

Q. Where were you on election day?—A. I was at work in the factory.

Q. Did not you vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. What reason was there why you did not vote? I will ask had you registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You intended to vote then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other reason for your not voting except what occurred in Danville?—A. Well, sir, as for myself I felt safe in going up there myself and voting, but I did not think it would amount to anything by my going to vote, and I thought if the crowd went up there and voted—

Q. A crowd of colored people you mean, I suppose?—A. That they were liable to shoot amongst them.

Q. What portion of the colored people in your precinct stayed away from the polls on that day?—A. What portion?

Q. Yes.—A. Most all of the Readjuster Republicans, or whatever you call them.

Q. Very few of them went to the polls?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how many colored votes were given?—A. No, sir; I do not really know. I know it was very few.

Q. Did anybody advise you to keep away from the polls?—A. No, sir; they advised me to go to the polls.

Q. The colored people were generally urged to go to vote, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were intending to go?—A. And were intending to vote; yes, sir.

Q. Before this disturbance?—A. Yes, sir. After that they were afraid to go in crowds; get shot amongst them.

Q. Do you know what proportion of the voters there are colored people?—A. Do I know what proportion were colored people?

Q. Yes; how many colored people are there there who are voters in that precinct, I mean?—A. I do not really know the number; I suppose there are between twelve hundred and fifteen hundred.

Q. They outnumbered the whites then?—A. Yes, sir. I do not really know the number.

Q. How many colored people do you know of going to the polls and voting, or don't you know anything about it?—A. I only heard one man say he voted.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. They all voted up at Wimbersher's, didn't they?—A. I do not know; I did not go up there; I heard they did.

Q. You heard they did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you heard the pistol fired, you say you were at Mayor Johnson's?—A. I was at the gate of Mrs. Lawson's.

Q. How far is that above Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. Well, it is about 250 yards, I reckon.

Q. How many blocks?—A. The town aint blocked at all, and it is hard to tell.

Q. Do not the streets cross one another?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that makes blocks, don't it?—A. Yes, and this was two doors above the post-office.

Q. About 250 yards?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Did you run or walk down?—A. I walked very fast.

Q. You walked fast?—A. Yes. After I heard the pistol fired, and as I went on, I heard people say they were fighting, and went on to see what they were doing.

Q. Had the general firing begun, or was that the fist fight between Lawson and Noel?—A. I suppose it was the fist fight between Hense and Noel. I did not see the fist fight. I was not there when the pistol fired.

Q. Now, was there any more firing until you got down there?—A. No more firing until I got there.

Q. And instead of taking your position with the colored people you went up among the white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Got between them and the office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other colored man there, in the same place?—A. No, sir, I don't think there was.

Q. Why, didn't you feel afraid to go up there among these desperate white men?—A. I saw that they were firing pistols out among the negroes, and I thought I would get in a safe place.

Q. You stayed there during all the firing?—A. While all the firing was going on I stayed there.

Q. And did you see who gave the command to fire?—A. Mr. Lea hollered "fire."

Q. He had his pistol, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who else had a pistol?—A. Mr. Hatcher, Mr. Covington, and Mr.
Oliver.

Q. Four men. Are these the only four pistols you saw in the hands of white people?—A. Well, others had pistols, but they didn't fire at that time.

Q. Now these men that fired at the command of Lea fired in the air did they not?—A. Well, I didn't see them fire up in the air. They fired up above the heads of the colored people who were in front. I think they raised their pistols a little. I think some of them did, and I think some of them shot right in the crowd. Don't think all raised their pistols.

Q. Did you see anybody fall the first fire?—A. I saw Mr. Holland.

Q. Holland fell first fire?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was on the sidewalk among the white folks, wasn't he?—A. No, he was going from me towards a policeman. He was on the sidewalk and spoke to me and left, and just before he could get more than 5 or 6 steps this firing commenced.

Q. Well, he was on the sidewalk, wasn't he?—A. Yes, he was on the sidewalk.

Q. And the colored people were in the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And their pistols were pointed towards the colored people or over their heads in the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how could they have shot him?—A. Well, I just want to tell you. Holland started from me towards the sidewalk across the street towards the policeman. He said, "What are these men got these pistols for?" asked me, "What's all this disturbance?"

Q. He said what are all these pistols here for?—A. Yes; and I told him it was a fight between Lawson and Noel.

Q. Well, he was right by you then, wasn't he?—A. He was right by me talking to me.

Q. Then you and he were both behind the white people?—A. I didn't say at that time I was behind them. I may have stepped behind them a short time afterwards; I won't say particularly. I know I was on the sidewalk.

Q. Well, you were in the rear after the pistols fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The pistols were all pointing the other way; the white folks with pistols?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Holland was with you?—A. Holland was with me; a short time after I got there he got there. He asked me why all this disturbance was.

Q. He did not go to any of the white people, but went to you, as the general manager of things?—A. He seemed to ask any one he knew.

Q. He did not know any of the white people, did he?—A. I suppose he did.

Q. But he preferred to ask you?—A. I don't know; but he asked me.

Q. What did you tell him?—A. I told him it was a fight between Lawson and Noel. It seemed everybody got mad about it.

Q. Well, then, when was he shot?—A. He got shot just as he left me; starting across the street towards a policeman.

Q. What policeman?—A. Cook; I think his name is William Cook.

Q. Where was that policeman?—A. He was on the other side of the street.

Q. Right beyond the colored people over there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he started to go across. How far was he from you?—A. Well, he didn't get very far. I know he was not very far.

Q. Was he off the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far from the sidewalk?—A. Not very far.

Q. Well, that is very indefinite. Was he 1 foot or 10?—A. He may have been 10 feet.

Q. He may have been 1, might he not?—A. He was more.

Q. More than 1 foot and less than 10?—A. I say 10, or more.

Q. Then he was in the crowd of colored people, was he not?—A. He was in the crowd of colored people.

Q. When he fell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He got out right in front of the white folks' pistols and got into the colored folks' ranks when he was shot?—A. When he was shot he was in the colored people's ranks.

Q. And more than 10 feet from the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These white men all knew Mr. Holland, didn't they; these four that you mentioned?—A. I guess they did.

Q. Well, did you see any pistols in the hands of the colored people?—A. I didn't see a one.

Q. Did not see any weapons at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any firing in their ranks, smoke or flash or report of pistols?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did they stand so long? You said awhile ago that the firing lasted three or four minutes before they ran. Why did they stand so long?—A. They didn't stand so long; as soon as the firing commenced they commenced running.

Q. Commenced running. That is not what you said awhile ago. Who was it that went in front of them and said, "Don't shoot them, because they have run?"—A. I think it was Mr. Corbin. I know it was some white man. One says, "Let's kill all of these damn niggers."

Q. Yes; kill them all?—A. Another one says, "No; they are running now."

Q. Let them live awhile longer. Well, the firing stopped then, did it not?—A. I think it did; I think the firing was about over. I think the last man that was killed was near the corner.

Q. What corner was it that the last man was killed?—A. It was Mr. Wiseman's corner; corner Main and Union streets.

Q. Well, none of these desperate white men interfered with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did not say anything to you; you were standing right there at their back?—A. No, sir; none of them didn't say anything to me.

Q. And you saw a magazine of arms, pistols and cartridges inside of Mr. Woolfolk's office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many pistols were there?—A. Not less than twenty-five.

Q. Were they all loaded? People went and got pistols, did they?—A. I saw people run in and get pistols and run out and shoot.

Q. Who did you see do it?—A. I saw Ned Jordan go in and get a pistol and come out and shoot.

Q. Who had charge of the arms inside?—A. Some of the young men that staid in there; some young man that staid in there had a gun in his hand; I forget his name.

Q. Did he do business in the office; live there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know his name?—A. I disremember his name; he seemed to be officiating there.

Q. He gave out the pistols when the folks came in?—A. There was no giving out at all, they just came and got them.

Q. Free lunch; everybody went and helped themselves?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, were they all taken out?—A. I don't know whether they were or not.

Q. Well, you staid until it was over, didn't you?—A. No, I kept backing. You see in three or four minutes after the firing commenced there was about three times more white people there than there were colored, and as they came up the street I backed back and kept going as they were, didn't get running but I staid right amongst them.

Q. Which way did the white people come that pressed you along?—A. They came up Main street.

Q. Well, going toward where?—A. Going toward the Arlington.

Q. What alley was that you made your exit through?—A. I went in at Mr. Paxton's jewelry store.

Q. How far up Main street toward the Arlington was that; how far from Woolfolk and Blair's office?—A. That was I reckon two or three doors. I disremember exactly now. I went in there and went out the back of it.

Q. Why did you do that, did anybody threaten you?—A. No, sir, didn't threaten me. As I got there there was some gentieman, I disremember who he was, he says "run out the back, run out the back, they won't kill you," and I run out the back.

Q. Well, you heard some stump-speaking in the armory hall?—A. I went to all the speaking I could get in.

Q. Did you get into those meetings where you heard these inflammatory speeches?—A. No, sir; they didn't allow no colored people.

Q. How did you hear; did you take a good position under the eaves of the house?—A. No, I passed there; the windows were up and I could hear.

Q. You stopped to listen, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who did you hear?—A. I heard Mr. Barksdale and a great many.

Q. What did Mr. Barksdale have to say about national affairs?—A. There was one thing I heard him say, "We intend to carry this election; if we cannot carry it by fair means we intend to carry it by foul."

Q. Did he tell you what the foul means were?—A. He said it would be by the point of the gun.

Q. By the point of the gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see him to know it was Mr. Barksdale, or did you judge by his voice?—A. I could see him.

Q. Was he an officer of the club, or just a private in the ranks?—A. I don't know what he was.

Q. Where is he now?—A. He is in Danville, I reckon.

Q. What does he do there?—A. He is a lawyer.

Q. Well, did you hear anything else?—A. In a meeting I went to that was Democratic I heard them say, "We intend to carry this election; do anything to carry it."

Q. Well, they talked that openly, didn't they; they didn't make any concealment of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you think this riot was got up in pursuance of that policy, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not your colored people know that; did not they all understand that thing, that these threats had been made?—A. I don't say that all of them did.

Q. But most of them. You told it around, didn't you?—A. I may have told it to some.

Q. Well, you thought it of sufficient importance to your party that they should all know it, didn't you?—A. I may have thought so; yes, sir, I have talked it.

Q. Now how did it come that your folks were so ready for the riot that day, and would not obey the policemen, and would not go away?—

A. I suppose the majority of them that was there didn't have any idea that there was going to be any shooting.

Q. Well, they saw men with pistols, didn't they?—A. Certainly.

Q. And they heard them say if you don't leave you will get hurt?—

A. I reckon they did. Like me, I thought it was a violation of law to shoot men for nothing, and they would not do it.

Q. But they did not think it was any violation of the law not to disperse when ordered to by the authorities of the city?—A. They were not doing anything.

Q. Were not doing anything. But the law officers of the city ordered them to leave, and they were playing into the hands of the Democrats who were there to shoot them?—A. I don't say they were playing into their hands at all.

Q. As it turned out they were, were they not?—A. I don't know.

Q. Well, they threatened and you said there were twenty-five whites to a hundred blacks—about four to one.—A. I said there was about twenty-five to thirty white men and about seventy-five colored.

Q. After you got there, after the fist fight was over, the white people came up in large numbers, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir; directly after the fist fight was over they came up.

Q. Now, when this firing began by these four men, Captain Lea giving the command, how many colored people were then present?—A. Well, there may have been more than I first said; there may have been one hundred and fifty.

Q. Well, give us your best judgment.—A. I reckon there was one hundred and fifty, may be two hundred; the street was full at that time.

Q. How many white men were there when the firing began?—A. They came as fast as they could get there.

Q. I don't care how they came; when the first pistol was fired?—A. Soon after the first pistol was fired?

Q. Well, when the first pistol was fired?—A. I reckon seventy-five. When the first pistol was fired they were coming from every direction.

Q. When the first pistol was fired you were at the gate at Johnson's, 250 yards away?—A. Well, I did not mean that pistol.

Q. The first of the general firing?—A. Yes; that is what I meant.

Q. You say there was seventy-five men there, then?—A. I reckon there were.

Q. Was the fist fight over when you got down there?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. You have stated that the colored people there do not go armed, except a few rowdies of a night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any householder among the colored people in that country that has not got a gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not a general rule that they have all got guns?—A. No, sir; it is not a general rule; some have got guns; men that like to hunt have got guns; I know a great many there that haven't guns.

Q. In proportion to their number haven't the colored people as many guns as the white people?—A. I don't think they have.

Q. You see a great many white people that don't have guns, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A great many white people that don't hunt, that attend to business all the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is not it the same with the colored people?—A. A great many have guns and a great many not.

Q. Of both races?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I ask you in proportion to the number, are there not as many guns owned by the colored people as by the white people, and as many spend their time roaming about with guns among the colored people as among the white people?—A. I reckon there are.

Q. And after the firing was over some fellow hollered "Hurrah for we Democrats?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who it was?—A. I thought it was Mr. Lea.

Q. You thought it was Mr. Lea?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear what Mr. Holland said about who shot him?—A. No, sir.

Q. How far were you from him when he fell?—A. I said about 10 feet or more.

Q. No; you said he was 10 feet from the edge of the sidewalk?—A. Well, I couldn't say precisely where I was; I was on the sidewalk.

Q. Did you help to carry him in or anything?—A. No, sir; I didn't go to him.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Do the white people generally have pistols?—A. Yes, sir; I know some of them had pistols.

Q. Well, do not a large proportion of them have them?—A. It is so supposed down there.

Q. Well, as far as your acquaintance goes?—A. As far as I am acquainted with them I know a great many of them have pistols.

Q. But they don't many of them have guns, do they?—A. Well, it is a very few that have guns. It is only men who like to hunt have guns, white and colored.

Q. How is it with the colored people; do they have pistols?—A. Well, sir, some colored people have pistols.

Q. Yes; but generally?—A. I think a majority of them are without them.

Q. Well, they hunt, don't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have guns for hunting?—A. Yes, sir; a great many of them hunt.

Q. Did you see any guns that night, except this man standing in the door with a double-barrel gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw another gun besides that?—A. I saw guns.

Q. In the hands of who?—A. I saw Mr. Shadbow come running up the street with his gun; I saw men on horses going up and down with guns; a great many of them run home to get their guns.

Q. What time was this?—A. This was, I reckon, fifteen or twenty minutes after the shooting was over; they had got up round the Arlington, running in every direction getting guns.

Q. That was after the colored people had all dispersed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear them make any declaration as they were coming and going with these guns? Did you hear any one make threats?—A. No, sir; I don't think I did.

Q. Well, up to the time the firing stopped, did you see any guns except the one of the man standing in the door?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you know whether he fired?—A. I think he did.

Q. If I understood you, you saw people come out of that office; go in and grab a pistol, and come out and fire?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the pistols were loaded when they got them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know that, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They had not time to load them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you that day up to the time of this affair?—A. Well, sir, all that day it was supposed that Mr. Sims would get killed or get hurt, and I was standing about on the street looking.

Q. Well, did you have any arms that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were these colored people who were there well known to the whites who were there?—A. Yes, sir; the best portion of them.

Q. The most of them were known to the white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know the colored men?—A. I knew a great many.

Q. A great many who were there that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say you didn't see one of them have an arm of any kind; didn't see a pistol or gun?—A. No, sir; I did not see them.

Q. Did they come back at all after they had dispersed?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You say you did not go to work that day?—A. I went to work Monday morning.

Q. On Saturday, I mean; you did not work that day?—A. No, sir; there didn't any of the factories that day.

Q. It was feared that Mr. Sims was going to be attacked that day?—A. Well, I suppose, they shut up the factories. I expected to go to work Saturday morning, but I went and they shut up the factory.

Q. You were expecting some attack to be made on him that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The colored people were expecting that, too, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose they were.

Q. Did that account for so many of them being present on the street that day?—A. On Saturday there is always a crowd of colored people on the street.

Q. I know, but they generally work the most of the day, Saturday, don't they?—A. They generally work, some until 12, some until 4 o'clock; most of them break up about 12.

Q. Don't you know now that a great many colored people were on the street in order to see if anything was going to be done to Mr. Sims?—A. I do not know that.

Q. Was not that your reason for being on the street?—A. That was my reason. In fact I was not on the street at the time the shooting commenced, but then I went down street that day when Mr. Sims was in his office to see if anybody came out, to see if anybody had come to bother him.

Q. You saw that he got away safely, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him when he left town.

Q. Were the colored people in your town in the habit of carrying razors?—A. None but barbers. I never saw colored men with razors except it is barbers.

Q. Did you see any in the crowd that day with razors?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say Mr. Dance fired his gun?—A. I think he did.

Q. Can't you be certain of it one way or the other?—A. I am pretty certain. I was close to him and I was pretty certain he fired that gun.

Q. How many times did he fire both barrels?—A. I think he fired once; he may have fired twice; I think he fired once.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You did not come out in the street until you heard the pistol fired, did you?—A. No, sir; I went up to Mr. Johnson to pay him some money, and I was coming away, and I heard a pistol fired. I went down to see what it was.

Q. You had not expected anything until you heard that pistol fired, did you?—A. Well, from what I could see that morning I thought it was liable to be something.

Q. You did not know of it before you came up there?—A. After Mr. Sims left I did not think there would be anything.

Q. How far was your working place from where this disturbance occurred?—A. This disturbance was on Main street, and my working place was—I have forgotten the name of the street.

Q. Well, about how far?—A. I don't suppose it was over 250 yards.

Q. You went to pay money to Mr. Johnson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And while coming from there you heard the pistols?—A. Heard the pistols.

Q. And then you went down and saw what you have described?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What factory were you working at?—A. A. W. & C. G. Holland.

GEORGE A. LEA sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live in Danville.

Q. Were you in Danville on the occasion of the riot?—A. I was, sir.

Q. Where did you first hear what was going on; were you in the opera house?—A. Yes, sir. I was requested by Mr. Taylor to assist him as doorkeeper in the gallery of the opera house on that day, or Colonel Cabell had made the request through him, and we were up in the gallery for that purpose.

Q. What instructions did you receive there?—A. I received no instructions at all.

Q. To keep order?—A. To keep order.

Q. Was it to keep any one out?—A. Yes; to keep niggers out; that it was a private meeting.

Q. That was the order, to keep out all the negroes and not any of the white men?—A. Those were not the orders of Mr. Cabell, but Mr. Taylor said that that was what we were there for.

Q. You were acting with Mr. Taylor at his request?—A. At Mr. Taylor's request.

Q. Did you receive any word about Mr. Noel or from Mr. Noel at that time?—A. Mr. Noel in a few moments after I took my seat in the gallery came to receive a message that I told him I wanted delivered in the country to a relative of mine that he was going to visit, and I remarked to him, I says, "Charley, how about your difficulty?" having heard of it. He says, "Well, I have concluded to postpone it, as there is very heated excitement in town," he says, and "if we were to resent that injury, I am fearful it will bring on a riot and I will wait until after the election to resent the injury." I says, "It is very hard to take such an insult;" whereupon he left me; his horse was standing at the opera house door, and was being held by my boy; he got in his buggy—

Q. Well, you cannot say what he did unless you were present; I don't ask you for hearsay. He left you?—A. Well, there are circumstances that are connected with it.

Q. Well, he left you?—A. He left me and went down the steps of the opera house; I saw that.

Q. Then, when again did you see or hear from him?—A. Mr. Noel in five minutes returned and remarked to me, "This scoundrel has insulted me a second time, and it is more than I can stand; please come, you and Taylor, and see that I have fair play;" whereupon we got up and went up the street.

Q. Were you at that time armed?—A. I was.

Q. Had you been previously notified of this difficulty?—A. I had not; I expected the difficulty that morning.

Q. And you were armed; how were you armed?—A. I was armed with a 38-caliber Smith & Wesson.

Q. A five-barrel pistol?—A. A five-barrel pistol.

Q. When did you get that?—A. I got it some months previous, and I would like right there, in justice to myself, to state where I got it.

Q. Well, it is not material.—A. I think it is material with me.

Q. At any rate that would be more proper in the cross-examination. I want simply to get a connected narrative of what occurred. Now, when you received word from Noel that he had been insulted the second time, what did you then do?—A. I followed my friend, as I regarded it my duty to do.

Q. You and Mr. Taylor and Noel went down together?—A. We three only, sir.

Q. How far from the opera house before you encountered Hense Lawson?—A. Well, Hense Lawson and his crowd—

Q. It was Hense Lawson was the man?—A. That Noel was hunting for? Yes, sir; and we encountered his crowd four doors above the opera house, four or five probably.

Q. What do you mean by Hense Lawson's crowd?—A. I mean that after he had insulted Noel he had collected his crowd, twenty in number, and had come down as far as Ruffin & Woolfolk's office from the Arlington hotel to meet Mr. Noel.

Q. How do you know that he collected them or whether they collected gradually?—A. I know it, because gentlemen of integrity told me they saw him do it.

Q. Well, it is not evidence to give that, and I wish to caution you.—A. I saw these twenty niggers in company with Lawson. I saw that. I won't be positive about twenty, but fifteen or twenty; I saw that.

Q. Then what occurred; what did Mr. Noel do?—A. Noel remarked to me, "He has got his crowd and I don't intend using any weapons at all. I intend to give him a good, sound fisticuff, and you and Taylor must keep the others off of me."

Q. Was Noel at that time armed?—A. I do not know.

Q. Did not you see arms?—A. I did not see arms on his person or anywhere about him.

Q. But you were armed?—A. I was armed; I don't know whether Mr. Taylor was or not—yes, Mr. Taylor was armed.

Q. But whether Noel was armed or not, you do not know?—A. I cannot say.

Q. But he said he would not use arms?—A. He said he would not use arms but would give him a good sound thrashing.

Q. There was great excitement prevailing there at that time, was there not?—A. No, sir; there was no great excitement at that immediate time.

Q. What did Mr. Noel do, accompanied by you two; what was done in your presence?—A. Mr. Noel met this darkey and asked, "Why did you holler at me a second time in the insulting manner you did." He stammered and tried to deny it, whereupon Noel collared him.

Q. What did Lawson say?—A. He tried to deny it; I have forgotten his exact words.

Q. If he tried denial you can tell whether it was by language or by nodding of the head?—A. I think he said I did not holler at you, or something of that sort.

Q. What next did Mr. Noel say?—A. They both made at each other simultaneously, and Noel got him in the collar.

Q. Which struck first?—A. They both made at each other instantly. I can't tell which. I suppose Noel, being the best fighter of the two, got in the best lick, and the first lick.

Q. What was the result?—A. The nigger got a genteel thrashing.

Q. Was he knocked down, or did they both stand up?—A. No; Mr. Noel had him in the collar, and beat him pretty good in the face.

Q. Did you see Lawson strike any blow?—A. I saw Lawson attempt fifteen or twenty blows, but he could not reach Noel, because Noel had the advantage of two or three inches of length in the arm.

Q. And you and Taylor stood by and saw this?—A. We stood there.

Q. Were your pistols exposed at that time?—A. As soon as Noel and the nigger went together, this nigger rushed up to get to Noel, whereupon I drew my revolver and demanded fair play.

Q. You two armed men stood by and saw the controversy. Were the negroes armed?—A. I did not see any arms—yes, I saw arms on the person of Mr. Robert Adams, who came up with pistol arms.

Q. But did you see any of these fifteen or twenty persons whom you mentioned, with arms?—A. I can't say I did.

Q. Then, I understand you, Noel gave Mr. Lawson a thrashing?—A. A pretty genteel one.

Q. What size man is Noel?—A. There he stands right up there [pointing to him], a picture of manhood.

Q. Six feet tall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you three young men were armed?—A. Yes, sir. I do not know that I could be considered very young; I am a married man.

Q. And you saw your friend Noel give this man a thrashing? What did Lawson do?—A. Lawson put up the best fight he could.

Q. He was at a disadvantage, you say; was not able to strike his opponent? Then did you come off?—A. No, sir; we could not get off.

Q. What was the matter; the negroes, I suppose, became excited?—A. The niggers crowded in.

Q. Suppose that three negroes had attacked a crowd of white men in this way; suppose the position of the races was reversed exactly, and three armed negro men had attacked one white man surrounded by fifteen unarmed white men, would not you have been excited? As a white man, I will ask you if the negroes were not very much excited by this assault?—A. Not only they did not seem to be very much excited, but seemed to have very much ebo in them.

Q. What is ebo?—A. They seemed to be mad, sir.

Q. Would not you have been mad?—A. I think I would.

Q. What did the negroes then demand? Didn't they demand your arrest and punishment?—A. They did not.

Q. Did not the policeman come up with his pistol for the purpose of keeping them quiet, and dispersing them, &c.?—A. That policeman did nothing at all. He was ordered by me to separate these men.

Q. Then you took command and ordered the policeman to disperse those men?—A. Yes, sir; I took command from the simple fact that he did not know how to have them parted, and I was afraid that Noel might kill him with his fists, and I had them separated.

Q. You thought probably that Noel might kill Lawson?—A. I thought there was a probability of his hurting him badly, and I did not want to see him beat up any more.

Q. Well, did not the policeman come in and try to separate them? Was he afraid to do it?—A. I don't know whether we was afraid or not.

Q. Would he have been in danger of violence if he had interfered?—A. If he had commanded the peace in a proper manner he would have been allowed to separate them; but when a man commands the peace before any pistols had been——

Q. You had your pistol out?—A. He had his pistol out first.

Q. As a policeman, had he not a better right to command the peace than you had?—A. Under the laws of our State I think he had no right to draw that pistol before he commanded the peace. My understanding of it is that when I drew my pistol the first time his pistol was near the head of Mr. Noel, whereupon I leveled mine as near his face as I could get it.

Q. You say you drew your pistol not to keep off colored people but the policeman?—A. The policeman came up with the rest of the niggers; he did not come up as a policeman.

Q. Then you drew your pistol to prevent the policeman with a pistol in his hand from separating them?—A. I drew my pistol, as I thought, to prevent the policeman from killing my friend Noel.

Q. You took your pistol then to prevent the police officer from doing his duty?—A. I did not regard it as his duty to kill my friend.

Q. Had he not the right to take the direction of matters to keep order?—A. Not with a pistol at his head. I resisted his attempt to kill my friend, as I believed.

Q. Do you say upon the obligation of an oath that you believed that policeman intended to kill Mr. Noel?—A. He had his pistol out and in the proximity of Mr. Noel.

Q. Do you believe that this man intended to kill Mr. Noel?—A. It was evident that his intention pointed in that direction.

Q. I ask you now if you thought that was his purpose?—A. My dear, sir, I do not know what I thought at the time.

Q. At any rate you three men armed (two of you at least armed), and the only arms you saw there were in the hands of the policeman, and you interfered to prevent the policeman from separating these two men?—A. Did not make any attempt—excuse me—to separate them.

Q. Then you say you took command and ordered the policeman to disperse the black people?—A. No, sir; I ordered the policeman to separate Noel and Hanse Lawson. I did not order him to disperse the crowd at all.

Q. You say you ordered him to separate them?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Was he not in the process of doing that before you drew your pistol?—A. No, sir; he was in the process of pointing his pistol, as I thought, towards Noel's head.

Q. What did you do toward aiding in the separation of these men?—A. It kept me pretty busy to protect my own person.

Q. You were defending yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Against whom?—A. Against a negro; very tall; fully 6 feet; I should think he weighs 200 pounds.

Q. What was that negro doing to you?—A. He was attempting to wrest my pistol from my hand.

Q. Attempting to disarm you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he have a pistol in his hand?—A. I think not.

Q. But he tried to disarm you? I will ask you the question, did he not have a right to disarm you with a drawn weapon, in a controversy of that kind, in your judgment, under those circumstances?—A. I do not think so.

Q. If the white men had interfered under like circumstances to disarm you, would you have thought it improper?—A. I most undoubtedly would.

Q. But you thought you had the right to have your drawn weapon under those circumstances, and that nobody had a right to disarm you, not even a policeman?—A. I would not have resisted——

Q. [Interposing.] What right had you to order a policeman to separate two contending parties?—A. I had no right. I will modify that. I do not know that it was an order; it might have been a request.

Q. Well, you spoke about an order, assuming command.—A. Well, we generally speak that way to that class of people down there. We are in the habit of ordering them.

Q. Whenever you come in contact with a negro you think you have a right to order him. That is undoubtedly the prevailing feeling, is it not?—A. I suppose it is.

Q. Suppose he is a freeman, and has his rights, would you have the right to order him any other way than you would a white man?—A. We most always order him, sir.

Q. Is not that the real foundation of this trouble, that you considered the negro not like a freeman, but as a slave?—A. I will answer that question if you will allow me to illustrate what I mean by going off the subject a little. I think under similar circumstances it has been proven that people who did not own slaves treat them worse when they are with them than those who did.

Q. I did not speak so much about that; but take the case of a single white man. You say the natural feeling among white men there is that they must command the negro?—A. I don't say that is always the case. I cannot speak for other people, but those are my feelings usually.

Q. That you have the right to command them, and not request them?—A. I always command them. I would not speak to them in the same way I would speak to a white man.

Q. Would you not threaten them under circumstances you would not a white man?—A. I have taken more from niggers in Danville than I ever would from a gentleman.

Q. Well, take a white man; he would do just the same; leaving out the word gentleman?—A. In my definition of the term, they could not exactly answer to that term.

Q. I mean do you call all white men gentlemen, and all negroes something else?—A. Not by any means.

Q. Then take a white man that you would not class as a gentleman, would you take from him that which you would not take from a negro?—A. I don't know.

Q. Then you are disposed to treat all you do not call gentlemen alike?—A. I would.

Q. Would you have treated a white policeman who came there in the exercise of his lawful authority in the way you treated that colored policeman?—A. If he had drawn his pistol in the way he did, being a white man, I would undoubtedly have protected the person of my friend as I did from that nigger.

Q. And would you have resisted the lawful officer of the government in the execution of his duty?—A. I can't see how you can say it is the execution of his duty to point his pistol to my friend.

Q. Might he not point his pistol to your friend and say, "Now put an end to this affray?"

Mr. VANCE. "If you don't stop this affray, I will murder you."

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is your view of it. Let us go on now. As to these two men, you say that Noel had given Lawson a thrashing?—A. A pretty good one.

Q. And Noel was satisfied. Where did Noel go then?—A. Noel went to wash his hands.

Q. He went inside of the building?—A. I don't know where he went. I heard that he went to wash his hands. He left us.

Q. You did not see?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see anything more of him during that affray?—A. During the affray, I did not.

Q. Now, what occurred there after he left?—A. After he left they rushed up and demanded to see the faces (to use their exact language) of the damned white man that did that shooting.

Q. Now, didn't you think that a reasonable request?—A. To coerce a man?

Q. No; to demand to see the face of the man who committed this violence?—A. I did; and thereupon I walked out and showed them my face.

Q. Very well; what then?—A. Then they said, "We are going to have our rights, shoot them, damn them."

Q. Shoot whom?—A. The white men that they had alluded to.

Q. Before you reached this point had not Mr. Taylor fired his pistol?—A. No, sir; he hadn't.

Q. Had you fired your pistol?—A. I refuse to answer that question.

Q. Then you decline to answer?—A. I do.

Q. That is the point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I ask you whether, in the midst of the affray, you did not point your pistol and fire?—A. I refuse to answer.

Q. On what ground do you refuse to answer?—A. Because I have a right—it is stated that I have a right to refuse.

Q. Because you have been advised by those in whom you confide that you have the right to refuse on the ground that it may criminate you. Is that the purpose?—A. I refuse because I have been instructed that I have a right to do so.

Q. Have you been so instructed here?—A. I heard the instructions here given out by Senator Vance yesterday morning during the course of this examination.

Mr. VANCE. And assented to by the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. All I desire is that the witness should claim his own right. He can only refuse it on one ground—that the answer would tend to criminate him; and I assume from the answer of the witness that that is the ground upon which he bases it. However, let us go on. After this affray, and after what occurred at that time, which has been testified to by other witnesses, you say the colored people showed a great deal of feeling. Were they mad?—A. A great deal, sir; so much so that I was so much in the fear of being shot into smithereens that I turned and told a friend of mine for God's sake to run to the opera house and bring my brother, or I would be killed before he got there.

Q. Did you not know at that time that you had six hundred men in the opera house within a short distance, all of whom were on your side?—A. I didn't think about them coming to my side; I thought there was an equal number of niggers outside. I think there were six hundred there.

Q. Very well; did you not know that you had six hundred men in the opera house?—A. Of course I know we had the lower floor of the opera house filled, because I had previously been up there.

Q. And they were within easy reach?—A. They were within easy reach.

Q. And you were fearful that these negroes were going to attack you?—A. I was fearful—as they walked up and said that they were going to do it—that they would kill me, Noel, and Taylor.

Q. Let me ask you if the positions had been reversed—if a black man had made this assault, would you not have been mad, and, if armed, would you not have killed the three colored men?—A. You would not have found a great crowd of white men in the South to be so cowardly as to overpower three men.

Q. And yet you felt at liberty to go armed to attack the one unarmed negro who was abusive. You felt justified in doing that. You say you felt justified, you three armed men, in going into this crowd to resent what you call an insolence; but you would not justify them in resenting the firing upon one of the number, the beating of another of them, by an attack upon you, and your arrest and imprisonment, and possibly your death—you would not justify that. If they were black men, would not you, standing by with fifteen or twenty associates, have felt that they ought to be punished, ought to be arrested, and ought to be imprisoned and punished according to law?—A. I guess I would have felt so.

Q. Then you do not blame the colored people for being angry, do you?—A. I do.

Q. You blame the colored people for being angry when they saw one of their number beat, and another shot?—A. I blame them for trying to overpower three men, as I thought.

Q. But that is upon the point that you had too few in number?—A. Exactly.

Q. But did not you know that you had six hundred within easy call?—A. What would they have done? We would have been killed in the instant before they could have gotten there.

Q. Then you think the colored people ought not to have got mad until you were an equal number? They ought to have kept quiet until the white people came in sufficient number?—A. I don't think they ought to try to overpower three men. I think they ought to have staid back and let us have fair play.

Q. How soon before you were reinforced by a number of white men, you three?—A. Well, sir, immediately the fight between Noel and the nigger had been concluded, Mr. Hatcher, Mr. Corbin, Mr. Peter Booth, all came up. Mr. Hatcher tried his uttermost to disperse them, promising them if they would disperse we white people would. Mr. Peter Booth walked out among them and said, "For God's sake disperse; don't you bring on a row;" and he also promised them if they would disperse that the white people would.

Q. How many joined you?—A. That was three.

Q. Did any one of those white people who tried to disperse the colored people suggest the propriety of the colored policeman arresting you and Mr. Taylor and Mr. Noel?—A. Did any of these white gentlemen suggest it?

Q. Yes.—A. I did not hear them suggest it. It was no time for arresting then. It was time to keep down a riot.

Q. They did not propose then to arrest you, who had violated the law?—A. Who did not?

Q. These other gentlemen who came to your rescue. They did not propose to arrest you?—A. They had no authority to arrest me. They were not officers.

Q. Why did they not advise the negro policeman to arrest you?—A. I don't know.

Q. In other words, they took sides at once with you, did they not?—A. I don't say that; but they walked out in the crowd, and Mr. Corbin insisted—had a conversation with them—to please go; every man to leave.

Q. Who did these gentlemen expect would fire in this crowd of negroes; the white men?—A. They expected it would bring in other white men, of course, and have a fight.

Q. Did any one of them advise the arrest of those who had violated the law—you and Taylor and Noel?—A. I don't think any such advice was given. I did not hear it.

Q. But the great object was to disperse the crowd of negroes who got mad, as you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were reinforced by how many before the firing commenced?—A. I think fifteen is all, to the best of my judgment. I do not think it exceeded twenty; certainly not over twenty.

Q. How many of these were armed?—A. I cannot say as to that.

Q. When did the firing commence?—A. The firing commenced soon after the fifteen got up there.

Q. Who fired first, so far as you know?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Well, do you know?—A. I think it was simultaneous. I think there was firing on both sides at the same time.

Q. On both sides?—A. I do.

Q. How many shots were fired by the white people, do you suppose?—A. I suppose fifty or seventy-five, may be.

Q. Did you see pistols in the hands of the colored people?—A. I did.

Q. How many of them?—A. I cannot say; I saw several.

Q. Can you name one of them?—A. I do not know but two or three negroes that were in the crowd.

Q. You cannot name them?—A. I cannot.

Q. You say you saw weapons in their hands?—A. I did; and I saw them pointed right at me, too.

Q. What business are you engaged in?—A. Tobacco.

Q. Then you were brought in contact frequently with the negroes?—A. I was; but the best negroes in town at that moment were employed in the factories, and these were, the most of them, the rabble of the town.

Q. You think they had some weapons, but you cannot say you saw one?—A. I know that I saw some.

Q. You saw weapons?—A. I did.

Q. You cannot name the men?—A. I cannot.

Q. Can you name the white men that carried weapons besides yourself?—A. I cannot name but one man in the world that carried weapons; that was Mr. Taylor, who accompanied me.

Q. Did you not see the others fire?—A. I heard the firing, but I was not looking at the others.

Q. Why did you and Taylor carry your arms there?—A. I had been carrying arms for three weeks, and I would like to tell you why I was carrying them; because of threats——

Q. Well, I do not care about that now. You had carried arms for some weeks?—A. About three weeks.

Q. Do you know why Mr. Taylor was armed?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you expect when you went there that the arms would be useful to you?—A. I did not, honestly. I thought as fifteen or twenty colored men ran up and complimented my action very much I would like to know them and I would like to call them by name. They complimented me on the manner in which I acted. They said, "You have acted the gentleman."

Q. Who said that?—A. The negroes.

Q. What negroes?—A. I do not know their names. I have told you I did not know but three or four in the crowd.

Q. Was that the whole crowd?—A. There were at least eight or ten rushed up and said that.

Q. There was not more than eight or ten of them; how is it you fired then right into the arms of these men who had been so kind to you; why is it that the white men fired into these people?—A. Some of these people were allowed to break through our little squad and pass through the office of Woolfolk & Blair, and pass through the back way.

Q. The good darkies were allowed to escape then through your crowd?—A. Yes, sir; those who did not come with hostile intention.

Q. Then you did not fire into the blacks until you had picked out the good ones?—A. We did not take any pains to pick them out.

Q. When, in the general firing which you decline to speak about, they fired upon the men that you describe, when, in the general firing, did you begin to shoot?—A. When I considered that they were shooting at me.

Q. Do you say that they shot at you first?—A. I say that I know they shot at me and I recollect looking right near the mouths of some pistols and they looked right large, looked much like cannon to me then.

Q. And you think they were firing at you?—A. I know that.

Q. Did you shoot then at the person you thought was going to fire at you?—A. I did not; I conscientiously avoided singling out any one individual.

Q. How many times did you shoot—I mean at this time?—A. I do not want to answer that question; I refuse to answer that.

Q. Did you give the command to fire?—A. I did not.

Q. You did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any one else fire?—A. I cannot say positively that I did; during the excitement I couldn't call anybody to mind.

Q. Well, the negroes dispersed; they all scattered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon; as soon as the firing commenced?—A. As soon as the firing commenced.

Q. And disappeared?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you after they disappeared were you appointed a special policeman?—A. I was appointed by a Readjuster mayor on the Monday following, and sworn in as his private guard.

Q. A special policeman?—A. As his private guard.

Q. Was your testimony taken before the committee of forty?—A. It was not.

Q. Were you there at the time?—A. I sent my wife away some time previous to the riot; I was afraid for her to stay in town, and I went up to see her during the time.

Q. You were away at the time of the election, were you?—A. I was.

Q. You were there when the testimony was taken?—A. I think I was there probably during the sitting of the committee. They thought my evidence not necessary, as Mr. Dance testified in substance to exactly what I would and others.

Q. I do not want to ask you about your private affairs, because I have to treat you courteously, but I will ask you if your wife went out because of the condition of affairs in Danville?—A. She went out from threats she heard from negroes; I sent her myself.

Q. You sent her outside of Danville?—A. I did.

Q. How far away from Danville?—A. I sent her to her home in Halifax County; twenty-five miles.

Q. How long was this before the riot?—A. A week or ten days.

Q. You then expected trouble, did you?—A. I did from the threats I was hearing from the negroes.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You were asked two or three times if you carried a pistol, but were not permitted to say why?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you can state why you bought a pistol and carried it.—A. Squire Taliaferro, a leading brindle-tailed Coalitionist-Republican, stated that a few citizens from North Carolina had come there and were trying to run the government of the people there, and he would have North Carolinians to know that they could not control them; and I had heard of a great many threats that they had been making about me and my brother, and we were advised of this by our friends. I never previous to that time owned a pistol in my life; I never owned one.

Q. You bought and carried it, then, in contemplation of your personal safety?—A. Yes, sir. My brother had been attacked upon the street by the negro Lewellen, who was in company with Hense Lawson, and had been threatened variously, and he insisted that I should carry a pistol also as well as himself to protect himself, and that is the first time I have owned a pistol in my life.

Q. You are a native of North Carolina, are you?—A. Yes, sir; I am proud to say so.

Q. You moved to Danville and settled there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Engaged in the tobacco business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Glass, a colored man, states that you and Covington and Oliver and one other man came up armed, and that you gave the order to fire, and that you four first fired?—A. That is false; I did not give any such order.

Q. Did not give the order?—A. No, sir; I did not, positively. At the time the firing commenced (I forgot to state it here), directly the firing commenced, I was in conversation with my brother in regard to myself. He had heard at the opera house that I had been shot and he was questioning me in regard to where I had been shot, and when I looked up the firing had commenced.

Q. That was after the fist fight?—A. Oh, yes; after the fist fight.

Q. Well, do you know whether the first volley that was fired from the pistols of any of the white people was shot in the air or not?—A. The first volley, I think, was fired right into the crowd, but afterwards there was a great many pistols fired into the air after they commenced to run, I mean.

Q. After they commenced to run you know a good many pistols were fired into the air?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To accelerate their speed; to disperse the crowd?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not with a view of injuring anybody unnecessarily?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Holland shot?—A. Yes, sir. If you will allow me to illustrate that I will be glad. This desk [illustrating] represents Woolfolk's office door. I was standing at the upper edge of that door in this position, in the gutter, right near the sidewalk. Holland was behind me, going up Main street, on the sidewalk. I being in the gutter, Holland, on the sidewalk, was raised up a little taller than I. The shot that was fired at Holland was aimed directly at my head, I am confident, and hit Holland in the back of the head. It is absurd to say it was shot by white men.

Q. What direction did the shot come from?—A. The shot came from [illustrating.] This faces Main street. This is down Main street. This shot came from out in the line of the negroes down beginning to the front of Voss' hardware store near the middle of Main street.

Q. Well, Glass also told us who shot him; he gives the name.—A. Who shot Holland?

Q. Yes. That either Hatcher, or you, or Oliver, or Covington, shot him?—A. I do not think Mr. Hatcher had a pistol at all, and Covington I know to an absolute certainty did not have a pistol, because during the firing he stood with my brother right by my side and said, "For God's sake give me a weapon," and reached down right between us and picked up rocks and commenced throwing them.

Q. Was that after Holland was shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any doubt about his being shot by the darkies?—A. None whatever.

Q. How many pistols did you see in the hands of colored men that day?—A. I saw some eight or ten, fully that many, pointing directly at us and daring Taylor and myself to show our faces; daring us to come out and show our faces, saying "This thing might as well be settled right here, right now," emphasizing that point.

Q. Now, Mr. Lea, I take it you are a man of reasonable firmness in danger; do you consider it was necessary for the safety of the white men on that sidewalk there to fire upon that crowd?—A. We would have been shot into smithereens if we had not. Not only we, but our women and children would have been murdered in their houses if we had given away one inch. If we had given away one inch our wives and sisters and our mothers would have been murdered at home, because the leaders of them had threatened it just a day or two previous to that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you hear that?—A. I did not hear it, but a man told me who I look on as reliable.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Well, Mr. Lea, I only asked for your opinion at that time, and now as to the necessity of firing upon that crowd?—A. I showed the fear that I had by sending to my brother to come and help me; that I was being overpowered.

Q. Mr. Sherman asked you if you did not know that five or six hundred of your friends were in that opera house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If there had been any attack made upon you and your associates there on the sidewalk by the negroes could you not all have been killed before the opera house men could have got out?—A. It usually takes at the opera, which has small doorways, I reckon from a half to three quarters of an hour for all of them to get out of the house.

Q. You think it would take at least thirty minutes to empty the house when it was full?—A. Fully, sir.

Q. Was there not time for aid from them?—A. There was no time for aid, nor the fact of their being there did not make me any more bold.

Q. Well, you feel then, did at the time and do now, that the firing there was necessary?—A. For the preservation of our lives, I do, sir.

Q. And that if you had retreated or given way it would have been disastrous in more respects than one?—A. Not only to ourselves, but to our wives and sisters.

Q. That was your honest opinion about it?—A. That was my honest opinion about it.

Q. And you say that after the colored people broke and run you knew that many pistols were fired in the air. Do you know that anybody did shoot any after they began to run?—A. I can say, sir, that I cannot imagine how an excited crowd of people could under any circumstances show as much mercy as they did; and even while they were on the retreat I heard two or three remark, "I am sorry that these poor negroes are killed; it ought to have been the leaders who put them up to it."

Q. What do you think was the cause of the unusual excitement there, more than attends other elections?—A. I think it was Mr. Sims's speech directly that caused that and the Coalition rule of the town. The first starting of this whole thing was the cold-blooded murder of one of our best citizens by the mayor of the town, who is a brindle-tailed Coalition Republican Readjuster.

Q. That was the first starting of the bad blood. Well, there was a good deal of misrule beside that, was there not?—A. Oh, indeed, there was.

Q. And outrages upon the feelings of the better class of the community?—A. I have seen negroes on the most prominent corner, where people generally assemble in our town, which is known as Wiseman's corner—I have seen negroes form a line there. I have seen this; did not hear it; seen it, and forced ladies to walk from the sidewalk out into the street, and after they passed turned and said, "Go, you poor white trash."

Q. All that got up bad blood?—A. Why certainly.

Q. Mr. Sherman asked you a great many questions tending to show that there is a feeling there not to regard the colored people there as entitled to the same protection of the law, and all that kind of thing. Is there such a feeling there that the colored man is not the equal of the white man in law, before the law, or is it a feeling that he is a social inferior?—A. Entirely the feeling that he is a social inferior.

Q. Is there any disposition in that community, or was there at the time, to refuse the colored man all his rights before the law?—A. No, sir; not that I have ever heard.

Q. It was not the rule of the colored men you objected to because they were colored men, was it?—A. It was on account of their ignorance and incapability; they did not know how, if they were disposed in the right direction, to administer the law right; they did not know how to do it.

Q. Were they not in the hands frequently of bad white men?—A. Indeed they were. In fact, the town government was run by the United States officials in the Government office. The president of our council was the revenue collector at Danville.

Q. Were there any members of the council who were also clerks and employés in the custom-house or revenue office?—A. I think a negro by the name of Payne was in the council also.

Q. Was he likewise employed at the revenue office?—A. Yes, sir. Betz held a position there, too.

Q. Was he likewise a member of the council?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of anything, directly or indirectly, tending to prove that there was a conspiracy or a combination to bring on this riot for the purpose of intimidating the negroes on the day of the election?—

A. I certainly do not.

Q. Did you ever hear of such a thing? Did you ever hear of such an attempt made in the council of your party or anywhere?—A. We were frequently exhorted to keep cool all the time and under all circumstances; keep cool.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please repeat the question and answer?

Mr. VANCE. The question was whether he knew anything directly or indirectly to prove a conspiracy or concerted design for the purpose of bringing about this row?

The WITNESS. And my answer was that we were exhorted frequently to keep cool; not to have a fuss; to take any insult that might be given rather than to have a fuss.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Do you know whether the people assembled at the opera house was armed that day or not?—A. I do not.

Q. Don't you know that in fact after the row began and the opera house people had come out in the midst of the excitement that they dispersed everywhere in search of arms?—A. I do, sir; I saw that.

Q. You saw them going to get arms?—A. I did, and I heard Colonel Cabell speak on the corner and heard what he said, and his words were these, "Men of Danville, you have always listened to me in times of peace, I exhort you now not to have anything more to do with these negroes, but to stop it." I cannot say that is verbatim, but that is as near as I can recollect it.

Q. And you were standing, when this firing began, as you have explained, near the door of Woolfolk & Blair's office.—A. I was at the right of the door.

Q. You could see into the door, could you not?—A. I was kept too busy to look in there.

Q. Well you could see in there?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you see anybody going in and out to get arms?—A. I don't recollect seeing anything of that sort; except young Dance with a double-barrel shot gun, and but for him, I believe I would have been killed before any firing was begun. Whenever he saw a negro raise a pistol he would bring the gun down, but I am positive he never fired that gun.

Q. You think his threatening attitude protected you?—A. Yes, sir.

(The committee here took a recess and reassembled at 2 o'clock.)

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Mr. Lea, when we took a recess I was asking you about the situation of Mr. Woolfolk's office, and where you were at the time with reference to the door of his office, which you answered. Now, I want to ask you if there were any arms, pistols, or cartridges in that office that day?—A. I spent the better part of the morning there, being a very intimate friend of the firm, and I saw no arms in the whole building. There is not a room in it that I don't have access to, and I very frequently go all over it.

Q. What kind of a place is it; is it a store or a place to keep goods or anything of that sort?—A. No, it is a real estate agency and insurance office.

Q. And there were no arms in there for sale or deposit or anything else that you saw?—A. I saw no arms whatever.

Q. Did you see people going in during the row and coming out, and arming themselves?—A. That is positively untrue, because Mr. Dance stood there in the door, and there was only one person I think went into the door at all, and that was Walter Withers.

Q. That is a colored man?—A. That is Walter Withers, a policeman, who was trying to flee through that way. I did not see anybody go there.

Q. During that row did you see any colored men between the wall and Woolfolk's house?—A. I think Withers was.

Q. Did you see Glass?—A. I would not have known him at that time; I do not know whether I saw him or not; cannot answer that question.

Q. Did you see any other colored men besides Withers?—A. I do not think I did. I think probably there might have been some who went through that office, and escaped out of the back door, and I think they did. I think some of them did escape through that back way, but I am positive that there were no arms in there except the gun which Dance held in his hands at the door; there might have been some concealed on the persons of parties, clerks of the establishment; I don't know about that.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You have some words and political phrases down there that I would like to understand. What do you mean by a "brindle-tail Coalitionist?"—A. I mean by that that in the absence of knowing what to call a certain political party—in other words, they sail under so many colors, I thought I would give them all of them, so that I would not miss it.

Q. That would include the Republicans and Coalitionists?—A. Yes, sir; I do not mean a straight-out Republican. They had at one time Democratic Readjusters, but of late Republicans, I think, have changed their colors; that is my understanding about it.

Q. Your party was the debt-paying party, was it?—A. The Funders, sir, I believe.

Q. Well, did you hear Squire Taliaferro say what you quote as having been said by him; did you hear him say that?—A. I think not; I did not state that I did; I think not.

Q. You stated simply that he said so; then you say that you heard he said so?—A. I heard he said so, and was advised by my friends that myself and brother were singled out, and had better go armed.

Q. You say he threatened you?—A. Threatened North Carolinians.

Q. And you were from what part of North Carolina?—A. Caswell County.

Q. What town?—A. I was not raised in any town; I was half way between Milton and Yancey.

Q. You got the impression that there was a prejudice against people from North Carolina in Danville from this reported declaration?—A. Well, sir, excuse the egotism in it; there was a prejudice in it because some of the best citizens in the town were from there. There was a prejudice against some of the best citizens.

Q. But you heard that Squire Taliaferro denied saying that?—A. I do not think I ever did.

Q. Did any one threaten your brother?—A. We were constantly told, myself and my brother, that they had singled us out; had to be careful; and I was frequently advised to send my wife to the country.

Q. What position does Squire Taliaferro, have in the party?—A. He was one of those brindle-tailed sort that run about there.

Q. You speak about the Republican party, &c., and the United States officials being an improper set of men; what United States officials were there that were improper men to be leaders?—A. They are improper because they had, in my opinion, no right to hold United States offices and bring the United States authority to govern municipal affairs.

Q. Who were the United States officers that you complain of?—A. Colonel Ralston, president of the council.

Q. Is not Colonel Ralston a respectable citizen?—A. So far as I know, he is.

Q. And a white man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he is a brindle tail. Well, why is that word applied, I want to get what it means. What do you mean by brindle tail?—A. I do not know sir, what I mean exactly, by it. In the absence of any other term that would suit them as well, I used that.

Q. It was a term of reproach applied by all Democrats to their opponents?—A. I do not know that I ever used it before in my life.

Q. Then it was not used?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that it was?—A. I think you are mistaken; I do not think I said it was used.

Q. If you say you did not, I will take your word for it, you are the one who is under oath?—A. I do not think I did, sir.

Q. I thought you applied this as a party term?—A. It was my own manufacture except I saw it used in California once, by old Father Evans, in his paper.

Q. Did not the application of such phrases to a large party that was for a long time in the majority in the State of Virginia tend to show that you yourself were very extreme in your opinions?—A. I think not. I simply applied that name because the party sails under so many colors that I really did not know what name to call them, and I therefore called them that in my vocabulary.

Q. Would you think it polite to apply these harsh words to the Democratic party because they change their opinions occasionally, and that they have done this and that; do you think that is exactly right?—A. They would have the same right to it. I do not think it would be wrong. We have been called some very hard names; I was called a worse name than that.

Q. If you hear a term applied to the Democratic party intended to reproach them you would think the person who applied it was a very bitter partisan.—A. I do not know that I would always think so, because in politics now they generally use a great many harsh things; accuse a man of stealing, even.

Q. I will ask you, as to Mr. Ralston, is he not a respectable gentleman?—A. I know nothing against his character.

Q. And Mr. Woltz.—A. I think he is a gentleman.

Q. Who are these leaders you wanted to have in the front line in case of firing?—A. I cannot especially say; Mr. Sims, perhaps.

Q. Well, don't you know that what Mr. Sims said was in reply to an extraordinary tract?—A. I did, of which I was one of the signers.

Q. Don't you regard that tract as a violent political document; an arraignment of a whole class of people?—A. I do not; I regard every word uttered in there as true from beginning to end.

Q. Who wrote that pamphlet?—A. I really do not know; the Democratic party is responsible for it.

Q. Does not that pamphlet itself tend to excite and array white men against the black men and to draw the color line, and was not that the purpose of the pamphlet to draw the color line?—A. Probably it might have been.

Q. Then you think that is all right. It is all right to draw the color line as was done in that pamphlet, to array the white men on one side and the black men on the other?—A. I do not regret that such is the case very much. It would be more fortunate for the colored race if they would divide, but as long as they vote solid the whites are compelled to do so.

Q. How would you prevent them from doing otherwise?—A. From voting solid?

Q. What efforts do you make to induce the negroes to vote the Democratic ticket?—A. By argument and any other fair means.

Q. Do you allow the negro an opportunity to make arguments on the other side?—A. Indeed we do; I have heard many a one speak.

Q. Do you think free discussion prevails or ever did prevail in Danville?—A. I know it.

Q. And yet when Mr. Sims, a candidate for senator, makes a speech denying the allegations contained in a manifesto of the other party you think that is a gross abuse of the liberty of free speech?—A. He did not go on to deny the allegations set forth in that circular, but he got up there—

Q. Did you hear him?—A. I did not.

Q. Then you cannot say?—A. It has been testified by others.

Q. If he had attacked the authoritativeness of that manifesto that you allude to, and not brought in individualities and personalities he would have had a right to do it, but he took them collectively and individually and said that they signed what was not true?—A. That it was a lie, and they were perjurers. I think that was decidedly wrong. I have heard Mr. Sims make a speech on the other side, and he was equally abusive when he was on the other side.

Q. That was much more pleasant, was it not?—A. I rather liked it better, I must confess.

Q. On the whole, then, it was because Mr. Sims had changed his views and was running on the other ticket?—A. It showed that he was an extremist on the other side; I simply brought that out.

Q. Then would you have punished Mr. Sims for his extravagance if he was in the Democratic party?—A. No doubt.

Q. Were you disposed to punish the party on this account?—A. No; but if Mr. Sims had been regarded as the equal of the gentlemen assailed he would most assuredly have been held personally responsible.

Q. Did not you say the origin of this excitement in Danville was Mr. Sims's speech?—A. I said that was the origin; it had a great deal to do with exciting the negroes.

Q. Who prepared this circular to which Mr. Sims was replying?—A. I could not answer that. The circular was brought to me and I read it and signed it. I think it was prepared by the Democratic party.

Q. Who was it addressed to?—A. To the people of Southwest Virginia, I think.

Q. Why did you address it to the people of the Southwest Valley of Virginia?—A. Because we wanted to acquaint them with what a taste we had of negro rule and Coalition rule.

Q. Are there more white people than black people in the Valley?—A. I never visited that section, and I don't really know.

Q. Don't you know, as a citizen, that the great number of the population of the Valley are white people?—A. I am under the impression that probably the majority of them are whites.

Q. Then was not this an appeal to race prejudice, to arraign the races against each other?—A. It was warning them against the most corrupt rule that any people were ever cursed with.

Q. And to arouse the prejudices of race against the party that you were resisting; I suppose that was the purpose?—A. I do not know what the purpose of the originators was exactly; I cannot speak for them.

Q. You stated that you expected that if you had not resisted the colored people there and fired upon them that your wives and sisters would be in danger?—A. I did, sir.

Q. On what ground did you base that opinion?—A. Upon the frequent reports that came to us that on the day of election while the white people and the darkies were fighting down town the negroes would kill the women and children on the outskirts of the town.

Q. And you believed those stories, did you?—A. I thought under the circumstances from the manner in which people had been murdered about there on the streets that probably there was danger of it. I sent my wife to the country in consequence of that.

Q. You were in the Confederate service, were you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, don't you know the fact that the white people of Virginia left their wives, their sisters, their grandmothers, and their children in the custody of these negroes and went to that war, when they were slaves?—A. Then they did not have a lot of people to come down there and incite them to deeds of violence.

Q. Don't you suppose that these negroes at that time knew that one of the issues of the war involved their freedom or slavery?—A. I suppose they did.

Q. Did you ever hear of any killing or murdering of women and children while these negroes had the power to kill them?—A. There were a few instances of that kind, but very few. They behaved well I will admit.

Q. Is it not a fact that the negro race is the most docile of the races of men?—A. But for the fact of bad leaders your assertion would be true.

Q. Who were the leaders that were bad?—A. These brindle-tails I allude to.

Q. Mr. Sims, it seems?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the other leaders that were going to carry this whole race into barbarism?—A. Mayor Johnson was one.

Q. He is the worst man. When was he elected mayor; is he a native Virginian?—A. He is a North Carolinian I am sorry to say.

Q. He was reared in the South then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he not a Democrat?—A. He is one of those fellows like those I have just described. You cannot tell what they are.

Q. He was a Democrat, then?—A. No, sir; he did not run on the Democratic ticket.

Q. Didn't he vote the Democratic ticket at the last election?—A. I have no knowledge whatever about that. I do not think he did.

Q. You say he was charged with murder, with a gross murder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he not tried and acquitted?—A. He was tried by a jury of eight colored men and four white people.

Q. He was tried and acquitted?—A. Yes; not by an impartial jury.

Q. Now don't you think the judgment of even a jury of that kind, of twelve men uniting in a verdict of acquittal, is as good as your judgment?—A. I do not think it is just to have eight of one party and four of another.

Q. Have you not seen hundreds of juries with all white men and no black men?—A. I do not think I have seen a jury since the war that has not had colored men on it.

Q. You have seen plenty that had eight white men on them, have you not?—A. No, sir; this is about the first jury, I think, I have ever saw that was not about equally divided; though I don't know much about court affairs, and don't attend courts.

Q. You think the eight negroes were too strong in their persuasive powers and carried over the four white men?—A. I think probably so.

Q. Don't you think, after all, that the verdict of such a jury is better than your opinion, when you did not hear the evidence? I will ask you if you think these white men were corrupt?—A. The majority of the people who serve—I do not know whether they were bad and corrupt or not.

Q. Well, they came to a conclusion different from what you thought, who never heard the discussion?—A. Yes, sir; they did.

Q. Is that the worst thing you can say of Mr. Johnson?—A. That murder?

Q. Yes, that he killed a man?—A. I do not think I can say anything which is worse.

Q. Now, did he do any worse than was done by the white men who fired upon the negroes upon the day of the massacre?—A. What we did was entirely in self-defense, and Johnson was not.

Q. But a jury said in that particular case that it was in self-defense, and the men who fired at the massacre never got a verdict of a jury in their favor.—A. Mr. Johnson was not tried to be overpowered as we were—two hundred to fifteen.

Q. Was he not attacked by knife and pistol, and was it not man to man?—A. I never heard he was attacked at all.

Q. Well, I do not want to go into the merits of that. You were not present at the trial were you?—A. Mayor Johnson's?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. I heard a portion of the evidence.

Q. And you think because a jury acquitted him it was a very bad jury and he was not properly acquitted?—A. I think it was rather unfair that they should have eight of one party and four of another.

Q. Then he is the leader?—A. He would be the leader if he was only intellectually qualified.

Q. Who are the leaders who lead these people so much astray?—A. I think the revenue officer is one of them.

Q. You are rather opposed to all officers of the United States interfering in elections at all, are you not?—A. I am not. I am opposed for Federal patronage to be used to carry municipal affairs; I do not think that is right.

Q. But this was a State election, as I understand, and you were all upon the same footing?—A. I am speaking of the rule. He was president of the city council.

Q. Was not Mr. Blair, a Democrat, chairman of the council?—A. He was at one time, but he resigned and Mr. Ralston was elected in his place.

Q. When was that?—A. I do not know the exact date.

Q. Now I want to know what these leaders did, because I would like to know what these leaders have done to lead these poor negroes astray; please answer that question?—A. Answer what?

Q. In what respect did these leaders lead the colored people astray?

You have only been able to give us the names of two you complain of.—

A. They were trying to array them against the best friends they had.

Q. That is the white Democrats. Well, did you not seek to array the white man against the black by your circular letter? Was it right for you to do that?—A. I do not think that circular could be construed in the forcible manner in which you put it. That circular is not against race or color alone; it is against Coalition rule.

Q. Now is not the substance of the whole controversy that you white people in Virginia—Danville, confine it to Danville—are determined that the negroes shall not enjoy their right to their vote and their right to the equal protection of the law?—A. Please put that question again; I did not get the first part of it.

Q. I will ask you if at the bottom of it all is not the strong prejudice of the white Democrats of Danville against the negro exercising his right to vote?—A. I do not think any such sentiment prevails, whatever.

Q. You are perfectly willing to let a negro vote just as he pleases and to talk as he pleases?—A. I am.

Q. And to discuss public questions?—A. I am.

Q. And has he done anything more than that?—A. He has threatened the lives of the women and children of our city, sir.

Q. That is, some loafers have threatened the lives of women and children, but did you ever hear any one do it? Are there not good decent people there among the colored people?—A. Some splendid ones.

Q. Well, you hold them responsible for what every blackguard says?—A. We do not hold them responsible; we feel sorry for their ignorance and attribute it all to their bad leaders. We do not hold them responsible. We feel their leaders are responsible.

Q. Bad leaders, and yet you are only able to name two bad leaders in Danville?—A. I could name several.

Q. I would like to know who they are and what they have done. Name some others, if you please.—A. Well, I might be excused from that on the same ground as Mr. Glass was. I might be in danger if I did name them.

Q. If you are in danger I will not ask you to risk your life, if you say you are in danger.—A. I say I might be in danger.

Q. But are you in danger?—A. I do not think I am very much in danger, yet a great many of my friends have warned me to be careful and not expose myself at night.

Q. Is not the danger that they feared for you growing out of the incidents of the 3d of November?—A. I told you this morning in my testimony that they had made threats prior to that occurrence.

Q. Well, let us go back to the question again. Suppose three negroes had attacked a party of white men in the same circumstances would not the negroes have been in danger, and would not they have had reasonable grounds to fear danger?—A. They never would have feared danger. They could not fear white men attacking them at night, they would do it face to face.

Q. Don't you suppose a mob would have arrested three black men under these circumstances and hung them to a lamp-post within half an hour?—A. Well, sir; I will ask you a question: Judge Blackwell was within 15 feet, judge of the corporation, why did not he cause an arrest to be made?

Q. That I cannot say?—A. Neither can I.

Q. If any peace officer was there and did not do that—A. He was a peace officer, and within a few steps of the affair and could have stopped it if he had come out.

Q. I will ask you whether in a somewhat similar case where three black men assailed and perhaps killed a white man a movement was not made to kill them, hang them, and whether the governor was not compelled to call out two companies of militia to prevent it?—A. I know nothing of that affair of my own personal knowledge; I was absent in Western North Carolina at the time of the occurrence.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You knew nothing of the insult to Noel, did you, personally?—A. At what time.

Q. At any time?—A. I did not hear the insult at all.

Q. You say you knew nothing of it?—A. Not of my own actual knowledge I did not hear it or see it.

Q. All you knew about it was what Noel told you?—A. Exactly.

Q. Now, did you think it necessary for you and Taylor to carry revolvers there to see fair play between these two men?—A. I had my revolver in my pocket at the time.

Q. Yes; did you think it was right to go there to protect Noel in the fight with a colored man?—A. I thought and in fact knew that if he was not protected he would be overpowered.

Q. Did you think it was right for you and Taylor to go there for the purpose of seeing that fight and to protect Noel if necessary?—A. I did think it was right.

Q. That is your opinion of the condition of affairs there that two friends have a right to go with revolvers for the purpose of seeing a fair fight between any other friend and a colored man?—A. At that time that was the condition of affairs there.

Q. And well knowing that you went there with the design of doing whatever was necessary to protect Noel?—A. From mob violence, I did.

Q. You apprehended mob violence, did you?—A. I had nothing to apprehend; but, then, they had been making threats for some time previously, and Mr. Sims' speech was calculated to excite them to that end.

Q. It was not this insult to Noel, then; it was the speech that Sims had made you went there to revenge; is that it?—A. No, I did not; I did not say that.

Q. Were you excited any when you went there?—A. I guess I was.

Q. You know you were, don't you?—A. Excited?

Q. Yes; you know you went there in a state of excitement?—A. I guess I did, sir.

Q. You left your post of duty up in the hall, and went out at Noel's request for the purpose of witnessing this affray between him and Lawson?—A. Yes; that is what I went with him for.

Q. There were three of you, wasn't there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that constitutes a mob, doesn't it?—A. I do not know.

Q. If three men go armed, with violent intentions, that is a mob, isn't it?—A. What would you consider the crowd that was coming down the street to meet us?

Q. I am not on the stand, and you are. Don't you know that three men going with purposes of violence, armed for that purpose, constitutes a mob in the State of Virginia?—A. I did not know it at the time, and don't know it now, except from what you say. If you say that is true I suppose it is. I am sorry to say I know very little of the law in the State of Virginia; have not been there very long.

By Mr. VANCE.

Q. Mr. Sherman put several supposititious cases to you; among others he said that no jury had passed upon your conduct whilst a jury had passed upon Mayor Johnson's killing. Has there not a jury passed upon it?—A. Most assuredly, sir, and complimented the action.

Q. The grand jury?—A. The grand jury, and complimented the action of the parties that were present, and on that jury was a negro who had run at one time for the senate against Major Hurt; an intelligent negro, the most intelligent, I reckon, in the town, and certainly the wealthiest negro in the place; he was on that jury.

Q. Mr. Sherman asked you if you did not think that the opinion of the jury in the Johnson case, who heard the evidence, was better than yours, who did not hear it; do not you think that the grand jury of the city of Danville, who heard the evidence and passed upon it, were better judges than Mr. Sherman, who did not?—A. I do.

Q. Well, that much is a set-off; now in relation to the dangers that the community feared there from the people about which you have been asked, was not there apprehension of secret burnings of houses, &c.?—

A. Apprehensions?

Q. Yes.—A. There were indeed strong apprehensions.

Q. Is not it the sentiment of the people of Danville and of the South generally, as far as you know, that if not excited to these things the colored people will do no harm and they are tractable and kind?—A. That is our opinion.

Q. But that under the influence of white men who keep hid they can be made to be very dangerous?—A. That is the true condition of affairs; we have no animosity toward the negroes.

Q. Now in old times, when these men did not meet the colored men of Danville, had there been any trouble there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is not the town a flourishing town, where all classes work together in making money and building up the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is a good feeling or has been until recently, hasn't there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Such has been my information; you say that is so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are obliged to attribute the changed conduct of the negroes to the leaders of the party?—A. To bad leaders, yes, sir; in fact, in managing our servants at home we find it very difficult, and one of them went so far as to tell us that things had undergone quite a change of late.

Q. You mean your domestics inside of the house?—A. Which went to prove that there was a change in them.

Q. The object of this circular, as you understood, was an appeal to the people of Virginia, especially the white people, for help against this rule?—A. Yes, sir; against the worst rule any people were ever cursed with.

Q. If that was designed and calculated to array the white people against the colored people it was nothing more than had already been done, was it?—A. By the other side; yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you if it is safe for a colored man to be a Democrat?—A. Senator Vance, certainly I, having even as much nerve as Mr. Sherman seems to think I have got, I, as a colored man, could not be induced to be a Democrat under any circumstances.

Q. Why?—A. I would be afraid of being killed. In fact, I know that colored men in Danville are in danger when they are Democrats.

Q. Don't they ostracize each other?—A. Ostracize; their wives threaten to leave them if they vote with the white people. They have got political organizations for every woman, called by the women the lodge, and they tend to keep the men straight, and a Democratic negro is no more safe in Danville than I would be among the Indians.

Q. You say, then, it is not safe for a colored man to be a Democrat in the town of Danville?—A. I do positively assert that fact.

Q. I ask you if white leaders of the party do not inculcate that sentiment, that they must not permit their own men to turn against their race?—A. Why certainly they do. In regard to its being safe for a Republican in our place, there is a Republican on my street, Mr. Wood, who seems to be as safe and socially liked on our street as any one. He is a Republican, though not a brindle-tail; they like him very much.

Q. Now I will ask you if the same ostracism or dislike is exerted by the Democrats toward the white people who turned against their race?—A. Not to the extent it is by the negro race.

Q. Don't cut him off; threaten him with violence, and array his wife against him so he cannot get lodging at home?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't do that?—A. No, sir; I never heard of their being refused lodgings on that account.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How many persons compose a grand jury in Virginia?—A. Twelve, I think.

Q. I will ask you whether this grand jury you refer to was not composed of but seven?—A. What grand jury do you refer to?

Q. The one that found there was no offense committed. I ask you if it was not composed of but seven persons?—A. I really do not know.

Q. I ask you if the following persons were not on the grand jury and also signed the report of the committee of forty: John G. Friend, J. L. Tyack, and George C. Ayres. I will ask you if they were not on the grand jury?—A. I recollect Mr. Ayres' name, foreman of the grand jury.

Q. Look at these names [handing witness a report] and probably you will recollect them; they are citizens. I will ask you if they are the names of the persons on the grand jury and to designate the colored man?—A. Preston Watkins is an influential colored man and a strong republican.

Q. Do you find the names of Friend, Tyack, and Ayres among those?—A. [Examining report.] Yes, sir; they are here.

Q. These three then were members of the committee of forty and had previously acted upon that subject?—A. They were.

Q. So that the grand jury was composed of seven, and three of these, among them the chairman, were members of the committee of forty that had already reported on this subject, and the other was a colored man whom you spoke of?—A. I do not know who this grand jury was drawn by; I don't know anything about the laws of Virginia.

Q. There is another matter I wish to call attention to. I see in an advertisement shown me that immediately after the riot there was advertised by Tyack, this same Tyack, shot-guns, pistols, &c., powder, Hazard powder, &c., for sale; is that the same Mr. Tyack, J. L. Tyack?—A. I never saw any such advertisement.

Q. Tyack, Doe & Co., is that the firm?—A. His advertisement, I guess, was previous to the riot, and I do not know that I ever saw this advertisement before.

Q. Did you ever see that published in the paper there? Just read that if you please. [Handing paper to witness.]—A. I will.

The witness read as follows :

[The Daily Register, Saturday, November 24, 1883.]

NOTICE.—Individuals and firms borrowed GUNS and PISTOLS of us during the evening of the riot. Some of them have failed to return them, and it was impossible in the rush for fire-arms to take a memorandum of the names of all the parties. We call upon our friends to refresh their memories and examine their premises, and if they should find any property of the kind here advertised not returned or properly accounted for to attend to the matter at once.

TYACK, DOE & CO.

Nov. 23-3t.

Q. This appeared in the paper after the riot?—A. I think I saw that at the time.

Q. Was that after the riot or before?—A. Those arms were borrowed; Mr. Johnson, mayor of the town, deputed my brother to take charge of two hundred men.

Q. Was that after the riot?—A. After the riot; he did it himself in my presence; I heard him tell him to get two hundred men to protect the town to the best of his ability, and I suppose this has reference to that; they borrowed arms.

Q. Each man got arms for himself?—A. A man would not go out without arms to protect himself, and they borrowed them of Mr. Tyack.

CHARLES D. NOEL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In the town of Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there for the last five years, except about eight months when I was in the State of North Carolina.

Q. When did you first see Lawson, the man whose name has been mentioned?—A. On the 3d day of November.

Q. Had you ever seen him before that?—A. I never had to my knowledge; if I had, I didn't know him.

Q. You had never any controversy with him, had you? I will ask you the question, because I want to call your attention to the fact in case we are mistaken, whether you did not see him the night before?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Nowhere?—A. Nowhere at all, sir.

Q. You had no previous controversy or quarrel with him?—A. None whatever.

Q. Or words?—A. None whatever.

Q. You did not know him by name?—A. I did not.

Q. Now state when you first saw him on the 3d of November?—A. After dinner. It was about half past 1 o'clock before I had had my dinner; that was during dinner hour for our town, as all our business men go to dinner at 1 o'clock.

Q. What occurred, when, and where?—A. I was passing down Main street very rapidly, and I passed two darkies; didn't know who they were, and after I had passed I came very near being tripped by one of the darkies whom I had passed by knocking my left foot; he came very near knocking my left foot from under me, and I thought that I was at least far enough from him not to be trod on by them, and I turned and asked, "What did you do that for?" or some such language as that, and he said, "I was only getting out of the way of a lady, and a white lady at that," in a very insulting tone. I says, "That's all right," and passed on about three paces, and the negro who was with him, this other darky who was with him, remarked it didn't make a damned bit of difference whether it was all right or not; that I couldn't do anything about it, and I turned to him and made some remark. I don't remember exactly what it was.

Q. Before you go any further, what did he mean by the first expression, "I am only getting out of the way of a lady, and a white lady at that;" did that refer to the charges in the circular of the Democrats that they would not give the way to the ladies?—A. Really I cannot tell you what it referred to.

Q. Was there a lady there present?—A. I didn't see. I was in a big hurry going down street.

Q. So far as you know, was that true that he gave way to a lady, and consequently had to crowd you?—A. I really cannot say; but I say I supposed it was true and passed on, and then some other man said it didn't make a damned bit of difference.

Q. That was the insult that you took offense at?—A. That was the negro that was with him; that is what I took offense at.

Q. What was there so terrible about that; you thought that that was an insult to you?—A. I took it as an insult.

Q. To you on account of your race, caste; you, a white man; you thought it a very ill-bred remark?—A. I did.

Q. And you took offense at that?—A. I did.

Q. Did you think he intended to insult you?—A. I did; his manner was more insulting than his language.

Q. He had no grudge against you, had he?—A. I suppose not.

Q. And had never seen you, probably?—A. Perhaps he had seen me. I had never seen him and didn't know him.

Q. And you took offense at that?—A. I did.

Q. What occurred then?—A. I turned and made some remark to him, I don't remember exactly what it was, and he said, I don't remember exactly what he said, but he said something; I don't remember exactly what he said and I don't know what it was, and I struck him and when I struck him both negroes struck me and pushed me from the sidewalk, pushed me into the gutter; in our streets the gutter is much lower than the sidewalk.

Q. Did he throw you down?—A. No, sir; he pushed me from the pavement, and when I recovered I started after them; they both made motion as if to draw a pistol, and I am not certain whether I felt to see whether I had a pistol or not, but I didn't have any.

Q. Did you have a pistol?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you in the habit of carrying a pistol?—A. No, sir; I bought one the day before.

Q. What was the cause of your buying a pistol the day before?—A. I wanted a pistol, and besides I had heard, or rather it was rumored around town, that there was going to be violence on the part of the negroes on the day of election.

Q. Then you anticipated violence at the polls on the day of the election?—A. I really didn't take any particular notice of it, but I wanted to be able to defend myself.

Q. Are you old enough to vote?—A. I am twenty-five years old.

Q. You say you anticipated trouble and bought a pistol to defend yourself?—A. I bought the pistol to defend myself.

Q. You belong to the Democratic party?—A. I do.

Q. You had the pistol on at this time, had you?—A. I had not.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live at my place of business.

Q. Where is your place of business?—A. I keep books for Mr. Jordan, commission merchant, tobacco.

Q. Where did you buy the pistol?—A. At Valentine's.

Q. He is a hardware man in that town, is he?—A. He is an auctioneer; keeps a general business place.

Q. Had he a large stock?—A. I did not take an inventory, sir, of his stock.

Q. Were there many pistols there?—A. Really, I could not tell. I only saw one and I purchased that.

Q. What occurred next; they pushed you off the pavement, as I understand?—A. Yes, sir; and a crowd gathered around.

Q. You, however, struck him first?—A. I struck him first; yes, sir.

Q. Didn't expect when you struck him to be struck back?—A. I did, as a natural consequence. When you strike a man you must expect to be struck back.

Q. Were you disappointed?—A. I was not, but I was rather disappointed at being struck by two men.

Q. Then your objection was not so much being struck by one as by two; still, you were not knocked down or overthrown?—A. I was not.

Q. Then you got up?—A. Yes; and the crowd gathered around, about twenty, and I saw it was no place for me.

Q. Where did you go next?—A. I went down to a dry goods store, on Main street, and purchased a buggy robe, as I expected to go to the country that afternoon.

Q. Did you get your pistol?—A. I did not.

Q. When did you get your pistol?—A. I didn't get any pistol.

Q. Didn't you have any pistol?—A. In the evening I had a pistol.

Q. Didn't you have a pistol during the riot?—A. Yes, sir; I had it in my hand.

Q. Where did you get the pistol from?—A. From my place of business.

Q. You went down from this preliminary fight and got your pistol at your place of business?—A. I went down to the dry goods store, purchased a buggy robe, went up home first to get my dinner, came down the street and got my pistol to go to the country, and was in my buggy going up street.

Q. Then where did you go from there?—A. I stopped at the opera house.

Q. What did you tell them there?—A. At first I went in the lower room, which is on a level with the stage where the meeting was being held, the Democratic meeting. When I got there I noticed that my friend Mr. Lea and Mr. Taylor were in the gallery; there were very few people in the gallery; as I went around up there, Mr. Lea perhaps beckoned to me. He said, "What about the difficulty you had before dinner?" I said, "It is a trifling affair. It don't make any difference now. I am going to the country, am anxious to go, and wouldn't have any difficulty on this day, of course, as there are a great many darkies on the street, and it's best we should not do anything about it at all. He bid me good-bye and I went on, got in my buggy, and started up the street, and as I got in front of the Arlington Hotel—I was passing in a rapid trot—and heard some one hail me, saying, "By God, here I am," in a loud voice. At first I could not see anybody; they hailed me again, didn't call my name or anything of the kind, but I turned around and recognized the negro I had a difficulty with in the morning.

Q. Who pushed you off the pavement?—A. Yes, sir; when I turned and looked him in the face he yelled in the same manner. I then drove back down to the opera house, and as I was passing back I glanced back to see if he was coming on. I noticed he was, and as he passed down the street he would touch up other colored men standing on the sidewalk marching on down with him. I went up in the gallery.

Q. All that he said was, "here I am."—A. "By God, here I am," as if to defy me. That is the way I took it.

Q. That is all he said, "here I am, by God."—A. Yes, if that is any satisfaction to you, that is all he said.

Q. I want to know how much it takes to disturb your equanimity.—

A. I went up to the opera house and told Mr. Lea that this rascal had insulted me again, and I wanted him to come and see fair play, and he and Mr. Taylor got up and walked down with me. I gave my horse to a colored boy standing at the opera house door, and as we passed up, I suppose three doors above the opera house in front of Averett's shoe store, I noticed this negro had stopped in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office with a congregation of others.

Q. Whom did you speak to in the opera house?—A. Taylor and Lea.

Q. Did you know that they were armed?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you then armed?—A. I decline to answer that question.

Q. You have already stated that you had been home to get your arms?—A. Yes, sir, I went down to the warehouse and got my arms.

Q. You have already stated that you got your pistol before?—A. I don't remember, but I did get my pistol when I went down home.

Q. I will ask you now, didn't you believe that these men were armed at the time?—A. I had no right to believe it.

Q. Didn't you know they were in the habit of carrying arms?—A. I did not. In other words—

Q. Hadn't you agreed not to fight with nothing but your fists?—A. In coming up the street, just as I was going on to tell you, I got in front of White's store, and turned and remarked to Mr. Lea "you all come. I am not going to attack them with anything but fists. All I want is fair play." I told them that in the opera house. When we got there, I remarked to the negro, "what did you mean by hailing me on the street," and he stammered out something as if to retract, but I collared him and struck him, and at the same time he struck me.

Q. You did not hear what he was saying?—A. I think his words were, "I didn't holler at you."

Q. You collared him then?—A. I struck him first, and then collared him. We both had each other on the collar.

Q. Then you didn't want an apology?—A. He had apologized to me once, and one apology in such a matter as that is enough.

Q. You did not wait for his apology; you did not wait to hear what he had to say?—A. I did not accept it, in other words.

Q. You didn't even know what it was?—A. Yes, sir; I did know what it was.

Q. What was it?—A. He said, "I didn't holler at you."

Q. He denied that he was halloing. Well, then you had the fight?—A. We had the fight.

Q. Were you hurt?—A. I was not.

Q. Were you hit?—A. He struck me somewhere about the arm.

Q. Were you bloody?—A. I had blood on my hands and clothes.

Q. Were you not bloody on your clothes or face?—A. May be I had a streak of blood on my face. I do not know where it came from.

Q. Whose blood was it?—A. I do not know.

Q. Your blood was not drawn in the fight?—A. It was not.

Q. How many times did you strike him?—A. Really, I could not tell.

Q. What occurred then between Mr. Taylor and the negro man?—A. While I was fighting this nigger Mr. Lea was standing on my right, perhaps, or rather up the street, and I was standing right in front of Ruffin & Woolfolk's insurance office, and Mr. Lea had a pistol in his hand, holding it up so [indicating]. He told them to stand back; it was a fair fight. At this time a nigger—I don't know who he was—I saw him grab Mr. Lea's pistol in his hand and they had a scuffle, and in some way both of them were thrown into the gutter.

Q. Well, they didn't both fall down?—A. Lea, I know, was down at one time, and he said something, I don't know whether he called on anybody or not; I was right busily engaged, as you will understand, and Taylor, may be, struck at the nigger with a stick. I am not certain whether he struck him or not, but the nigger fell, and he and Mr. Lea were on the ground at the same time.

Q. Taylor struck the negro down, then?—A. Struck the nigger as he fell.

Q. And then the shot was fired?—A. The shot was fired while they both had hold of the pistol. Of course I cannot say whether it was accidental or intentional on Mr. Lea's part to shoot.

Q. You don't know that?—A. I don't know that that took place on my right; I was engaged in front.

Q. Did the pistol shot take effect on any one?—A. I do not know.

Q. Cannot you tell whether the man was hit?—A. I do not know. I do not suppose it possibly could have been done, as they both had hold of the pistol.

Q. When you went to get your pistol, you say you intended to go to the country?—A. I did.

Q. Did you want the pistol in the country?—A. Yes, sir; I usually took it with me. I was in the habit of visiting the country.

Q. Did not you contemplate using it on that day in a controversy with Lawson?—A. Not in the least.

Q. What did you want it in the country for?—A. Well, I had friends who know that I go to the country, and usually practice while out in the country shooting at blacks.

Q. What do you mean; do you mean that merely as a joke, or merely as an extravagance?—A. Practicing at black marks is what we mean.

Q. You practiced shooting at a mark. Then you did not contemplate when you got the pistol the row that occurred?—A. Not in the least.

Q. What did you do after you had, as you say, beaten Lawson? What did you do then?—A. My friends came around and some one was asking me how was I hurt, or something of that kind. Capt. Joel Oliver came up and, if I remember right, he says, "How are you hurt?" I says, "I am not hurt at all;" says I, "Be quiet." He says, "All right." I turned to go and he went into the crowd and says, "Now, you all go off." He says, "Who was it you had the difficulty with?" I remarked to him, "I do not know." And about that time several of my friends came up and said, "Why, you are as bloody as you can be; come on over here; Joel Oliver is excited to death by reason of your being bloody," and my friends, generally, told me to go away; that my being bloody would create excitement, and it would be best if I should not be about; and so I went across the street to a store to wash my hands.

Q. When did you come out again?—A. While I was up on the second floor of the store, in an office on the second floor of the store, and washing my hands, I heard the report of the shooting and ran to the window, and when I got to the window the darkies were going one way and the whites were on the sidewalk. I then ran down the steps, and as I ran into the front door of this store some one ran over me and knocked me out of the way, and when I recovered Mr. J. G. Miller, sr., I noticed, was locking the door on the inside.

Q. Did you fire your pistol from the house?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you fire your pistol on that occasion?—A. I did not.

Q. I will ask you if you are a member of the Danville Grays?—A. I am.

Q. Are you an officer of that company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you turn out with the Grays to keep the quiet?—A. I did.

Q. I will ask you if you were placed on duty?—A. I was placed on duty as a guard, ordered out by the city sergeant.

Q. Then the peace and safety of your good town was placed partly under your command?—A. Certainly it was, and I endeavored to preserve it to the best of my ability.

Q. And you do not feel conscious then that you are the cause of the death of these men?—A. I do not.

Q. You think that man that said, "By God, I am here;" you think he is the man?—A. I have no right to think anything about it; you can think as you like.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Did you see any colored men have weapons?—A. Really, sir, I cannot say whether I did or not. I ran to the window, but I could not tell; the crowd was very much mixed and I could not tell which it was. I saw pistols in the hands of white men after the shooting was over.

Q. I was interrupted for a moment, but I understood you said that after the fight with fists between you and Lawson that you retired to the store to wash yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the firing took place while you were washing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go out on the street again?—A. I did not until the firing was all over. I went to go out of the house and I was knocked back, and when I recovered myself the door was closed.

Q. With you inside?—A. With me inside.

Q. You did not fire your pistol then on anybody?—A. I did not.

Q. Who knew that you were going to attack that insolent negro man beside your two friends that you had with you?—A. No one else that I know of. The Supreme Being might have known, but I suppose no one else did.

Q. I mean who of the people of Danville?—A. No one at all.

Q. There was no design on your part or on the part of others to produce that row?—A. Anything of that kind was entirely foreign to my nature.

Q. He had insulted you twice?—A. He had insulted me twice.

Q. And you wanted to take a little revenge on him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did so with your fists without using any other weapons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your friends went along to see fair play?—A. My friends went along to keep the others off. I remarked to them when we were within about thirty paces of where they had stopped that I would not use anything but my fists.

Q. Was the presence of your friends necessary; would the other negroes have interfered between you and Lawson?—A. You can judge that best yourself by the difficulty in the morning, when they both attacked me.

Q. It is your opinion that they would have interfered if your friends had not kept them back?—A. It is.

Q. What do you know about the firing of the pistol in the hands of Lea?—A. All I know is that I recognized, or rather saw, Mr. Lea and a nigger both on the ground at once.

Q. Scuffling?—A. Scuffling, and that they both had hold of the pistol and it was fired.

Q. While you were present, before you had gone, were Mr. Booth, Mr. Corbin, Captain Oliver and others trying to get the colored people to disperse?—A. Captain Oliver was trying to get them to go off when I left to wash my hands, and Mr. Booth, I think, had just come up about the time that I left.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. When you invited Mr. Taylor and Mr. Lea to go from the opera house out with you you did not know that any collection of colored men were there, did you?—A. I did; I saw them coming down the street; saw this nigger first gathering his crowd; saw this nigger touching them up.

Q. How did you know that it was his crowd?—A. Because they were as black as ink. That crowd always go by themselves.

Q. You call them niggers?—A. I do, and it is very appropriate.

Q. You regard it so. Then you were really going to take your revolver out in the country to practice firing at a mark?—A. Yes, sir; that was my intention.

Q. Have you ever done it before?—A. Yes, sir; I have done it before and have since.

Q. You only had it two days?—A. I had a friend whom I roomed with who owned one. I didn't own one before. I never owned one before.

Q. You practiced with another white man then. When was that firing at a mark with a pistol?—A. Previous to that.

Q. How long before?—A. Really I cannot tell you; oftentimes.

Q. You had become an expert shot you thought, hadn't you?—A. Well, in case of emergency, I might manage to hit the side of a house.

Q. Did you ever shoot at a negro's gate-post?—A. I never did.

Q. You have heard of such occurrences, haven't you?—A. I never have.

Q. Who was the man you practiced with?—A. His name was Daily.

Q. Where does he live?—A. In the town of Danville.

Q. What is his business?—A. Hardware clerk, with the firm of Tyack, Doe & Co.

Q. Where you bought your revolver?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did you buy yours?—A. At Valentine's.

Q. Which kept the largest stock?—A. Tyack, Doe & Co. keep a hardware stock exclusively, and Valentine keeps an auction house and general merchandise.

Q. But which keeps the largest stock of pistols you cannot state?—A. No, sir; I cannot.

Q. How long had you known of their keeping them for sale?—A. I had known it that day, because I met Mr. Valentine and asked him if he had any pistols, and he told me that he had. I didn't know before that he had pistols at all.

Q. You were going out in the country alone to practice on this occasion?—A. I was.

Q. You are sure it was not the insult to you that caused you to get your pistol?—A. That I went to the warehouse to get it; yes, sir.

Q. Did you go to the country?—A. I did not.

Q. Why not?—A. Because my captain called me to duty; told me to fall in as a member of the company.

Q. You went at once on duty?—A. I did.

Q. Did you have your revolver there or have some other weapon?—A. I had my revolver in my coat pocket here [indicating], and also a musket and a sword, perhaps.

Q. A loaded musket?—A. The muskets were not loaded.

Q. They had bayonets on?—A. They did not; the bayonets were in the scabbards.

Q. Had you the means of loading?—A. I had.

Q. Do you know where the cartridges were procured?—A. Really, I cannot tell you. The captain furnishes them; we have them in the armory.

Q. How many do you keep there?—A. We only keep a very small quantity.

Q. Enough to keep the peace for one night, I suppose? How many guns do you have there?—A. We have fifty guns.

Q. How many members of your company?—A. We have now one hundred and one members.

Q. So you are sometimes half of you without guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't they carry revolvers?—A. I really cannot tell.

Q. You don't know anything about that?—A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. How many members did you have at the time of this occurrence?—A. We had about sixty-five.

Q. Who is your commissary?—A. Our commissary is H. A. Ferguson.

Q. Was then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He can tell more about the arms and ammunition, I suppose, than you can?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had your company been in existence?—A. That company has been in existence since before the war, "the Danville Grays."

Q. You didn't belong to it then?—A. Of course I didn't.

Q. How long did you say you had been in Danville?—A. Five years.

Q. Where did you come from?—A. I was in the county of Pittsylvania; the same county in which Danville is situated.

Q. You have been serving then five years as clerk in a store?—A. I have been serving as a clerk in a tobacco warehouse.

Q. And was in that service up to the time this occurred?—A. Certainly eight months of the time I was in business in the State of North Carolina.

CHARLES G. FREEMAN sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Some twenty-odd years.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I have been a merchant there, and farming, and a policeman awhile.

Q. Were you a member of the Danville police on the 3rd of November?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What are your politics?—A. I am a Democrat.

Q. If you saw any of this occurrence, I would like to have you go on and state just what you saw ; give as accurate a recollection of it as you can.—A. I was on duty that day and I went to the court-house at 3 o'clock court. I saw some parties running down Main street, and as I came out from the court-house I mentioned to the chief of police that I would go down on my beat. He said, "all right, go ahead." When I got out in front of the court-house you could see them running down. I was right at the head of Union street ; right there at the court-house ; I could see parties running down, men and boys, and I met a little boy who says, "where is all the police." Says I, "aint there any on Main street?" says he, "they are fighting over there like tigers ;" says he, "they want you over there ;" says I, "where are the police on that beat?" he says, "they could not find him." I told him to go on and tell Mr. Hall, the chief of police at that time, to come on with the police out there as quickly as they could get there. I blew my whistle and went on through the market, and went on up where the crowd was assembled. When I got up there the colored people were all out in the middle of the street like facing the sidewalk and the whites were on the sidewalk.

Q. What was that crowd of colored people composed of?—A. How large?

Q. No, I asked for the character of the crowd ; whether there were men, women, and children?—A. There were no women ; I didn't see any women.

Q. Men and boys?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many should you say?—A. Between two and three hundred, I should say, of colored.

Q. How many whites?—A. Some forty or fifty whites, I reckon, on the sidewalk, as nigh as I can guess. I couldn't say positively, but that is as nigh as I can guess.

Q. That is the state of things when you reached the spot?—A. Yes, sir, pretty much.

Q. Now, what occurred?—A. The two colored police were standing out in the crowd with the colored people. I walked up the gutter and called to Walter Withers and Bob Adams, and said, "Why don't you all disperse this crowd or help to do it." Bob Adams, the other colored police, was on Main street that day ; that was his beat. He says, "Mr. Freeman, we can't do nothing ; we might just as well dart straws against the wind." I walked up and down and tried to prevail upon them, and asked them to disperse, If they did not I was afraid there would be trouble ; and says I, "Now, you all go to your places of business, where you belong." Several of them stepped up to me and said that they did not intend to do it ; that they had been mistreated, and were going to have their rights before they left there. Said I, "Just hold on a little while and before you leave here you will get them"—just that way—and sure enough I had not walked down five steps before they fired.

Q. Fired from where?—A. From both ways. One colored man, I don't know what his name was, had an ivory-handled pistol sticking out of his vest pocket.

Q. How many shots were fired?—A. I declare I don't know how many ; they were fired on both sides ; a cross-fire.

Q. Did you see any of the colored men except that one have a pistol?—A. Oh, yes ; I saw lots of them.

Q. Did you see how many were killed?—A. There was one killed down there on the market ; corner of the market. He fell there, I suppose. There was where they found him.

Q. A white man or colored man?—A. A colored man; and then two others there about the Arlington, corner of Main and Union; somewhere there.

Q. Colored men?—A. Yes, sir. He was not dead when they went to him; they had him taken up and carried off. There were three.

Q. Were there not more than three killed that day?—A. That is all that were killed there. If there were more killed, I don't know it.

Q. Haven't you heard there were more killed?—A. I have heard there were, but it was just talk—rumors.

Q. There is a report that seven were killed, or that seven died?—A. I did not see but three.

Q. Did you say anything to the white people about dispersing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they say?—A. They said they would disperse if the niggers would.

Q. Didn't they say they would not without?—A. They said they were not going to leave until they left, and the negroes swore they were not going to leave until the whites.

Q. You thought it was a hard place for a policeman?—A. It was a hard place for me.

Q. Can you name any negro you saw with a pistol that day?—A. Yes, sir; David Lewellen, or some such name.

Q. Where does he live?—A. I haven't seen him since that riot. He left that night, and has never been seen since in Danville; he went off on the train; I heard he was in New York.

Q. Did he use his pistol?—A. He run; well, there is a whole lot of them that run.

Q. Did he use his pistol?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. What, when he was running?—A. When he was running he would whirl on his heel and fire at the crowd.

Q. That is, as they fled; that is, they fired back at the whites, and the whites stood their ground; they didn't retire; they kept firing, didn't they?—A. They fired; I don't know who fired the first shot; they were shooting; I don't know which fired the first shot, the whites or the blacks.

Q. Who did you see fire among the whites?—A. I didn't see any particular one of them fire.

Q. Did you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can you name any of the whites?—A. They were shooting cross-ways, and I was trying to get out of the way of the shooting as best I could.

Q. You are unable, then, to state who fired first?—A. I am unable to state who fired the first shot.

Q. Although you were right there between?—A. I was right between and I was right below, trying to disperse them, and the whites were up behind me like, right in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office.

Q. Did you see any colored men fire until after they started to run, when they shot back?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any one fire until then, until this crowd ran, then they would whirl and fire.

Q. Well, after they started to run, didn't the whites keep firing at them?—Oh, no; they didn't fire so many times, I don't think.

Q. Well, they fired some, didn't they?—A. Oh, yes; it was a pretty warm time around there for a little while.

Q. How many shots do you think were fired by the whites, about?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Well, you have some judgment about it?—A. Well, two hundred shots; I would not say positively.

Q. What kind of weapons were they, or didn't you see them?—A. Well, I saw one man with a double-barrel shot-gun; holding it up that way. [Indicating].

Q. Well, he didn't fire the two hundred?—A. Oh, no; but I say I saw that one; I did not know who he was.

Q. You do not know whether he fired?—A. No, sir; I did not see him fire.

Q. Now, the colored people all went away, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir; they got away as quick as they could.

Q. The whites remained?—A. They fought along up towards the Arlington; went up that far.

Q. They followed the colored people?—A. They went on up.

Q. Firing at them as they went along?—A. They went that way; I did not go.

Q. Didn't they fire?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. How far did they follow them?—A. That was all; from Woolfolk & Blair's office up to the Arlington.

Q. How far is that?—A. It is about 50 or 75 yards I reckon; a hundred may be, as near as I can recollect.

Q. Do you know anything about that circular that was issued shortly before election?—A. The circular that was to come and vote?

Q. No; a prior circular to that. Do you know anything about that circular? [Handing a copy of circular entitled "Coalition Rule in Danville" to witness.]—A. [Examining circular.] Well, sir, I know all these people here. I issued some circulars, that is, carried them around the evening before election.

Q. No; I am speaking of this circular.—A. I don't know that I do.

Q. Don't you know that it was largely circulated about there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say you don't know of the circulation of that a few days before this riot?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect now.

Q. How long had you been a policeman?—A. About fifteen or sixteen months.

Q. You have been removed since the election, haven't you?—A. Oh, yes; I was put off the force the first of January.

Q. What is the population of Danville?—A. It is some 12,000 or 14,000 inhabitants, I think, as nigh as I can say.

Q. And you have been a policeman there about fifteen months?—A. Fourteen or fifteen months.

Q. Have you ever had any occasion to suppress a riot of colored people before?—A. No, sir; not since then.

Q. Not since you have been on duty?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were acquainted with the markets there, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well acquainted with them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the health officer?—A. Dr. Irving.

Q. Is he a Democrat, too?—A. I don't know what he is; I don't know what his politics are. I think, however, he is.

Q. Now, I will read you this paragraph from the circular to see if there is any truth in the statement:

The scenes about this important and attractive institution [that is the market, attractive in all cities] will give any person visiting the town a fair idea of the general state of the government under the negro rule. The market, once occupied in all its stalls by polite white gentlemen, with their clean white aprons and the most enticing meats and vegetables upon their boards, is now the scene of filth, stench, crowds of loitering and idle negroes, drunkenness, obscene language, and petit thieves.

Now, do you say that was the case in Danville during your service as a policeman?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is a little overdrawn, is it not?—A. That is going a little too far.

Q. Did the board of health ever have to interfere with the market, to your knowledge?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Q. During the whole time you were in the service?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, I will read you this paragraph :

The police court of the town is another scene of perpetual mockery and disgrace. There the most active justice is a young negro named Jones, who first became famous by seducing a girl under promise of marriage, and was only saved from conviction upon indictment by the evidence of his partner in a junk-shop, who swore that he had had criminal intercourse with her before Jones. This court, which, before the negro regime came into power, was only open a few hours every morning, is now practically open from morning till night, and nothing but actual observation can convey the least idea of the travesty of its transactions. Malice and partiality, whenever there is a motive, and ignorance, in its absence, are the rules of decision.

Is that a correct statement?—A. Well, there has been some little partiality shown towards different persons.

Q. Well, is that, in its general features, a true statement ; exceptions, of course, occur to all rules ; but is that a fair statement of the condition of things while you were a policeman?—A. Well, there is a portion of it. They do not keep the mayor's court open all the time, but they do from 9 till 3.

Q. There was a necessity to keep it open all day, wasn't there?—A. But I will say that Jones was smarter than some they had on there as justices. I will say that he was about the best judge of law of any magistrate they had.

Q. The colored police justice?—A. That is Jones ; yes, sir.

Q. What are his politics?—A. He is a Coalitionist, of course.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. It was true that he had that character attributed to him, is it not? There were serious charges made against his character, wasn't there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say he is the best one of the three?—A. Yes, sir. At the time he was elected he tried to inform himself, and he tried to do his duty as near as an officer could, I think. In fact he got pretty near all the business.

Q. You say the statement of the condition of the market-house was a little overdrawn?—A. Yes, sir ; I think so.

Q. It was, though, very much changed for the worse to what it used to be?—A. Yes, sir ; right smartly changed, but not as badly as that.

Q. It was overdrawn?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But it was much changed to the worse from what it used to be?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you saw plenty of arms in the hands of colored men that day?—A. I certainly did see plenty of pistols ; some fifteen or twenty.

Q. What is your opinion now, as a man of reasonable firmness, about the necessity of that crowd on the sidewalk defending themselves. Do you think they would have been damaged if they had backed out in any way?—A. Well, I don't know. An officer never talks much, you know, and I never have much to say ; but it looks so ; they came right up ; I just could walk between them.

Q. Had they crowded right up with their backs to the wall of the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could they have got away?—A. Only by going up or down the street. That is the only way to get away; but I got back in the houses.

Q. You say they proposed to go away if the others would?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the negroes refused, and then the white men staid?—A. They staid; they would not go. And the whites said, "Make them disperse and we will disperse;" and the others said, "We aint going to disperse." Joel Oliver was standing by me when I was trying to disperse them. I didn't see the fist fight. Mr. Noel and Mr. Lawson had the fist fight.

Q. Did you hear anybody give the order to fire?—A. No, sir, I didn't hear that.

Q. Was there any other cause for your discharge, of which you are aware, except that you held your appointment under the Readjusters?—

A. I don't know what the cause of it was. I have never heard that there were any charges against me at all.

Q. Don't you believe that to have been the cause?—A. I don't know; I could not say positively whether it was or not.

Q. Is it not a fact that the offices of the State have been taken away from the Readjusters as far as could be?—A. I don't know.

Q. Has Jones been removed?—A. Oh, no; Jones is still holding his office.

Q. Is he an elective officer?—A. Yes, sir; he is elected by the people of the town.

Q. By whom were you appointed?—A. We were elected by the council. The council elects the police officers.

Q. And Jones was elected by the ballots of the people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had the same authority, of course, as a police officer to disperse the whites as you had the blacks?—A. Of course I tried to get them both to disperse.

Q. And when you told the whites to disperse they said they would not go unless the colored men did?—A. They said if the colored men would disperse they would.

Q. You understood that as being the position they took, that they would not disperse unless the colored men did?—A. Oh, yes; colored men came up and said they had been mistreated, and were a going to have their rights.

Q. Now, the whites were not obliged to follow the colored men, and fire on them, were they?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, they followed them, didn't they?—A. They didn't have far to go; there was a big crowd on both sides.

Q. They pursued them as far as they could until they got away?—A. They left them, and were on the sidewalks.

Q. They didn't keep in line there?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. Did I understand you to say in your first statement that the whites pursued the blacks?

Mr. LAPHAM. He said that.

A. I said they were strewn from the Arlington down, pretty much. The whole of Main street was full.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Full of what?—A. Colored men, and some forty or fifty white.

Q. I did not understand you to say in your first examination that the whites pursued them?—A. Oh, no; I don't say that.

Q. I thought you didn't say that. The colored men as I understand you to say continued to run?—A. Continued to run and whirled on their heels and fired.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Didn't the whites continue to fire upon them as they run?—A. The firing didn't last, it didn't look like to me more than a minute or two minutes.

Q. But then they fired after they run. You know by the reports of the pistols, of course? You stated to me that the whites followed, didn't you?—A. No, sir, I didn't. If I did I did not aim to.

T. J. CORBIN sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. North Danville.

Q. How far is that from Danville itself?—A. Just opposite, across the river.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. About thirty years.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Leaf-tobacco dealer.

Q. Were you in Danville at the time of this riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the first you knew about the violence that day?—A. The first I knew was the fight between Mr. Noel and Hense Lawson. I was going down to the opera house and somebody hallooed fight. I was opposite Nicholas's saloon, and I looked up the street and saw them fighting, and started up to where they were. The colored people began to run there very fast and as I got there Withers, a policeman, and, I think, Adams were there. When I got there Withers asked me to assist him in trying to get the colored people to disperse. They gathered very rapidly and a few whites and myself went out into the street among the colored people and I appealed to them and tried to get them to disperse and go away; did all I could, but I could not do anything with them.

Q. Did you see any one fire?—A. No, sir. I saw shots fired when the firing commenced; it was all over in a minute—well, it was not a minute. When I looked back I saw hands this way [indicating], and pistols seemed to be firing in the air. That was at the commencement, and I thought at the time it was done to try to intimidate the colored people and get them to leave.

Q. I didn't ask that; it was intimidation undoubtedly. Did you hold an office at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you armed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you have?—A. I had a pistol. I had been to Richmond to the fair, and had just got back that morning from Richmond, and hadn't been home.

Q. Did you shoot?—A. No, sir; I never drew the pistol at all.

Q. Did you see any white men shoot?—A. I say I saw white hands—I could not tell who it was, but I saw pistols pointing up and firing in the air; but who it was I could not tell, because I was surrounded by colored people.

Q. Did you see any black man with a pistol?—A. I only saw one.

Q. Who was that?—A. I didn't know.

Q. Was it a white-handled pistol, do you remember?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you see him fire?—A. No; I did not. I don't think he fired at all. If he fired I did not know it.

Q. He was right there with the colored people, wasn't he?—A. He was right there with me. I was talking to them trying to keep them quiet.

Q. And he was just surrounded by colored people?—A. Yes, sir; I was among them.

Q. That gave you a good opportunity to see?—A. At the lower part of the street it did; but at the upper part of the street I could not see.

Q. You only saw one man?—A. I only saw one man with a pistol.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You didn't see anybody above?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, judging from the reports of the pistol shots, could you tell whether it was from one side of the street or general firing?—A. I think it was general. I could not tell from where I was.

Q. Could you see the flash and smoke?—A. Only those, as I tell you, that were fired up in the air.

Q. Who fired up in the air?—A. I could not tell. As I told you, I was surrounded by colored men.

Q. Wasn't that first volley fired in the air?—A. When it commenced, it was just as rapid as could be until it was all over, and I could not tell who was firing, except I saw pistols pointing up in about this direction [indicating]. I could see the hands, but could not tell who it was. I thought it was done to intimidate; to get people off the street.

Q. You thought it was done to clear the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What effort did you make to get the people to disperse?—A. I went among the colored people with this colored policeman, Withers, and appealed to them to go away; told them they were liable to bring on trouble.

Q. What did they say to that?—A. They would not listen to me at all. He did his best and I did mine.

Q. How many colored people do you think there were there?—A. I should estimate the crowd at about two hundred and fifty.

Q. How many white people?—A. I reckon at the time when I went out among the colored people there must have been fifteen or twenty whites. I left them and went out among the colored people.

Q. Now, you say they would not listen to you at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they appear to be angry?—A. They appeared to be excited.

Q. Were they pressing towards the white people?—A. Yes, sir; they seemed to be excited—the mass of the people. There was one or two colored men there. While I saw them, I did not know them. One of them particularly was urging the colored people on.

Q. Urging them on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect what he said?—A. I appealed to him to leave the street, and he said if it had to come it was just as well to fight it out now as any other time.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. If it had to come?—A. He said if it had to come it was just as well to fight it out now as any other time. I appealed to him and tried to get him to leave the street; and so did Withers.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Well, Mr. Corbin, what do you say now about the condition of these few white men who were on the pavement. Was it necessary for them to use weapons for their own safety, do you think?—A. I think so. There was a large number of colored men who were excited, and I think I should have done it if I had been on the sidewalk.

Q. You think that they did not display an unnecessary recklessness of human life by the using of weapons, then?—A. No, sir.

Q. After the colored people began to run, did you notice whether they ceased to fire at them, or not?—A. There were a few shots fired up above, between me and the Arlington; a very few. It was all over in a minute. I do not think there were over a hundred or a hundred and twenty shots fired.

Q. Have you heard anything of any intention or design on the part of the white people there to provoke a difficulty?—A. No, sir; I had just gotten home that morning.

Q. How long had you been absent?—A. A week.

Q. Do you know of any intention or design among the white people to carry the election by intimidating the colored people?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never heard such a thing discussed in your club meetings, or anything of the sort?—A. No, sir.

Q. To what did you attribute the unusual excitement in the city more than an ordinary election?—A. Well, when I arrived home on Saturday morning I attributed it to Colonel Sims's speech.

Q. You heard of it?—A. I heard of it. I didn't hear the speech. I got home Saturday morning. I was told about the speech. People seemed to be very much excited about it.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. This paper [handing copy of the circular entitled "Coalition Rule in Danville" to witness] is addressed to the citizens of the southwest and valley of Virginia. What portion of the State does that description embrace?—A. Southwestern Virginia, I suppose.

Q. The valley of the Shenandoah River?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you have answered the question that you think the white men were called upon to fire into the crowd of colored men there.—A. No, sir; I didn't say that.

Q. Well, Senator Vance so understood you?—A. I said this: That if I had been in the position of the whites, with the colored people advancing on them, I probably would have done it myself.

Q. You put an "if" in. Now, you only saw one colored man with a pistol. Now, what danger was there to the whites?—A. As I told you before, the firing was above me. I was in the lower part of the crowd.

Q. Did you see any weapons of any kind?—A. I only saw one.

Q. They had no sticks or stones, or anything with which they could commit violence?—A. No, sir; I only saw one colored man with a pistol.

Q. You don't know whether the firing above was from the colored people or the whites?—A. I suppose from both. I could not tell.

Q. Then that firing put the colored people in just as much danger as the whites?—A. It put me in danger, I suppose, from the way they whistled around me.

R. B. MURPHY sworn and examined.

By Mr. VANCE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. I reside in Mobile, Ala.

Q. Are you a native of that country?—A. No, sir; I was born in Illinois.

Q. How long have you been in the South?—A. Since 1872.

Q. Were you in Danville on the day of the riot?—A. Yes, sir; I arrived in Danville Friday night of the 2d, and remained there until Tuesday of the 6th.

Q. Please tell us what you saw there.—A. Saturday about half past 2, I should judge, or 3 o'clock, after I came out from dinner, a gentleman, a drummer, who was with me remarked that there was a meeting down at the opera house of the citizens, and asked me if I would go down. I did so. It was to indorse some campaign document of some kind. Colonel Cabell was called to the chair, and while addressing the meeting there was a disturbance in the street. Some one rushed up into the hall and said that there was a fight. There was quite a number in the hall got up to leave, and about that time some one remarked a man by the name of Lea had been killed. Colonel Cabell got up and said: "Citizens, be quiet, that is only done to break up this meeting. Let us pass our resolutions, and after we have done that, we will see the matter out." He had no more than got through when there was a pistol shot. I took it for granted it was a pistol, it sounded like it, and I went to the window. After a few moments, perhaps two or three minutes, things got rather quiet. I went back and took a seat and they passed the resolutions. They had no more than got through with them when the firing began to be general. I ran to the window again and looked out, but could not see from where I was. Then they started to leave the hall and I went with them. By the time we got down on the street, the firing had ceased, all except one shot, I believe. I remember seeing one man, a white man, push a colored man out of his way and say, "Go on now about your business," and fired his revolver up in the air. I then went up to the hotel through Main street where the crowd was gathered, and of course there was some excitement. About that time Colonel Cabell came to the front of the building opposite the Arlington Hotel and addressed the people. He says: "You have listened to me in peace, listen to me now. Keep quiet. Do not have any further disturbance." And there was no further disturbance after that.

Q. Everything was quiet from that on?—A. Everything was quiet from that on. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw nothing of the fight, then, except what you have described?—A. Nothing of the fight except that.

Q. Have you any idea how many men left the hall on the first alarm?—A. I don't think there was but very few.

Q. They all kept their seats when Colonel Cabell told them it was to break up the meeting.—A. They all jumped up; a great many rushed to the windows, but when he told them it was only done to break up the meeting the most of them remained.

Q. And when you got down after the firing had become general it was all over except that one man you saw fire his pistol in the air.—A. Yes, sir; it was all over except that one man.

Q. Please state what you did before you went South, whether you served in the Army.—A. Yes, sir; I served in the Union Army.

Q. And went South in 1872.—A. Went South in 1872.

Q. Engaged in mercantile business; you are what they call a commercial traveler?—A. That is what they call me.

Q. Had you any previous acquaintance in Danville?—A. Yes, sir; I had been there before; I had been visiting there a little over two years.

Q. Did you see any other disturbance up to the day you left? Did you leave before or after the election was over?—A. The morning of the election. I went from there to South Boston.

Q. How did the people seem to respond to Colonel Cabell's appeal to be quiet; to do nothing more?—A. Well, they were quiet after that. Of course there was some little excitement in talking about it and the way it happened and regretting it.

Q. No more disposition to do any violence?—A. None, whatever. It seemed to be the wish to keep the peace. I haven't any idea but what this only happened as any street fight may have happened. If it had happened at any other time there would not have been so much said about it.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. How many went out from the opera house when you went up to the ground ?—A. I could not say, but there was not many. Do you mean the first-time ?

Q. No.—A. Oh, we all went out when the fighting became general.

Q. You started as soon as the general firing began.—A. It didn't last more than a minute, I think.

Q. When you reached there the firing had ceased.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were the colored men then ?—A. They were running.

Q. Where were the whites ?—A. They were in the street.

Q. Were not they following and firing over their heads ?—A. I didn't see but that one shot after the general firing.

Q. Didn't you hear any more ?—A. No, sir ; that one shot is all.

M. P. JORDAN sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Where do you live ?—Answer. I live in Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there ?—A. About twelve years.

Q. Were you present on the 3d of November, at the time of the Danville riot ?—A. Yes ; I was.

Q. I wish you would tell, if you please, what occurred there within your observation.—A. On that day, about between 2 and 3 o'clock, I presume, I was in the opera house attending a meeting of our citizens there, and I heard from rumor, or some way, that my bookkeeper, Mr. Noel, was in trouble with a lot of negroes, that he was surrounded by a mob of several hundred near Woolfolk & Blair's office, and upon hearing that information I left the opera house and went up there, and shortly after, about the time I arrived there, I presume, the firing commenced.

Q. Did you join among the whites on that day ?—A. What do you mean by that question ?

Q. I will ask you if you had a pistol, if you were armed ?—A. Yes, sir ; I had a pistol on that day.

Q. Did you fire that pistol ?—A. I decline to answer that question.

Q. Why do you decline it ?—A. Well, for satisfactory reasons.

Q. Do you decline it because you fear that it will involve you in a criminal accusation, tend to criminate you ?—A. I must decline to answer that question unless forced by the committee.

Q. All we want is to ask you to state the reasons, you are not bound to answer ; but you should state the reasons why you do not answer. That, I can inform you, is the rule of law.—A. What is that ?

Q. That while you are not bound to criminate yourself, you are bound to state why you do not answer the question ?—A. Well, sir ; if I were to state that, it is an indirect admission that I did it ; if I should refuse for fear of criminating myself, it would be an indirect admission that I did it, and unless forced by the committee to give such an answer, I must decline to do so.

Q. Before pressing that question, I will ask you whether you mingled with the whites there.—A. I was upon the sidewalk where the whites were.

Q. Did you see anybody else fire that day ?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you hear any firing ?—A. I did.

Q. How many shots were fired ?—A. I could not tell, there were a great many shots in very rapid succession ; I suppose possibly fifty or seventy-five shots, it seemed to me, though I could not tell ; it would be a hard matter to estimate them.

Q. Where did you get your pistol?—A. I bought it from Mr. Valentine.

Q. How long before this?—A. I think, I am not positive, but I think probably three or four days; one pistol, though I had another one at home. I own two pistols.

Q. Why did you purchase a pistol; did you think yourself in danger?—A. I purchased it for my protection and for the protection of my family.

Q. Were there any peculiar circumstances that induced you to expect danger?—A. Well, sir; the community was in a state of very intense excitement at that time; negroes were turbulent and insolent, and there were a good many lawless depredations being committed around Danville at that time, and I preferred to have them as a matter of safety. I rarely ever carried them upon my person, but kept them home.

Q. How long did the firing continue?—A. A few moments.

Q. Which side dispersed?—A. The negroes ran.

Q. Did they run upon the first fire?—A. As I told you, the firing was very rapid and very quick, and they commenced to run; there was very little firing after the first volley or succession of volleys that occurred very rapidly.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. At what time did you come out of the opera-house meeting?—A. I presume about half past 2 o'clock.

Q. I don't mean that, but at what stage of the disturbance on the street—before the fist fight or afterward?—A. It was just previous to the fight.

Q. To the fist fight?—A. No, sir; it was after the fist fight.

Q. And before the general fight?—A. Yes, a moment or two before the general firing. I heard that my book-keeper, a personal friend, was surrounded by a mob of negroes.

Q. And you went out on hearing that; when you got up to the scene, how many white people were there, and how many colored people?—A. I should say there were possibly from ten to fifteen white men.

Q. When you arrived?—A. Yes; may be as many as twenty, I couldn't say. I don't think though there was as many as fifteen and the streets were full of negroes. It's hard to estimate them, but I should say from three hundred to four hundred negroes, and angry too.

Q. How did they demonstrate that anger?—A. By oaths and curses and loud demonstrations of one way and another, and by pressing upon these parties.

Q. You didn't see any weapons in their hands?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you there when the firing began?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw the firing begin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear anybody give the command to fire?—A. No, sir, but I deemed it a sort of voluntary thing.

Q. Do you know who fired first?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know if any one, either then or at any stage of the proceeding, fired in the air?—A. I do not.

Q. How long did the firing continue before the negroes began to run?—A. Only a few moments; as I remarked just now, the firing was done very rapidly.

Q. The whole matter of the first fire until the last would not exceed a minute?—A. I should say not. It resembled more the explosion of a pack of powder crackers all set off at one time, than anything else.

Q. Did you see Mr. Holland when he was shot?—A. It was several minutes after he was shot before I heard of it.

Q. Did you see any firing from the ranks of the colored people?—A. No, sir.

Q. You could not tell?—A. No, sir.

Q. How near were you to the ranks of the white people when the firing began?—A. I was right up with them.

Q. Did you have your back to Woolfolk & Blair's office like the others did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any arms and ammunition in Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. No, sir. I have been informed that it has been stated here by a witness that he saw me going into that office, and come out with a pistol and fire it.

Q. Yes.—A. I denounce that as false.

Q. That you saw any arms, as false?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see anybody come out of there with arms?—A. No, sir. I only saw one man near the door with arms, and that was Mr. Dance.

Q. He was standing there to protect his door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go in and out during the fight there?—A. I did not. When the firing commenced I was just below, and I did not reach a small parcel of white men who were standing just above the door. When the firing commenced a good many of the by-standers commenced to retreat, and they shoved me back as far as the door, and that is as near as I ever got to it.

Q. Did you see any sign of bullets on the wall of that house, or the one above or below?—A. I cannot state positively. I never examined them with any view to questions upon that subject.

Q. You say this crowd was angry, and was pressing on those on the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear anybody try to disperse them—to get them to go away?—A. I saw Mr. Corbin, and I saw Policeman Withers, I think, a colored man, trying to get them to leave, and one or two others.

Q. Did you see Mr. Freeman working among them, too?—A. I didn't see Freeman.

Q. Did you hear Captain Oliver propose that if they would disperse the white people would?—A. I didn't hear that.

Q. Did you hear any firing of the colored men after they had ceased firing?—A. Well, I heard firing after they had run.

Q. Well, it is in testimony here that some of them fired as they ran, and after they had ceased firing. Did you see any?—A. No, sir; I cannot say that I did. It was rather too warm about there to look after anybody else.

Q. You are a Democrat, are you?—A. I am.

Q. Took an active interest in that election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Joined in the councils of the party for its success?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear anything, directly or indirectly, that there was a combination for the purpose of bringing on this row for the purpose of intimidating the colored men?—A. I did not.

Q. Was the row altogether unexpected at that time?—A. It was to me.

Q. Were the people all armed in the opera house?—A. I think not. Our people are law-abiding citizens, and I should say that there is hardly one man in twenty that carries concealed weapons.

Q. Well, in point of fact, after they came out, didn't many of them go off and hunt weapons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Showing they had not them before?—A. Yes. I know a number that went to hardware stores—went to Tyack & Doe's to get them after it was over. I got a shot-gun and carried it to my house and there it stayed for three weeks, and I suppose I was one of the parties who was advertised for.

Q. Now, as a man of reasonable firmness in the presence of danger, did you think those men were not reasonably apprehensive, that they had to fire to save themselves?—A. I do.

Q. You believe that?—A. Yes, I do.

Q. Whether true or not, you believe they thought they had to fire to save themselves?—A. Yes, that was my impression, and I have thought that if those white men had retreated or showed the slightest disposition to recede from the position they had taken there, they would have suffered considerably, not only them but the entire town.

Q. Did you see any disposition to push the contest farther than was necessary?—A. I did not. The crowd were excited at the time and might possibly have done things they would not have done in a cooler moment. Colonel Cabell was there and headed off the crowd, and exhorted them to desist, not to go any farther, and they sobered down into as peaceable and as orderly a set of people as I have ever seen. Not only that, but under the instructions of the sergeant of the town they were put upon police duty and patrolled the town to preserve good order, those same men whom they said had been engaged in that riot. Our town authorities seemed to have been very inefficient at that time, and we had a mayor who was sort of a weak-minded, vacillating kind of a man, who didn't take an active part.

Q. There was no difficulty when appealed to in restoring order and calming everybody down?—A. None whatever.

Q. And you saw no disposition to push anything further than appeared to be necessary?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you on the police force after this firing?—A. I was for a few days; yes, sir.

Q. Appointed on the police.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after the negroes ran away, you say there was no further disturbance.—A. No, sir; I say there was occasional firing; I could not say—

Q. But there was no occasion for disturbance after the white men had the entire field, and white men then were appointed on the police and guards were called out.—A. Put your question again.

Q. White men were appointed on the police. Were any negroes appointed on the police?—A. I think not.

Q. White men alone were appointed on guard and the Danville Grays were called out.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you give it as your opinion that the white people were in fear of being overwhelmed, and therefore you justify their firing.—A. Those white men that were upon the street—I did not state that I justified their firing. I stated that they had reasonable apprehension of danger.

Q. Did not the colored people have the same apprehension?—A. Well, they outnumbered them; had about six or eight to one, and I can't see why they should.

Q. Had not the white men a force of six hundred behind them in the opera-house?—A. They were two hundred or three hundred yards away from them, and these men were directly in front of them.

Q. Hadn't you yourself come down from the opera house?—A. Yes; I had myself, but I was an exception.

Q. And do you think that that body of white men, armed as they were, were in danger from the negroes?—A. I do, sir.

Q. Has that been your experience with the colored race?—A. What do you mean by that question?

Q. That they become aggressive under those circumstances?—A. Where there are numbers; that is, they become insolent and aggressive.

Q. Suppose the position had been reversed, and three negroes would have attacked the white man—A. I don't think it would have been; I don't think they have the courage.

Q. Would not the white men at once have overwhelmed them and hung them?—A. I think very likely they would.

Q. That is the natural way there, would it not be?—A. What do you mean by that question; that it would be natural to commit an act of lawlessness by taking them out and hanging them?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. Suppose that three black men armed should attack one white man, himself armed or unarmed, supported by unarmed white men; would not the white men rally in force and hang the negroes?—A. Suppose three negroes were to attack one white man and kill him.

Q. No; suppose three negroes armed, should attack one white man and beat him in the presence of a number of other white men. Don't you think the white men would rally at once and hang the negroes?—A. I do not.

Q. You would not in Danville.—A. Would not.

Q. What would they do with them?—A. They would probably arrest them and turn them over to the courts of justice.

Q. Was there any arrest of these young men after this killing?—A. Not that I am aware of.

Q. Has there been any movement towards their punishment?—A. Not that I know of. That is a question you might very properly propound to the Readjuster government of Danville. I don't know. As far as I know, there has been nothing of the kind.

Q. No attempt to punish them?—A. No, sir; only an investigation by the grand jury which not only acquitted but rather complimented them.

Q. We have heard about that. There were three men who participated in the previous investigation, and who signed the report of the committee of forty.—A. I don't know about that; they certainly did not participate in the row.

Q. Were you on the committee of forty?—A. No, sir; I was not.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Mr. Sherman asked you, suppose three armed negroes were to attack one white man, meaning thereby that three armed white men had attacked one negro; that is not the case, is it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Only one white man attacked one negro man, and the one white man had two white men friends, and the other about twenty.—A. If you refer to the Noel case—

Q. Yes.—A. Not only that, but the negroes said that it was a fair fight.

Q. Did you hear this?—A. Yes, I heard that they said it.

Q. Did you hear the negroes say so?—A. I stated it was from hearsay.

Mr. VANCE. Well, we don't want that.

LEMON COLEMAN sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. About fifty years.

Q. You were born there, were you?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you if you were present in Danville on the 3d day of November, at the time of the riot.—A. I was.

Q. I wish you would state, if you please, what you saw and heard on that occasion. I will ask you first if you have been examined anywhere as a witness in this matter.—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Have you ever been examined in Colonel Sims's election contest?—A. I have.

Q. I wish you would now state what you saw and heard that occurred that day.—A. On Saturday evening the riot took place in Danville. I left my boarding house about 5 o'clock, between 4 and 5 o'clock.

Q. You think it was as late as 4 or 5 o'clock?—A. I reckon it was near about that, I guess.

Q. It was before the shooting, was it?—A. Yes, sir; I left, walking in the street to go up to get my provisions for Sunday—I keep a boarding-house there—and I heard a voice at its highest length before I reached Main street, crying "Murder, murder," just as loud as a fellow could holler, and I hastened to the place to see what was the confusion. When I had gotten up to Main street, I saw a gathering down near the front of Messrs. Woolfolk & Blair's insurance office. Hearing that confusion I started to the place, knowing that my counsel and influence among the colored people always had been considered among them, and in starting to go down to the place in which the confusion was, I saw several men and some children running there. I told them to go back. Says I, "Go back."

Q. They were running?—A. They were running towards the confusion. Says I, "Go back." I thought it was something serious, and I went across nearly fronting the Virginia House, where my boy had a little stand, where he sold candies, cakes, and one thing and another, apples; and in the length of that time I heard a pistol fired. It seemed that it fired on the ground, and the little boy said, "Thar, one voter is dead;" and I started to the place and seen Robert Adams, who was a police, and told him to go down there and quiet the fuss. I knew that the colored people had always taken my counsel, and I went there to counsel them, ask them to disperse and leave. Before I got to the place I saw some one leaving the place, moving away from where the confusion was. I says, "What's the matter?" Says he, "Mr. Noel was beating Hense Lawson." I says, "Why don't you tell them to tell the colored people to come away and disperse?" Then I saw them leaving, after hearing that pistol fired; leaving there in haste seemed to be cowardly, and I started back, and before I got there, about five minutes after hearing that, one pistol fired. It seemed it struck the ground. I started down to the store to get my sugar and coffee, and that immense firing commenced.

Q. The volleys?—A. Yes; a large portion, or some fifty or sixty or one hundred went off all at once, it seemed, and I run in Mr. Gillum's saddler shop for protection. I found balls hit on the left hand side of the street, and Gillum told me to go back into his back room. Says he, "You had better go up stairs." I went in the rear. Before I went in there, I turned around to look, and a ball went in his rear over my head. When that ball passed over my head, I saw some man shot.

He was shooting right straight up the street, and in his attempt to shoot, I saw some man—I could not say who shot—one white man shoot another. Says I, “Dar, a white man has shot a white man,” and then the ball went over my head and the man fell.

Q. A white man fell?—A. Yes, sir; and another man picked him up. The one that was shooting kept on shooting right straight up the street.

Q. Where was he shooting from?—A. Near Woolfolk & Blair’s insurance office.

Q. Was he shooting from among the white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you could see?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he kept shooting in the same direction?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him shoot.

Q. I wish you would describe the man.—A. I don’t know him.

Q. But can’t you describe him?—A. Well, he had black whiskers. Just as soon as he shot that other man, I said to Mr. Gillum, “Dar, a white man shot a white man,” and the shot went over my head, and I went into the rear, and afterwards Mr. Gillum told me I could go out and go home, and I went and bought my sugar and such things as I could get, and went to my place of business.

Q. Did you go to see who was shot?—A. I did not. Another man stepped right up and picked him up. He fell at the crack. I was looking right at him.

Q. Where did you go then, after you went out and bought your goods?—A. I went back to my place of business.

Q. Did you see the crowd of colored people there?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Did you see any guns or weapons?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you look at them?—A. I did for a short while. I would have been in the midst, knowing, as I tell you, they had always taken my counsel. I went there to get them to disperse, go to their places, and quit the confusion in the street; but before I got there I met others going away.

Q. Where did the balance of the colored people go?—A. Just passing off, then, before the shooting was done. They had seen the pistol, and I would have been in the crowd, trying to counsel them, but for meeting several going away from the confusion. That is the reason I was not in the midst, trying to counsel them.

Q. And you didn’t see any pistol in their hands?—A. No, sir.

Q. State how many white men were there.—A. I couldn’t tell you.

Q. Can you state how many pistols you saw in the hands of white men?—A. I could not. At the time I saw the confusion, I saw it was a dispute between the white and the colored, with the white on the pavement, and the colored in the street.

Q. Did you see Mr. Holland at that time?—A. I didn’t know it was him; he was the man that was shot, but I didn’t know it was him at the time; I found it out afterwards.

Q. Did you see him afterwards?—A. I found out afterwards.

Q. That Holland was the man?—A. Yes, sir; the same one that has been named here.

Q. Did you ever go before the grand jury in respect to this matter?—A. I was summoned before the grand jury.

Q. Did you go?—A. I went; and a gentleman, one of the members of the grand jury, told me he did not want me, and I disbanded.

Q. You went home; you therefore never made your statement to the grand jury?—A. I did not.

Q. Who was the jurymen that told you that?—A. I don't know exactly. I think Mr. George Ayres was the chairman of the grand jury.

Q. He was the chairman. Was it Mr. Ayres who told you?—A. No, sir; it wasn't him.

Q. It was another member?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know the name of the grand jurymen who told you this?—A. I couldn't call his name; I would know him if I saw him.

Q. He was one of the grand jurymen?—A. Yes, sir; I got the authority from him.

Q. Do you know whether this same gentleman was on the committee of forty?—A. I don't. I don't officiate much in political affairs; I merely got in this trap to give counsel to my people to behave themselves.

Q. You didn't see the origin of the fight?—A. Not any of it, only what I have told you.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You got no nearer, Mr. Coleman, to the place where the fighting was than the saddler's shop of Mr. Gillum?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far is that from Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. I couldn't tell how much, but only across, its nearly opposite; I reckon its about fifty yards; fifty or sixty yards.

Q. Well, it is not directly opposite there, is it?—A. No, it is not.

Q. A little angling?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So it could not have been that a man was shooting straight up the street and shot in the door?—A. No, sir, it could not; I did not judge he was shooting at me. The ball just flew in the house, and I felt innocent.

Q. You said you saw that it was a white man shooting?—A. I did.

Q. Did you see where he stood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did he stand?—A. He stood on the pavement.

Q. In front of whose house?—A. Just a little above Mr. Woolfolk & Blair's.

Q. Then he shot across the street at you?—A. No, sir; he didn't shoot at me.

Q. He was not the man that shot at you?—A. Oh, the ball fell accidentally.

Q. There was no colored man on the sidewalk, was there?—A. They were in the middle of the street, near about the middle.

Q. What was this man shooting up the sidewalk for, if there was no negro man there?—A. But they were running, and he was shooting after them.

Q. Were there colored men on the sidewalk?—A. Yes; they were running in every direction; for a little while, a minute, the colored people ran in every direction, and when I turned and looked, I saw the man who ran up the street, and don't think he intended to shoot the man he did shoot; thought it was an accident, but I know it was he that shot the man; I saw him.

Q. There were many other pistols fired at the same time, were there not?—A. I don't know; I was looking at that one man.

Q. You could not follow the bullet after it was fired?—A. I saw him fall at the crack.

Q. At the crack of the gun?—A. Yes, sir; I could not have seen any other pistol at the same time I was looking at that.

Q. Was there no other pistol out except that one?—A. Oh, certainly; but that was the one I noticed.

Q. You noticed that particularly?—A. That is it. That is what I wanted to get at.

Q. You could not tell any other man but the man you were looking at?—A. Only the one I looked at.

Q. Were you looking at him all the day?—A. I didn't look at any after that. When the ball went over my head, I went in.

Q. Up to that time, you had fixed your attention upon one single man, and watched him?—A. You see that when I run in at Mr. Gillum's saddler shop, I turned around to look back, and he turned and fired up the street, and shot that man in the head, and a ball went over my head in the rear.

Q. The man fell on the sidewalk?—A. On the sidewalk a little above Woolfolk & Blair's insurance and bank; near the bank.

Q. Which way was he going—the man that fell?—A. He had his face turned up the street. It seems the ball hit him somewhere about the back of the head.

Q. His face was towards you, was it?—A. No, sir, up street; fell right straight up street.

Q. The bullets then were going in another direction from you?—A. Yes; in another direction. He wasn't shooting at me. It was an accidental ball that went over my head, and I went back in the rear.

Q. Then you think the same ball that killed this man passed over your head?—A. Not a bit of it; it couldn't. He was shooting in every direction.

Q. What ball was it that passed over your head?—A. Some other ball; some other man shooting at the same time.

Q. Didn't you look in the direction from which the bullet came which threatened you most?—A. Not a bit of it. I was looking at one shoot the man and could not have seen but that one at the same time.

Q. Suppose there had been a dozen men in a group, would not your eyes have been on all at once?—A. Could not have been on all; can't be on more than one at a time, naturally. I was looking at that man I saw shot.

Q. You saw him fall?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Could not you tell what direction the pistol was pointed?—A. I did. I have told it. I mean it. The ball struck the head and went over, it seemed, and sort of glanced; the man fell at the crack, and another stepped right up and picked him up. I don't think he was shooting at him. He was shooting up the street and shot before he got ready.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You are sure that no other bullet in all that crowd hit that man except this one you saw fired?—A. I couldn't say that. All that I saw; I can identify no more than I saw.

Q. I thought you were very sure?—A. Not a bit; I am telling what I saw.

Q. You saw a man fire a pistol and saw another man fall?—A. At the crack.

Q. And you don't know whether he killed him or somebody else killed him?—A. No, sir; it didn't kill him, he fell.

Q. You say at the same time there were a great number of other pistols fired?—A. Oh, yes; that is why I run in the room, and in looking back I saw that man fire and that man fall, and then a ball went over my head, and I went back in the rear.

Q. Did no other pistols fire at the same time that this man's pistol fired, who was in the rear of the man that fell?—A. I could not tell. I was looking at that. I saw that one.

Q. Didn't you hear them?—A. Of course others were fired.

Q. You heard others firing at the same time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any colored man with any weapons at all?—A. I did not.

Q. The colored men were all peaceable, were they?—A. No, sir; they were in confusion.

Q. What do you mean by "confusion"?—A. I mean they were there, and I thought if I could have gone there, I could have caused them to have gone away.

Q. I have no doubt you could, but you didn't get up.—A. That is it.

Mr. LAPHAM. They were running before he got there, he says.

The WITNESS. Yes. I met them.

Q. If you had got up there in time, you think that these colored men would have listened to you.—A. They always had.

Q. They always had.—A. Yes; more or less.

Q. Now, I asked you if the colored men were all peaceable and quiet, and you say that they were not. Did you hear any expressions besides the firing when the men were running?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you hear any cursing, or oaths, or anything of that kind?—A. I didn't get in the midst of them. I would have been in the midst of them but for the firing, and I met them coming away before I got there.

Q. You don't know anything about the efforts of the police and others.—A. No more than I saw Bob Adams, who was a police. I said, "Robert, why don't you go there and try to disperse them people?" He run away, and went on up street.

WILEY L. WILLIAMSON sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Danville.

18Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there ever since 69.

Q. Were you there on the 3d of November?—A. I was.

Q. I wish you would tell, in your own way, what you saw and heard in respect to the Danville riot, from the time you first heard of it, until the close.—A. I keep a little grocery store on Market street, on the left-hand side going up street, and I had a call for ammunition in the morning.

Q. Who from?—A. From a boy that was going hunting, by the name of John Woodward, if I am not mistaken.

Q. Is he white or colored?—A. Colored. I told him to go to a gun shop. I was busy waiting on customers, and hadn't any.

Q. You didn't sell him any ammunition.—A. No, sir; I told him I didn't have any. At about half-past 2 o'clock my attention was attracted on seeing people going towards Main street, and it raised my curiosity, and I went on up, and when I got there, I found Mr. Noel and Mr. Lawson engaged in a fist fight, and I ran up and attempted to part them, and some man or another, I don't know who he was, but I think he was that gentleman right there [pointing]—

Q. That is Mr. Lea.—A. Yes, sir; and another man, he says, "Get back." I says, "I want to part these folks," just so. He says, "Damn it, get back." He drew a pistol, and that time I stepped back, and when I stepped back, I then left and went on down to Market to get a revolver from some colored friends down there, but didn't succeed in getting it, and came on back anyhow to see what they was going to do. After getting back, that same gentleman was there—Mr. Lea. A man by the name of George Adams, says, "Are we all going to stand here and let that man kill Hense?" just so. "I won't," says I, and he rushed right on, and Mr. Lea was the first man he got to, and he reached up to try to wrench the pistol from his hand, but he didn't get it, and George Adams threw Mr. Lea down in the gutter, and while they were down there scuffling over the pistol, it went off, and I think that gentleman struck him with a stick, or something.

Q. Taylor.—A. Yes, sir. I think he struck at him with a stick or something, and the pistol went off when he was down there, so I got off in the middle of the street; and they said, "You all leave here." I was in my shirt sleeves, and I just got out in the middle of the street, and they said, "See the negroes advancing on you. Fire at them." And when they said that I just stepped back; and when they fired I didn't know who it was. I went away to Dr. Sidney's office, and went up stairs and looked down in the street. By the time I got up there I reckon there was somewhere about thirty-five or forty shots fired. I got up there, but could not recognize anybody I knew well, but Mr. Joel Oliver.

Q. Who is he?—A. He is captain of the Danville Grays. I saw him; he is the only man I could recognize at the time; and I thought they would kill some four hundred or five hundred by the way they were shooting down there. I didn't know anything of the meeting at the opera house at all, but when I got upstairs there they were all coming up from down that way. I didn't know where they were coming from, because I hadn't seen the pamphlets.

Q. After the fight was over between these two men, and when they commenced to fire, how many whites were there in the crowd?—A. In the general firing, you mean.

Q. Yes.—A. Well, when they first got there I don't think I recognized but three gentlemen. When they first started to fight there was only three at the time, and there was one man standing in the door with a gun.

Q. What is his name?—A. I have heard his name was Dance. I don't know; he is a small fellow. They were gathering as fast as they could, and by the time the general firing commenced I suppose there was about seventy-five or one hundred.

Q. How many colored?—A. I suppose about one hundred and fifty in the street, men, women, and children.

Q. Did you see any colored people have arms?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any person have arms at all.

Q. How many whites had arms, as near as you can tell?—A. As near as I could tell at the present time, when I was out there I saw six or seven, I suppose, standing around with pistols up over their heads daring anybody to come there.

Q. That was before the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the first volley was fired, how many men were there with arms?—A. I don't know how many were there in the first volley that had arms, but seventy-five or one hundred, as I said before; but I don't know whether they all had arms or not.

Q. Were they formed in line?—A. Yes, sir; it seemed they were formed in line on the sidewalk.

Q. How many shots were fired altogether?—A. I don't know how many were fired. I reckon there were about forty or fifty fired when I was running up the steps. At the time I got to the front window and saw them the shooting was steady. I couldn't tell you how many was fired.

Q. How long did this firing continue?—A. I suppose three or four minutes.

Q. What did the colored people do?—A. They all run.

Q. At the same time you did, or before or after?—A. They ran after I did, I think.

Q. Which way did they run?—A. They went in every direction; some went up the street, some went down, some went through the market, and some in stores.

Q. Dispersed around.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many men were killed that day there, or died in consequence of the shooting?—A. Three died instantly.

Q. Three killed instantly. How many died afterwards of wounds, do you know?—A. No, sir; I disremember now.

Q. Do you know how many were shot beside the three that were killed?—A. I could not give a direct answer, but I have heard that it was some eight or nine.

Q. Before the firing commenced, was there any command given in regard to firing? Did you hear any?—A. Yes, sir; I think I did.

Q. What did you hear?—A. I think I heard them say, "You see the negroes advancing on you;" they says, "fire." I think at that time the firing commenced. When the firing commenced I was at the steps, and then when I got to the top of the steps I went into Dr. Sidney's office.

Q. What other expression did you hear from either the colored or the white people?—A. I heard a policeman say, "If you all don't leave here you will get hurt."

Q. Was that the policeman that testified here—Mr. Withers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any one else speaking?—A. No, sir; I don't think I heard any one else speaking. The colored people were kind of slow about going away, and they said, "If you don't leave you will get hurt;" and they didn't leave, I suppose, fast enough, and that is the reason they commenced firing on them; and I suppose what they thought was advancing on them some colored people had heard it away down the street, and they were coming up towards the crowd.

Q. Was there any advance at all on the whites by the colored people?—A. Not out in the street there, but coming from every direction to see what the excitement was.

Q. Do you feel any apprehension of danger on account of testifying in this matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything else connected with the transaction that you saw there that you wish to say? If so, tell it.—A. No, sir; nothing else.

Q. You have stated after the firing—what did you do when you left the house or office that you were sheltered in?—A. When I came out of the office I came down the steps, and Mr. Noel who was passing there by that time—he had on, I think, a light brown coat; he passed just as I stepped out of the door, and was passing, and had his hands in his pocket, just so; and he looked at me, but didn't say anything to me, and I didn't say anything to him.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. I went home to my market—to my store.

Q. That is all you saw?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any organization among the colored people there with a view to any controversy with the white?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never heard of any?—A. No, sir.

Q. You would have been likely to have heard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any anticipation of a fight among the colored people that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any one suggest that?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. At what time of the proceeding was it that you ran upstairs?—A. The time the general firing commenced.

Q. The time the general firing commenced, or before?—A. No, sir; it was not before; it was just the time they say they saw the negroes advancing on them, and fired on them; they commenced firing and I whirled, went in, and shut the door, and went up the steps.

Q. Were the colored people advancing on the whites?—A. No, sir; no more than like those gentlemen standing right there, and some one coming in to the door to listen; people running in different directions behind them, but those in front were not making any advancement at all.

Q. When you started up the stairs there, you told the committee there were seventy-five or one hundred white men on the pavement when the firing first began?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stand by that, do you?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose about seventy-five or one hundred persons were on the sidewalk at that time.

Q. You say they had come down out of the opera house before the firing began?—A. I did not say that.

Q. You said they came from down that way?—A. I say they came from down that way when the first shot was made, and George Adams tried to get the pistol from Mr. Lea.

Q. How many were present when the fist fight took place?—A. I have told you three. A man by the name of Nat. Lawson was hollering "murder," and I suppose that is what drew the crowd. Those are the first three that I saw. I reckon that I was about the seventh one that got there.

Q. How many colored people were there there?—A. I said about one hundred and fifty, I reckon.

Q. I mean when the fist fight took place between Lawson and Noel.—A. I reckon there was about twelve when Mr. Noel first attacked him.

Q. Who was it that tried to get you to go in and help?—A. No one at all.

Q. Who was it said, "Are you going to stand and see that man beat to death?"—A. That was George Adams.

Q. To whom did he say it?—A. Nobody at all. He says, "Men, are you going to stand and see that man beat to death?"

Q. It was in your presence, was it?—A. Yes; it was when I was there. I then did what I said before. I had been down in the market to see if I could borrow a pistol. That was after I came back.

Q. What did you want a pistol for?—A. I wanted a pistol to protect if anything should happen, but I didn't succeed in getting it.

Q. To protect from anything that might happen. What was the necessity for your getting a pistol?—A. I saw him have a pistol.

Q. Who?—A. Mr. Lea and the other man.

Q. Did Mr. Lea say for you all to stand back, to have a fair fight?—A. He said, "We intend to have a fair fight."

Q. Noel was not using any weapons, or Lawson, was he?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you want with a pistol?—A. I say I saw Mr. Lea have one.

Q. And you wanted one just because he had one. You came up to interfere in the fight?—A. I came up to separate them. That was before the policeman got there.

Q. What authority had you to separate them?—A. Well, of course, Hense was a man that I knew.

Q. So you came up to take a part to help Lawson, didn't you?—A. Not a bit of it. I came up there to separate them.

Q. Did you ask anybody to separate them; to help you?—A. No, sir; never asked nobody at all.

Q. Who did you propose to take hold of?—A. Lawson. I did not have anything to do with Mr. Noel.

Q. And Lea told you to stand back; that they were going to have a fair fight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had a pistol in his hand, and you went off to borrow a pistol?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did Adams try to take Lea's pistol away?—A. That was after I came back.

Q. Was the fight over then?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long after you got back until they finished?—A. I do not suppose it was two or three minutes before they finished, because I run down there.

Q. Well, it was a right long fight altogether. How long did it take you to run down there for the pistol?—A. I suppose it is not more than one hundred steps.

Q. That would take you more than two or three minutes?—A. No, sir; it did not take me that long. The soldiers make one hundred and eighty in one minute.

Q. Does he? I didn't know that. One hundred and eighty in one minute?—A. Yes, sir; I think it is.

Q. That is three steps to a second. That is tolerably good time, is it not; that is about equal to Longfellow, is it not?—A. I don't know about that. I think it is one hundred and eighty. I think that is the way it is—"double-quick time."

Q. Now did you hear of men trying to get the colored people to disperse after the fist fight was all over; did you hear the remarks of Captain Oliver, Corbin, and Freeman?—A. I heard Bob Adams and Mr. Freeman try to get them to disperse, because they were then out in the crowd; but those other men I did not hear them, because I was on the other side, in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office. As they talked they came along where I was, and I commenced to get back.

Q. Did you see any weapons in the hands of colored people?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any desire for a fight?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any threatening?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any cursing; any angry language?—A. No, sir; when the general firing first commenced I said that I was then near to the gutter on the opposite side of the street. I ran upstairs. Well, I could not tell what the colored people were doing; and the white people, when I got upstairs, they were shooting towards the crowd, and I did not see any white people falling, and so I did not reckon the colored people had any pistols.

Q. You don't reckon they had any pistols, because you did not see any fall? Did you see Holland fall?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Seward get shot?—A. No, sir.

Q. And did not hear any firing at all from the direction of the colored crowd? What did they press up there for, and refuse to disperse and go home, if they did not want to fight?—A. I can't make any discrimination between shots of a pistol when people are shooting.

Q. Well, but you can make a discrimination between pistol shots and the question I asked you, can't you?—A. What is that?

Q. I asked you why these colored people pressed up against the people on the sidewalk, if they did not want to fight?—A. I don't know. They did not press up. They were standing just where they were.

Q. They were all around the white men, were they not?—A. They were about in the middle of the street; I suppose about the distance from here across the table.

Q. Were they not as close as they could get, without getting on the sidewalk?—A. No, sir; I do not think they were; they staid on the sidewalk, and the colored people in the street. I suppose it might have been a yard or a yard and a quarter, the distance between the two parties.

Q. That is something like 4 feet that they stood apart. Now, why did they stand up there if they were not angry, and wanting to fight, demanding something? Why did they crowd up there?—A. I could not tell why they crowded up there.

Q. You heard what the colored men said, didn't you?—A. The only man I ever heard say anything was George Adams: "Are you all going to stand here and let that man kill Lawson?"

Q. That remark sounded like he wanted to fight, didn't it?—A. I don't know. He tried to get the pistol from Lea's hand.

Q. Did you hear any other colored man say a word?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't?—A. No, sir.

Q. In all that talk you swear you did not hear any other colored man say a word?—A. Where did I tell you I was standing? I told you I was standing on the upper side of Woolfolk & Blair's office, out in the middle of the street. I was not in the thickest of the colored people. I was sort of on the borders.

Q. Couldn't you hear on the borders?—A. I told you I heard a policeman tell them to disperse.

Q. Did you hear what they said?—A. No; only what George Adams said.

Q. You did not hear any other colored man say a word?—A. No, sir.

Q. Not a word? Now stand to that. Then you went off upstairs to look out of the window at them until the fight was over?—A. I did.

Q. Did you see any colored men fire at all?—A. I did not. I was up over the colored people, and could not see them.

Q. Couldn't you see the colored people? How could you see the white men through the window and not see the colored?—A. I saw the colored people going away.

Q. Didn't the window look out into the street?—A. Of course it did.

Q. Didn't it have glass in it? Couldn't you see the colored men as well as the white ones?—A. The colored people, a portion of them, were going right up street; the biggest portion went that way towards the market, right under me, and I couldn't see them.

Q. After they got away from the crowd you couldn't see them, I suppose? The crowd hadn't run, had they?—A. They were getting away.

Q. When they were going away did you see any colored man fire?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Nor at any other time?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you saw plenty of white men fire?—A. Yes, sir; I saw them fire.

Q. How many men you saw were killed?—A. I think there were three.

JOHN STONE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there eighteen or nineteen years.

Q. Were you born in that region?—A. No, sir; I was born in that county, though.

Q. Were you in Danville on the 3d of November last?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would tell, in your own way, all about the fight and riot that occurred in Danville on the afternoon of that day. Tell where you were when you first saw it, and all you saw and heard.—A. On that day I had left my work and was going down in the market, as I generally eat down there at the hay scales office.

Q. What is your business?—A. I was living at the post-office building. I had gone down there to eat my dinner, and had eat my dinner, myself and the market clerk, and had started up the market towards Main street, and we heard some one hollering "murder," and we hastened on and walked up to the corner. It was not quite opposite to where the fight was, but sort of bias, right across Main street. We reached the corner there, and we saw that the man who was hollering "murder" was Mr. Nat Lawson, and he said to me, "We had better stop right here;" and we stepped over to Jones's drug-store, on the corner there, and looked over and saw Mr. Noel and Hense Lawson engaged in what seemed to be a fist fight, and this other man was hollering "murder."

Q. Who was that?—A. Nat Lawson. Not the man that was engaged in the fight; and I staid there during the time the fist fight was going on, and the people gathered from every direction, both white and colored. The colored people were betwixt me and the white people, and when they stopped fighting—I could not really tell when they stopped fighting; but it seemed to be a fist fight, and in the mean time I saw a policeman go up. During the time I saw Mr. George Lea. It seems he was standing on the step—I am not positive that he was standing on the step; but it seemed he was sort of bias to the door, with a pistol in his hand and waving it; and I disremember whether it was Withers or Adams went up (a policeman, anyway), and in the mean time, then, I saw Mr. Peter Booth coming down from his store, and hollering, "Get those niggers away from here." I continued to stand there; didn't think it would be anything more than they would be separated. Whether he had a pistol in his hand or not I am not positive, but at any rate he came down and seemed to be very angry, hollering; and I then at that time kept looking over there, and I saw a colored man. I have been told since that it was a man by the name of Adams, but whether it was or not I don't know; seemed to grasp Mr. Lea, and in the mean time that he grappled him, it seemed they got down on the ground. I am not positive. The crowd was betwixt me and him, and while they were down on the ground, it seemed to me, the pistol went off. I never moved, but still held my position, people passing backwards and forwards, some coming, and some going. I still stood still looking over there, and I saw a man by the name of Mr. Dance come to the door with what seemed to be a double-barreled shot-gun; but whether he fired it or not, I am not able to tell. But he staid in the door with it. In the mean time then the firing had taken place. By that time the firing had taken place. Myself and Fields started back to the hay-scales office, and the crowd rushed and run over me pretty much; seemed to run against and knock me; but I kept my position, and went on down, and went in the hay-scales office, and sat down there a few minutes. It seemed the firing had ceased. I went out and stood on the corner, but peeped around; did not put myself in a position so the balls would hit me—peeped around the corner. In the mean time I saw Jack Redd coming down the market. I suppose he was, I reckon, 30 or 40 yards from Main street on market stand, if I am not mistaken. I may be, but I don't think so. Mr. Covington, I think it was, and a man by the name of Mr. Reagan, seemed to be shoving him, and I think one of them kicked him, and a man by the name of Mr. Reagan shot at him; seemed to shove him off from him, and shoot at him.

Q. That is the Mr. Reagan that testified here.—A. That is what I think; I do not know; so I was told. He was a Reagan; that is all I know of him. He shot at him, and the man replied, though before he shot, "What have we colored people done to you?" and he seemed to shove him off then, and shot at him. Well, there were two shots, but whether the same man made the same shots or not, I don't know; but there was pistols in those men's hands. Colonel Cabell ran up then and took hold of the man and jerked him around, and says, "Don't kill that negro."

Q. Did Redd get away then?—A. I do not know really what became of him then. I didn't see any more of it.

Q. By that time had the crowd dispersed?—A. Oh, yes; they had gone then.

Q. Did you see Captain Walters on that occasion?—A. I did.

Q. What did he say?—A. After that was over I was down at the scale office consulting with myself whether I would be safe to go to my work or not, as I had to go up that way.

Q. What was your work?—A. Working at the custom-house. I was down there wanting to go to my place of business, but really did not feel that it would be safe at that time to go on up there. Captain Walters came up going down to the blacksmith shop, where his horse was—at least he got his horse there—and there were some colored men there that he knew; I reckon he must have known them. He says, "It is pretty hot, boys; it is pretty hot, but it is not half as hot as we are going to make it."

Q. Who is Captain Walters? Is he a citizen of Danville?—A. No, sir; he lives a mile and a half, I suppose, from the town.

Q. What are his politics?—A. I don't know; I suppose, though, he is a Democrat.

Q. As a general rule the white men were Democrats, were they not?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. I will ask you whether you saw any pistols in the hands of white men; if so, how many held them?—A. I could not begin to tell you how many I did see have pistols. I saw numbers of them, though, have pistols. Of course I could name some few that I saw have pistols.

Q. Did you see any pistols in the hands of colored men?—A. I did not see one.

Q. Did you have an opportunity to see them if they had them?—A. I did. I don't really believe there was any in the hands of any, because if they had them I think they would have used them.

Q. Did you hear or know of any expectation on the part of the colored people of any trouble or any fighting before this occurred?—A. Well, I had heard it rumored around that there was going to be a row before the election, or on the day of the election. I had heard that rumored around; but I don't know as that was reliable.

Q. Was there any expectation on the part of the colored people?—A. None that I know of.

Q. Do you know of any organization with a view to a riot?—A. None that I know of. I don't know as I know any colored man in the place that had any animosity to raise a row on that occasion.

Q. Did you vote on the day of the election?—A. I did.

Q. Did the colored people generally vote?—A. They did not.

Q. Do you know why they did not vote?—A. I only know this, as I had been one of the runners from poll to poll a great deal to go about and hunt them up, and I went and voted myself, and asked a great many to vote, and they said they were not going to vote; they did not want to be slaughtered up.

Q. Was there a general fear among the colored people?—A. They said there was.

Q. They were laboring under that misapprehension, you think?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Did you vote?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Nobody offered to interfere with you?—A. They did not. Still I will make this statement: they did not any one offer to interfere with me, and I was told that no one would insult me and say anything to me disrespectful, but a gentleman did say something to me that I don't think was very pleasant. If I had wanted to kick up a row it might have caused it.

Q. He did not offer you any violence, did he? He said something you thought unpleasant.—A. He said something I don't think he ought to have said to me.

Q. You saw Reagan kick and shoot at Redd.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say he had hold of him and kicked him, and then shot at him.—A. He had hold of him by the shoulder.

Q. Redd was not shot, was he?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did he miss him?—A. Oh, I don't know how that was; he was close enough to hit, but I know he shot.

Q. It was evident that he was only trying to scare him.—A. I am unable to tell that.

Q. Well, if he was that close, close enough to take hold of him, why didn't he hit him?—A. Oh, he shoved him off from him before he shot.

Q. How far did he shove him?—A. As far as from you to me, about 8 feet.

Q. If he had been anything of a shot he would not have missed him?—A. It is liable he shot. I am not able to say whether he intended to hit him or not.

Q. Circumstances look that way, don't they, that he didn't try to hit him?—A. There is no telling—men in anger that way—what they will do.

Q. I ask you couldn't he shoot him at that distance.—A. I don't know; but I believe that if it hadn't been for Colonel Cabell they would have killed him.

Q. You were not asked that question. I asked you whether he could have hit if he wanted to.—A. I have shot at things that were close and missed them.

Q. May be you are a mighty bad shot, and did not shoot at things as big as a man.—A. No, sir; never as big as a man.

Q. Well, it is little out of the common for a man used to a pistol to miss a man that close, isn't it, and take two cracks at him at that?—A. Well, it is according to the state of excitement.

Q. Well, you won't admit it.—A. What they intended I don't know.

Q. But you are certain that it was Reagan.—A. Well, I think I am very sure it was Mr. Reagan.

Q. How far away were you?—A. I suppose I was about a hundred yards.

Q. Now, Mr. Reagan who is here, swears he did not shoot. Who do you think knows best, he or you?—A. I don't know.

Q. You won't admit that he knows best.—A. He has a right to swear that and I have a right to swear what I think.

Q. You have got a right to swear as you please and so has he.—A. Certainly I have. Don't you think I have?

Q. I think sometimes a man must be guided in his swearing by what he thinks the facts are.—A. Well, that I think is the fact.

Q. How far does Redd live from town?—A. Well, I don't know; I think it is called three miles; I am not positive.

Q. He lives at a place called New Design, does he not?—A. He lives right there.

Q. Well, he is in town very frequently. Isn't he a leading politician and chairman of the executive committee of his district?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I will only ask you one question more. What was the slight thing you thought was not right on the day of the election that was said to you that was unpleasant?—A. Well, I went up there to vote, as I fully intended to vote. I knew very well one thing, that I had been told that there was not to be any disturbance by some men I had confidence in; and I knew I had been told so by some I didn't have any in, and I went up with every intention to vote, behave as I always did, and if any one came up there to vote to advise them to vote, and if they wanted the Coalition ticket to give it to them; and they had a plankway up betwixt the colored and the whites; and it seems that when I got there one of the judges or one of the clerks had gone out somewhere. Mr. Schoolfield said to me to hold on, that one of them was gone, and that I should be the next man to vote. There was no crowd about the voting. There was a gentleman standing there with a dog, and the plank was about a foot and a half from the ground, so that we could look over in one another's face. He remarked to his dog, "Come back, sir, to this side, you aint no nigger; don't stay over there with a nigger." Now if I had been a man like some men that would have caused a row. But I did not pay any attention to it; I disliked it, though.

Q. Do you think that that would be worse than saying, "Here I am?" Would you have thought that a very insulting expression to you?—A. It depends altogether upon what we had been talking about. But it seems a man comparing a man with a dog, or something of the kind; and I had always respected the man highly—thought highly of him.

Q. That was his greeting to you as a voter at the polls?—A. And then he was a man put there to keep the order; he was put there as a judge to preserve order and see that everybody was voted. It did not seem very like he was preserving order.

Q. How many negroes voted that day in Danville?—A. I am not able to tell you.

Q. Do you know how many of your people voted the Democratic ticket?—A. I don't. If any of them voted it, it is not their sentiment; I will say that.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 18, 1884.

HENSE LAWSON (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. My home has been in Danville, but I came from Boston here.

Q. How long did you live in Danville prior to November?—A. About eighteen or nineteen years.

Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty-nine.

Q. Have you a family?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you live in Danville in November last?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether you had any controversy with Charles Noel on the 3d day of November.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you see Noel on that day?—A. It was in the morning. I was coming down town and met him. I stepped one side to get out of the way of some ladies, and him and me run together, and I said, "Excuse me," and he said, "What in the hell do you say?"

Q. Repeat that remark again, and commence again and speak more clearly. You say you met him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—Coming down Main street, in Danville.

Q. Well.—A. And I run up against Noel. Me and him both run together.

Q. Were you going in opposite directions?—A. I was going down and he was going up, and we run together. I told him "Excuse me," and he said "What in the hell do you mean, you damned black nigger," or something of that kind.

Q. What about meeting a lady there?—A. I was getting out of the way of the lady.

Q. Well, what about the lady?—A. I was getting out of the way of the lady.

Q. Very well.—A. And me and Mr. Noel run together, and I told him "Excuse me."

Q. Who was the lady, do you know?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was she white or black?—A. She was white. There were three of them coming out of the store together.

Q. And you were getting out of their way, and in that way run against Noel?—A. Me and Noel went up together.

Q. What did you say?—A. I say as I was going down Main street—

Q. I know, but what did you say when you first encountered him?—A. I told him to excuse me.

Q. And what did he say?—A. He asked me, "You damned nigger, what do you mean running against?" —

Q. Repeat that and speak louder.—A. He say, "You damned nigger, what do you mean be running up against me?" and that time Lewellyn and he—

Q. Repeat what he said and there stop.—A. When I first run against him?

Q. Yes.—A. I told him to excuse me, and he called me a damned nigger, and asked me what did I mean.

Q. Then what did he do?—A. I went on, and Davis said to me "Go on," and he hit Davis, and Davis knocked him out in the gutter twice.

Q. Who is that?—A. Davis Lewellyn.

Q. He hit Davis?—A. And Davis knocked him out in the gutter twice.

Q. Did you pass on?—A. I went on, and that evening he was going down the street——

Q. Just wait a moment. Where did you go from there?—A. I walked on from there about 50 yards, I guess.

Q. Did Lewellyn join you again?—A. Yes; me, and him went on down town.

Q. When next did you see Noel that day?—A. I saw him going down street in a buggy, I think it was Mr. Holland's buggy, and he kept looking back, and I told Lewellyn to watch out, "That fellow is coming back to tackle you."

Q. You speak too fast. What did you say to Lewellyn?—A. I told him to watch out, that fellow was going to tackle him that attacked him in the morning, and then this fellow run up and hit me two licks with a pair of knucks.

Q. Was he in a wagon?—A. No, sir; he got down from that wagon in front of the opera house.

Q. Was that the time that he met you in the wagon?—A. I didn't say wagon, I said buggy.

Q. Did he get out the buggy?—A. He got out at the opera house and I told Lewellyn to look out.

Q. Well, what occurred in the street when you met him in the buggy?—A. He kept looking back, and I spoke to Lewellyn and said, "That white feller is coming back to tackle you about what happened this morning."

Q. Where did you and Lewellyn go, then?—A. He went in front of the opera house where speaking was.

Q. Where did he leave his buggy?—A. He left it there.

Q. How soon after that did he come back?—A. About three minutes; didn't have far to go; right down street about eight doors.

Q. What occurred then?—A. I had my face towards Lewellyn, and he just run up to me and hit me with a pair of knucks twice.

Mr. VANCE. It is not worth while to continue this examination, so far as I am concerned. I can't hear a word. Talk a little louder.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When Noel came back after he went to leave his buggy at the opera house, you say he came up; what did he say to you?—A. He didn't say a word; just hauled off and struck me.

Q. What did you say he struck you with?—A. A pair of knucks.

Q. What do you mean by a "pair of knucks"?—A. Something to put on a man's fingers—go over his fingers.

Q. What were they made of?—A. I couldn't tell; I know it was a pair of knucks.

Q. Over his fist?—A. Yes, sir; they may have been made of iron; I couldn't tell.

Q. Where were you standing?—A. I was standing on the street—three of us together.

Q. Who was with you?—A. Davis Lewellyn and James Love.

Q. Was it on the street or sidewalk?—A. Right on the street. I didn't have my face towards him at all. I had my face towards Lewellyn.

Q. But he struck you?—A. Yes, sir; struck me twice.

Q. Who was with Noel?—A. A feller named Lea. I know him. After Noel had hit me twice——

Q. Hold on, before you say what he did. Who else, if any one, was with Noel?—A. There were several white gentlemen. I don't know how many there was. I didn't know them.

Q. You don't know who they were?—A. But Lea was closer to Noel than any one else. He came up with a pistol in his hand.

Q. Had Noel any weapon?—A. He didn't have anything but knucks as I know of.

Q. Did you see the pistol?—A. I saw Lea's pistol.

Q. Well, now, what did Lea do?—A. Lea cocked his pistol in my face and says, "Stand back; I will shoot the last one of you damned nigger's heads off."

Q. "Stand back; I will"—what is it?—A. "Shoot the last one of you damned nigger's heads off."

Q. And how many blows did Noel strike you?—A. Noel then struck me three times; struck me right here on the head. [Indicating.] There's the place on my head where he struck me; and I caught him by the neck and I hit him once, and at that time all the whites run up with pistols in their hands, several of them; but I know Lea particularly more than any one else. He had his pistol cocked.

Q. You say you caught him by the neck; what occurred then? Repeat that again.—A. Then Lea run up with his pistol cocked right in my face, and several other men came out of the insurance office of Woolfolk & Blair, I think.

Q. There was a man standing at the door of the insurance office with a gun; who was he?—A. I don't know particularly who it was. They were handing out guns right there then.

Q. At that time?—A. They were handing guns out of the office.

Q. Well, after these blows were struck, what did you do; were you separated?—A. I was separated, and these white gentlemen came up the street, and I went in Paxton's jewelry store, between Miller & Brown's, and up that way where hardly anybody went, and I struck Union street and went on down.

Q. And got out of the way?—A. Got out of the way.

Q. To go back a little. Now, when Noel passed you in the buggy, did you say anything to him?—A. I did not; did not open my mouth to him.

Q. Are you certain of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Repeat again what he said to you or Lewellyn.—A. When he was going down in the buggy?

Q. Yes.—A. He didn't say a word; kept looking back.

Q. After he passed, did you expect him to return?—A. Well, looking back, of course him and Lewellyn having had a row in the morning, I expected him to come back, and I told Davis at the time to watch out, or something of the kind—to expect him back.

Q. Did you mention that expectation to any one else?—A. None but we three going down the street.

Q. You three?—A. There was no one but we three together there.

Q. There was no one else in the crowd that was with you in any way, or that you had talked with about this fuss?—A. No one but just we three.

Q. But there were other people on the street?—A. Yes, sir; people passing back and forward on the street. They were not thinking anything of the kind, I reckon.

Q. What were they, white or black?—A. White and black.

Q. After you went away from this affray, where did you go?—A. When I went away from the affray, I went to a friend of mine. I went up there and staid at the house that night. I was afraid to go down that night. It was close to where I roomed at—right upstairs there.

Q. Did you hear the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you then?—A. I was out from it about 20 yards, I guess.

Q. Near by, then?—A. Yes, sir; across the street, close to where the firing was.

Q. How long did you stay in Danville after that?—A. I staid in Danville about a week after that. I didn't go out in the street. I was in a room all the time. They gave me good advice not to go out.

Q. Why were you in the room? Why didn't you go out?—A. I was scared to go out. The colored fellows there told me they was going to take my life, and all that; different fellows.

Q. You were told you were in danger?—A. Yes, sir; I was. After that I went about 25 miles from Danville, up to my aunt's, and staid there four or five days, and after that I went to Boston, Mass.; telegraphed my mother I was going to Boston, and she sent me money and I went on to Boston.

Q. Then your mother lives there?—A. My mother is in Boston, Mass.

Q. Where have you been ever since?—A. I have been in Boston.

Q. Ever since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you been doing in Boston?—A. I haven't been doing anything in particular. I have never had any regular job there at all, it has been so poor.

Q. I will ask you whether you said to Mr. Noel, or to any one, "By God, here I am?"—A. I did not.

Q. You are certain you said nothing of that kind?—A. I didn't say anything to Mr. Noel at all.

Q. When Noel came back, didn't he say anything to you?—A. He didn't say anything; just hit me. I had my face turned toward Lewellyn, and he just hit me.

Q. Did you see Lea coming?—A. Yes, sir; and I told Lewellyn to watch out.

Q. Did he say nothing to you?—A. Didn't open his mouth.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't he ask you if you were the man who had called out to him?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. How did you know he had knuckles on?—A. I saw them on his hand. They were either brass or iron, one; they were colored.

Q. Where did he strike you?—A. He struck me right here. [Indicating.] He didn't give me but three blows.

Q. How much taller is he than you?—A. I don't know exactly how much taller, but he is taller any way.

Q. What is your height?—A. I don't know exactly; I couldn't tell you exactly my height.

Q. Well, I want you to be measured. I want to know your height and weight. Do you know how much you weigh?—A. Not exactly. I couldn't tell exactly how much I weigh now.

Q. Well, I want you to ascertain that.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any marks left upon your face? How much did he hurt you?—A. This eye [indicating] was closed about two days.

Q. The left eye?—A. Yes, sir. Closed about two days.

Q. Did he draw blood anywhere?—A. He bruised my head. I couldn't see the bruises, but other persons saw them.

Q. Did he draw blood?—A. From my head? No, sir.

Q. Did you bleed anywhere?—A. I bled from the corner of my eye and from my nose.

Q. How many blows did you receive from him?—A. I received three.

Q. What blows did you give him in return?—A. I caught hold and grabbed him on the collar and hit him one lick ; at that time Lea run up with his pistol.

Q. Did you fight back any more than that ?—A. No, sir ; I just went over to Paxton's jewelry shop.

Q. What effort was made by the colored policemen there to separate you ?—A. Bob. Adams run up, a colored police ; he said he was on duty, or something of the kind, and I heard the white people cuss him ; I turned right off the best way I could.

Q. Did he have a pistol in his hand ?—A. I didn't see any pistol in his hand.

Q. But you heard him come up and say something ; what did he say when he came up ?—A. He come up and spoke to some one, I am not sure ; I saw him come up ; tried to separate the fuss ; asked what had occurred, and these white people said something to him, I don't know exactly what they said ; any way, I just turned my back to it to leave.

Q. You left as soon as you could ?—A. As soon as I could.

Q. Did Lea say anything before you struck Noel ?—A. Before I struck Noel ? No, sir.

Q. What did he say, then, after you struck Noel ? Give his exact words.—A. He just came up with his pistol cocked in his hand and said to stand back.

Q. To stand back ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was the pistol pointed ?—A. The pistol was right up in my face after I grabbed Noel.

Q. Up in your face ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it touch you ?—A. No, sir ; didn't touch me at all ; I got out as soon as I could ; I just turned back and went off.

Q. Did you see any one try to get the pistol away from Lea ?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You were anxious to get away and got away ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any difficulty with Noel before ?—A. No, sir, I didn't.

Q. Did you know him ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you know him ?—A. I just know him by sight.

Q. You had never spoken with him ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had no difficulty with him ?—A. No, sir ; never did in my life.

Q. Before the meeting on the street that day ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Taylor ?—A. I know some Taylors in town. I don't know which one you speak of.

Q. W. R. Taylor, one of the witnesses here. Do you know him ; one of those who were present ? Had you ever seen him before ?—A. If his home is in Danville, I know him.

Q. Had you any controversy with him at any time before this affair ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never had ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you remember meeting Mr. Taylor two days before when he had a gun—carrying a gun—do you remember anything of that kind ?—A. I don't.

Q. Did you ever make motions or signs at Mr. Taylor of an insulting character ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had never had any quarrel or controversy with Mr. Taylor ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You now know him, do you, so you can identify the man ; Mr. William R. Taylor, a tobacconist ?—A. I know his face.

Q. But you don't know him further than that ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never had any colloquy with him or controversy with him, had you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are certain of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether, after Noel passed you going in a buggy, you collected a crowd around?—A. I did not; just three of us came on down town.

Q. How far were you standing when he came up and struck you, from where he was in the buggy?—A. In the buggy he went to the opera house?

Q. And where were you standing; where had you gone; had you moved?—A. We were walking right on down the street.

Q. Towards the opera house?—A. Yes, sir; we were going on down.

Q. You three?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he passed you in the buggy and went to the opera house, and then came right back?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were just passing along the street the same way that he was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you follow him down?—A. No, sir; he passed me, and I spoke to Lewellyn to watch out for him; Lewellyn had it first; but I said, "Watch out, you are going to get in a fuss," or something of that kind.

Q. You say you had gathered no one or mentioned the subject to no one except you three?—A. No; we three were just walking on down the street. I was not expecting any lick at all.

Q. Had you any arms?—A. No, sir; I hadn't.

Q. No pistol on your person?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had Lewellyn any?—A. Lewellyn didn't have any either.

Q. Do you know that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had the third man who was with you any pistol?—A. No, sir; neither of us armed at all.

Q. Were you expecting a controversy or fight that day?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Had any notice been given you of any expectation of a fight?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or a controversy?—A. No, sir; there hadn't.

Q. What was your business there? What were you engaged at before this affair?—A. I was not doing anything particular at that time, but my regular business was bar-keeper. I stay at Nicholas & Hessberg's.

Q. You were not then engaged in anything?—A. Not at that time.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. When you saw Mr. Noel that morning, and ran against him on the street, who was present beside your friend Davis?—A. James Love.

Q. Who is he, a white man or colored man?—A. Colored.

Q. You three were together when he passed?—A. Yes, sir; just we three.

Q. Well, you say that he turned and asked you, "What the hell do you mean, you damned black nigger," or something?—A. Yes, sir; something of that kind.

Q. And then he struck Davis?—A. Struck Davis. Davis told me to go on, and he struck Davis.

Q. What made him strike Davis?—A. Davis says to go on. I asked him to excuse me, and he struck Davis. I didn't strike him at all that morning.

Q. But Davis told you to go on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Told who to go on?—A. Me.

Q. And he struck Davis because Davis told you to go on?—A. Yes, sir, struck Davis; and Davis knocked him out in the gutter twice, I think.

Q. Davis knocked him out in the gutter twice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell him when he turned to you to know what you meant, that you were getting out of the way of a lady?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told him that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't he then say, "That is all right?"—A. He called me a damned nigger. That is all he called me, and I went on.

Q. I didn't ask of you what he called you. I say didn't he say, "That is all right?"—A. No, sir; he didn't.

Q. Didn't he then start on himself?—A. He stood right in the same place and struck Davis.

Q. Well, let us get along a little slower. After those words about why you run against him, didn't he start on himself?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. And then didn't Davis say something to him?—A. No, sir; Davis spoke to me.

Q. Didn't Davis say, "It aint all right; what the hell are you going to do about it?"—A. No, sir; he didn't.

Q. Do you know any good reason why he didn't strike you, the man who had insulted him, instead of striking Davis?—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Is Davis as big a man as you, or bigger?—A. We are both same size, I guess.

Q. Did you strike Mr. Noel then?—A. No, sir; I did not. Me and him didn't have no words in the morning.

Q. Did Love strike Noel?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody but Davis, and Davis knocked him back into the gutter twice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he do then?—A. He went right on down street then.

Q. Noel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He went on down street. Now what time was it when Mr. Noel passed you riding in a buggy?—A. I think it was about 4 o'clock as near as I can get at it; don't know the exact time; it was about 4, I guess.

Q. And where were you standing when his buggy passed?—A. I was walking. I was going down street.

Q. How long after the first trouble?—A. It was not many minutes. He just went to the opera house. I was about five or six doors from the opera house then.

Q. I say how long after the first trouble was it when he passed you going down street?—A. When the first trouble occurred it was about 12 or 1, I guess.

Q. This was some three or four hours afterwards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were in the middle of the street, were you, or on the sidewalk?—A. On the sidewalk, walking right down, just us three.

Q. You were on the sidewalk, he was in the street in his buggy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did it come that you spoke to him? Why did you speak to him?—A. I didn't speak to him at all.

Q. Who of your company spoke to him?—A. No one in our crowd. There was just we three. Neither one of us didn't speak to him.

Q. How was his attention attracted to you? You said he looked at you.—A. He was looking back in his buggy.

Q. What made him look back?—A. I told Davis to watch out. I was not studying about his having anything against me.

Q. Did he stop his buggy at all?—A. No, sir; he just kept on down street and kept looking back.

Q. You told Davis to watch out he was going to fight him, or something of the kind?—A. Yes, sir; from what happened in the morning.

Q. What made you think he was going to do that when he kept driving right on and didn't stop?—A. I saw him looking back.

Q. By his looking back you thought he was going to fight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But he kept right on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, you saw his buggy stop in front of the opera house, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you kept right on?—A. I didn't go by the opera house.

Q. I didn't ask you whether you went by the opera house, but you kept on walking down the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Toward where the buggy had stopped?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were walking right into what you thought was going to be a fight?—A. No, sir; I didn't think anything of the kind.

Q. Didn't you think there was going to be a fight from his looking back?—A. I told Davis to watch out; I didn't think he was going to fight me at all.

Q. You told Davis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when he got out of the buggy you still thought strongly about that, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You still kept walking down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Right towards the buggy?—A. Yes, sir; I was going right on down towards the buggy.

Q. Now how many people followed you as you walked on down the street?—A. Just we three together.

Q. There were some others, were there not?—A. Some passing up and down.

Q. Well, there were some other colored people in the street that followed on down towards the buggy, were there not?—A. No, sir; there wasn't.

Q. No one? How many were on the street when Noel came back with his two friends Taylor, and Lea?—A. Just we three together; just as when we first started.

Q. How many colored people were standing around near you?—A. I don't know exactly; there were about ten, I guess.

Q. About ten; something like that. How many men were with Noel?—A. Noel and several more white fellows came on together.

Q. How many?—A. I don't know exactly.

Q. Was there more than Taylor and Lea?—A. Yes, there was.

Q. Who were they?—A. I don't know.

Q. How many do you think there were?—A. I don't know exactly; several men in the street.

Q. Come within one hundred of it, if you can. Was there a dozen with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A dozen with him when he came up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were all armed and flourishing their revolvers, weren't they?—A. I didn't see any one have pistols, except Lea and Hatcher.

Q. Hatcher was there, was he? Did you see Lea with a pistol?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't see Taylor with a pistol, did you?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. Did you see the policeman, Adams, with a pistol?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Noel say anything to you or to Davis when he came up?—A. No, sir; he just came up and struck me.

Q. Just came up and struck you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without a word? Why did he strike you instead of Davis?—A. I don't know, sir; him and Davis had a falling out in the morning, and I wasn't expecting anything of the kind myself.

Q. Did he ask you why you were hollering to him on the street?—A. No, sir.

Q. And he didn't say one word?—A. No, sir; him and Lea was together.

Q. How long did the fight between you and him last?—A. It was not many minutes.

Q. Give us an idea.—A. It was not more than two minutes, I reckon.

Q. It was not more than about two minutes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see a struggle between Adams and some white man, Mr. Lea, for instance?—A. I saw Robert Daniels coming up in the crowd.

Q. Well, about the time the fight was over between you and Noel, did you see Lea and Adams in a struggle?—A. No, sir; I did not. I just turned my back and went up the street.

Q. Did you hear the pistol fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you then?—A. I was out of the way then.

Q. You were marching off then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, when Mr. Lea drew his pistol did he tell you to stand back or the crowd to stand back?—A. He pointed the pistol right in my face.

Q. Oh, well, Noel was between you and him, wasn't he?—A. Yes, sir; but—

Q. Noel stepped in to fight you, and Lea was at his back, wasn't he?—

A. That was after Mr. Noel hit me three licks and I hit him once.

Q. That was after he struck you three licks that Lea pointed at you?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then Lea came with his pistol in his hand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the colored people rushed up?—A. No, sir; the whites made them stand back.

Q. Why did the whites make them stand back if they didn't rush up?—A. They came towards me, and the whites made them stand back.

Q. Now, was not that the way Lea had his pistol when he pointed his pistol; it was at the crowd that was rushing up, wasn't it?—A. Yes; white and black.

Q. Didn't Mr. Lea say there was going to be a fair fight without any weapons, and they had to stand back?—A. No, sir; he didn't make use of any expression of that kind.

Q. Do you swear he didn't?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or do you swear you didn't hear it, which?—A. I didn't hear it.

Q. Do you swear that Mr. Lea had knucks on?—A. Mr. Noel; I will swear Noel had knucks.

Q. And that he struck you with brass knucks?—A. Knucks; I don't know whether they were brass or not.

Q. Well, what they call brass knucks—those things fixed on the fingers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he leave any scars on your face?—A. Yes, sir, on my eye here.

Q. Where else did he strike you on the face?—A. He struck me twice on the eye and once on the head.

Q. How long was it that you couldn't see out of your eye?—A. It was about two days, I guess.

Q. There is no scar there now, is there?—A. No, sir, not much; a small place, not much.

Q. Well, brass knucks would leave a pretty big scar about the eye, wouldn't they?—A. I don't know as to that; according to how you hit a man.

Q. Well, Noel was a big, stout, strong-armed man, wasn't he?—A. He was quite a tall man, but not very heavy, I guess.

Q. Well, he could strike a blow hard enough with a pair of brass knucks to make a mark on a man's cheek or eyebrow, couldn't he?—A. He looked like he might do it, according to his size.

Q. Where did you go after that—after you had the fight?—A. I went through an alley to Paxton's jewelry store.

Q. You didn't stay there until the final row took place?—A. No, sir; I didn't stay there at all; I just left.

Q. Whereabouts were you when you first saw Noel pass along in the buggy?—A. When I first saw Noel?

Q. Yes; not in the morning, but when he was in his buggy going out of town; where were you when you saw him?—A. He was coming down town to the opera house; he was not going; he stopped his buggy right in front of the opera house.

Q. Well, you don't know where he started to go, do you?—A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. Whereabouts were you standing when Noel passed you on the street?—A. I wasn't standing; I was walking.

Q. Whereabouts were you walking when Noel passed you on the street?—A. I was walking right down Main street, in Danville.

Q. Whereabouts on Main street, in Danville?—A. I just started, and going right on down.

Q. Where were you on Main street when Noel passed you in the buggy?—A. When Noel passed me?

Q. Yes.—A. I guess I was near about Paxton's silversmith shop.

Q. How far is that from the opera house?—A. It is about eight doors, I guess.

Q. That don't give us any idea; how many yards.—A. I couldn't tell you exactly; I don't know that; I couldn't tell you how many yards.

Q. Well, you have some idea.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean by eight doors, the width of the store, I suppose?—A. I mean the number of doors.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. The number of doors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Haven't you got this a little mixed up? Didn't you first meet Noel coming in a buggy; and after he passed you didn't he then turn around and go back the other way?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. You swear that he did not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That he didn't turn the buggy around in the street after he saw you and go back towards the opera house?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are certain of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how far was it? You have said from where he passed you to the opera house was about 50 yards.—A. He was just about 50 yards, I guess, from Paxton's jewelry store.

Q. Now, you were walking on the sidewalk, and he was driving in a buggy. How far from where he passed you was it to Woolfolk & Blair's office, where the fight took place?—A. The fight took place, I think, at Woolfolk & Blair's office.

Q. I know; but how far from where he passed you is that?—A. It is about six or seven doors, I guess.

Q. Now he drove on; was he going at a walk or a trot?—A. He was trotting.

Q. He drove on to the opera house and stopped his buggy in front of the opera house and got out and went upstairs, didn't he?—A. I don't know whether he went upstairs or not.

Q. Well, he got out and went into the house?—A. He got out; I can't tell where he went, and him and Lea came on up together.

Q. Well, he got out and disappeared?—A. I might have been looking across the street; I was not thinking where he was until he came right up to me and hit me.

Q. Lea and Taylor were not with him when he was in the buggy, were they?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, he got out and went somewhere and got Lea and Taylor, didn't he?—A. I suppose so; I don't know.

Q. How did you know that he stopped at the opera house?—A. The buggy stopped there.

Q. Did you see him get out? Didn't you see him go anywhere?—A. I didn't see him go anywhere in particular.

Q. Where did you see him go in general?—A. I didn't see him go anywhere in particular.

Q. How long was it after that that you saw him coming up the street with Taylor and Lea?—A. About two to three minutes.

Q. What were you doing at that time?—A. We were walking on down street.

Q. If you were walking down street, could you not have passed the opera house and been gone out of sight before he came with Taylor and Lea?—A. No, sir.

Q. From where he passed you to Woolfolk's office, how far do you say it was?—A. I suppose about six or seven blocks.

Q. Six or seven blocks?—A. I didn't say blocks—doors I mean.

Q. How far in feet?—A. I don't know exactly.

Q. Well, give us some idea as near as you can.—A. About 40, I guess—something of that kind.

Q. Now, from where he passed you to the opera house, you say is 50 yards, that is 150 feet, and then from the opera house back to where he met you is about 100 feet, isn't it?—A. I don't know exactly; it's not that far, I guess.

Q. Well, is it something like that?—A. Yes; I think it is something like that; I don't know exactly.

Q. That will make 250 feet that he moved while you moved only 40 feet?—A. No, sir; I don't think it is that far.

Q. Well, say just as you think then.—A. From where we met?

Q. From where he passed you to the opera house you say was about 50 yards, and from where he passed you to in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office was about 40 feet?—A. Yes, sir; something like that.

Q. Now he passed that 150 feet and came back about 100 feet more, and you and your friends hadn't moved more than about 40 feet?—A. Yes, sir; something like that.

Q. Now, what were you lounging and leisuring in that way for?—A. In what manner?

Q. Walking so slow.—A. We didn't have a thing to do, just walking along smoking.

Q. Well, an ordinary pace would have taken you away beyond the opera house by that time, wouldn't it?—A. I don't know but that we stopped as we came on; we were going very slow.

Q. Yes, very slow; and you don't know but what you stopped?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you expected from the moment he looked back that there was going to be a fight, and you marched on slowly toward the man who was to fight?—A. I expected him and Lewellyn was going to have a fuss.

Q. That is the reason you walked so slow, wasn't it?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is not the reason you walked in that direction, was it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you going?—A. We was going down town; no particular place myself. I was just coming on down with two other young men.

Q. Just idling around?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had nothing to do?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were out of employment? Did you have any weapons?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. None at all? Did Lewellyn have one?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any.

Q. How do you know that Lewellyn didn't have any?—A. I say I didn't see any.

Q. Didn't he usually carry a pistol?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you usually carry one there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't usually carry one? Why did you leave town?—A. Why did I leave town?

Q. Yes.—A. I thought my life was in danger and it was best for me to leave.

Q. Why was your life in danger any more than any other colored man in the place?—A. They are all in danger there.

Q. They are all in danger there every minute, arn't they?—A. Yes, I think so; anyway, I left there and don't expect to go back.

Q. Where did you go when you left there?—A. I went to Boston, Mass. The first place I went up to Reedsville, 25 miles, I guess, from Danville.

Q. From there you went to Boston?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are not going back to Danville any more?—A. I don't think I am.

Q. Now, how did it come that you and Lewellyn kept together all day after the first fuss in the morning?—A. Me and Lewellyn were particular friends and were together all the time.

Q. You were particular friends and were together all the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he staid with you and you were with him from that morning about twelve, when the first trouble occurred, until the fight? What became of Love?—A. Love was with us. We were all together.

Q. Did he stay with you too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. None of you had any weapons?—A. We had not, that I know of. I didn't have any.

Q. But you did expect there would be a fight?—A. No, sir; I didn't. After I saw him coming down street in a buggy I expected he and Davis were going to fight. I didn't expect me and him would have any trouble at all.

Q. I mean you expected a difficulty with your friends?—A. With Lewellyn.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Mr. Lawson, you say you felt yourself in danger. Is that the reason why you left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see the dead men? Do you know the number that were killed before you left?—A. No, sir; I didn't have many doors before I got to the alley.

Q. Well, you knew what occurred after this scuffle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you think that was sufficient reason for fear?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say some one advised you to go away; who was that?—A. There were several fellows there, their names I don't know exactly; even the man that I had been working for about 15 years, a white man, advised me to go away.

Q. What is his name?—A. Nicolas. He didn't advise me exactly, but he told some young men to tell me that I had better go off.

Q. Governor Vance wonders that you walked so slowly. Did you have any expectation of a fight?—A. No, sir; we were just walking on down the street slow—didn't have a thing to do—just walking slow.

Q. Smoking and doing nothing?—A. I was not studying about myself. Noel hit me in the eyes. He would never have hit me like he did if I was expecting it.

Q. When Noel passed you and went to the opera house, did you think anything more about his return?—A. I thought he was going to return and hit Davis. I was not thinking anything about his hitting me, and I had my face turned towards the store when he hit me.

Q. You didn't see him; were not looking for him with any expectation he was going to strike you?—A. I was not studying about his hitting me. I thought he was going to hit Davis.

DAVIS LEWELLYN sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. Were you there on the 3d of November last?—A. I was.

Q. Do you know Mr. Noel?—A. Well, I had seen him. I knew his face, but his name, personally, I did not know.

Q. Well, you know now who he is?—A. I know who he is now, hearing his name called; I may have heard it called before and not been paying attention to it.

Q. Do you remember an occurrence in the forenoon or about the middle of the day when you and Lawson, the last witness, met Mr. Noel?—A. Well, we were walking down street from up by the corner where Greenwald's clothing store used to be, walking very slow, Noel coming up the street, and this young man, Lawson, getting out of the way of a lady and happened to strike against Mr. Noel's foot, happened to strike against his heel, and he says, "What in the hell do you mean," and Lawson says, "I am getting out of the way of that lady, excuse me," and I say, "Go ahead, Hense, don't ask any pardon," when he struck me, and I knocked him out in the gutter twice.

Q. He struck you first, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. He struck me somewhere in the head; he being taller, I guess I could catch a lick; he didn't hit me very hard; then he turned and goes down street.

Q. What time in the day was that?—A. I suppose that was about 12 o'clock, or about 1; I think it was as near 1 as I can get at it, because I walked down to young Lawson's room and let him off, and went to my dinner.

Q. Do not go so fast, and just answer my questions. Now, were there ladies coming out of the store there?—A. I think they was coming out of the store or out of a little alley-way there.

Q. Well, there were ladies there at that time!—A. Yes, there were ladies there at that time.

Q. And it was to avoid getting up against them that Lawson hit Noel?—A. It was to avoid that?

Q. Getting out of the way, I mean.—A. Yes; I guess that is what it was.

Q. Now, what was the remark you made when Lawson excused himself that way?—A. After he had said that—after he had said “What do you mean,”—something, I forget it; but I called it a moment ago, as near as I could think of it.

Q. What was it that Noel said?—A. I think it was a “God damn nigger,” or “What in the hell do you mean, you God damn nigger.”

Q. It was some such expression as that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it you said to Lawson?—A. I told Lawson to go ahead, as he had begged his pardon.

Q. Go ahead, as he had begged his pardon; then what occurred? After you said that, what next occurred?—A. He said something, I don't know what it was, and struck me.

Q. Can you state the substance of what he said?—A. I could not say what he said; I did not hear him good, as I was not paying attention, at least I was not thinking about it much.

Q. The next thing you can state he struck you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do?—A. I struck him back, and knocked him in the gutter twice.

Q. Did you knock him down?—A. No, sir; just knocked down in the gutter.

Q. Off the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He then came back to you?—A. Yes; came back every time.

Q. And you knocked him in the gutter a second time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything said then?—A. No, sir; he just turned out and went down street, or goes up one; I don't know particularly which. I expected a mob to come up.

Q. That is all that occurred then, is it, that you can state?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you strike him with?—A. I struck him with my fist.

Q. From that time where did you and Lawson go?—A. From the time he struck me we continued to walk down street, and got near to his room.

Q. To whose room?—A. Lawson's room; and I left him, and left there and went across to my dinner.

Q. You separated from them and went to your dinner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then this occurred before dinner?—A. Yes, sir; it was a very short while; I eat my dinner.

Q. How long were you at dinner?—A. I could not tell exactly how long it was; sometimes I eat quicker than others. I don't know exactly what time it was.

Q. Where did you next see Lawson?—A. I think they were going up street, and I caught up with them.

Q. Going up Main street?—A. Yes, sir; going back up Main street toward the corner.

Q. In the opposite direction from where you were walking at the time this occurred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You overtook him as he was going up street?—A. Yes, sir; him and James Love.

Q. Had you seen Love that day before that?—A. I had seen Love I suppose about 10 o'clock; that is, about the time he came out of the factory.

Q. Well, Love was not with you when this first occurrence took place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time you and Noel had the fight?—A. Yes, sir; but he was walking a little behind.

Q. He did not take any part in it?—A. No, sir; he didn't say anything.

Q. When you went out after dinner you overtook Lawson and Love, if I understand you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Going up street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you go?—A. We were going up home to put on some clothes to come back down town and go with some girls.

Q. Very well; where did you go?—A. After we went up we concluded to walk down street slowly, smoking.

Q. You were smoking?—A. Yes, sir; we walked very slow; of course a man could walk very fast; walked down to the end of the block and back again; we walked very slow; might have stopped some; I don't know; talking and joking as usual.

Q. Where did you next see Mr. Noel?—A. Well, we walked down, I suppose, until we got in front of Woolfolk & Blair's insurance office; yes, I know we were there; and Noel came down in a buggy and looked back, and Hense says, "Davis, there is the fellow you had a little row with this morning; watch him, I expect he will pick a fuss with you." I says, "Oh, go away."

Q. He was driving down street, you say?—A. He was driving down street.

Q. On a trot?—A. On a trot.

Q. Did you notice where he went?—A. I guess he could not have gone any further than the opera house; I saw a buggy stand there; not taking very much notice of the buggy to see whose it was.

Q. You did not see him when he got out of his buggy?—A. I might have seen him when he got out of his buggy; I was not noticing him particularly.

Q. Did he say anything to you when he passed you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you say anything to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Lawson?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. Did Love?—A. He did not.

Q. Now, how soon after he passed did you see Mr. Noel again?—A. About two or three minutes him and George Lea—George Lea has got a side beard, kind of red. I suppose there was about eight or nine fellows come on back up there, but I could not say positively that I saw more than two pistols.

Q. You saw Noel and Lea; was there any one with Lea?—A. There was Noel, Lea, and another man, and there was a good many with them; I could not say positively how many there were.

Q. Cannot you give the names of any?—A. I can tell you Lea and Noel.

Q. Cannot you give the names of any others?—A. I don't know as I could.

Q. Where were they when you first saw them?—A. They were about opposite; right in front of John M. Johnson's hardware store.

Q. How far was that from where they passed you?—A. When the fellow first came in the buggy it was about in front of Paxton's.

Q. How far is that?—A. How far from where?

Q. From where you were when they passed you. How far were you from that spot when they came back and met you again; how far had you got down street?—A. After Noel had passed in the buggy?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't know; I suppose not very far.

Q. Tell as near as you can.—A. I don't know; I suppose some three or four doors; it might have been some more, might not have been as many; I don't know exactly.

Q. Now, what occurred when Noel and Lea came up?—A. Well, I suppose Hense was looking round, and he says, "Davis, here comes that fellow and some other fellows with him." I says, "He don't want me," just like that. He says, "You better look out; that fellow will beat you, I expect."

Q. That is what Lawson said to you?—A. And I was standing with my hands in my side something like this [indicating], and he came up and Hense was sort of looking like I was looking over here, and he came up and struck him in the eye; I don't know which eye; I think it was the left.

Q. Where were you standing?—A. I was standing just about as far as to the Senator.

Q. Three or four feet from him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was Love?—A. I suppose Love might have been standing out in the street; I didn't pay any particular attention.

Q. Where was Lea when Noel struck Lawson?—A. Lea stood back just like that, and there is Lawson [illustrating]. Lea says, "Stand back, there shan't a man touch him; I will blow his damn brains out." Mr. Lea, I says, that ain't fair——

Q. Wait a moment. Did Lea have any weapons?—A. Yes. He had a pistol right in my face; he had had it in Lawson's face, and put it in my face, but I didn't mind; I knew he was not going to shoot me.

Q. When Lea said that what did you do, if anything?—A. I did not do anything but stand and look on.

Q. How many times do you say that Noel struck Lawson?—A. He struck him two or three times; I couldn't remember the times. He may have struck him more.

Q. Did you see with what he struck him?—A. He had something on his hands. I took it to be a pair of knucks.

Q. You saw them, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say there was something more than his hand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By knucks you mean things that fasten over the fingers?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose it was a pair of brass knucks; I call them all brass knucks; I don't know.

Q. Did you see Lawson strike Noel?—A. I think Lawson, after he got him by the collar, struck him once.

Q. Then the first thing Lawson did was to catch Noel by the collar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice whether Noel got him by the collar?—A. He continued to hit him.

Q. Didn't you notice whether Noel had hold of him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With one hand and struck with the other?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which hand did he take hold by?—A. I couldn't tell that.

Q. Did Lea say anything when Lawson struck Noel?—A. I could not say whether he said anything or not.

Q. Well, did he say anything during that fight between Lawson and Noel?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. What is the first thing Lea did when Lawson came up there?—A. He put his pistol up and said, "Stand back; if anybody puts his hand on him, he would blow his God damned brains out."

Q. And he held out his pistol as he said that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any other one who came up there with Noel have a pistol?—A. I saw a good many white people have pistols then. Everybody I saw, nearly, had a pistol.

Q. Did they exhibit them—have them out?—A. All of them had them out.

Q. Do you remember anything any other one said, except what Lea said?—A. I couldn't say what any of them said; but I think all of them made the colored stand back. Lea made them stand back.

Q. Who separated Noel and Lawson?—A. Policeman Adams, a colored man.

Q. Did you notice whether he had a pistol?—A. No, sir; he did not have any pistol.

Q. Did you have one?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Lawson have one?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any colored man there who had a pistol?—A. No colored at all.

Q. You saw no colored man with a pistol?—A. No colored man with a pistol.

Q. Where did Lawson go when they were separated?—A. I think Lawson went up street, and went through the alley by Paxton's; I am not sure.

Q. Well, he went away from there?—A. He went away from there.

Q. Did you see him again until that contest was over?—A. I didn't see him any more until that night about 9 o'clock.

Q. What occurred after they were separated, and Lawson had left?—A. A good many words were used from the whites ordering the colored off the street.

Q. State what was said, as near as you can.—A. The white people told the negroes, "Now, you all better get off the street. If you don't, I expect to kill the last one of you."

Q. You heard that said, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether the colored people said anything in answer to that?—A. I didn't hear any say anything.

Q. What next occurred after they said that?—A. Joel Oliver, captain of the Danville Grays, standing in front of me, said, "This is the God damn son of a bitch I laid across last night." I said I was not down town last night. He says, "Wasn't you? I beg pardon." I said, "You ought to retract; it is mighty hard for a man to take that." He says, "I beg pardon; that is a retract;" and I stepped across, and I heard somebody say, "Fire on them; God damn them, kill them;" and immediately they commenced firing, and I went up to an office.

Q. You had started, then, for the purpose of finding where Lawson was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard that expression?—A. Yes, sir; just behind the crowd. And when they said, "Fire on them; kill the last God damned one of them."

Q. Was there any firing then?—A. The firing commenced in about half a minute, I guess, after that.

Q. From whom did the firing come?—A. Well, I heard the firing, and as soon as it come I got up and went.

Q. Were you where you could see who were firing?—A. If I had staid there, I might have seen the firing.

Q. But were you where you could see, or did you see?—A. No, sir; I couldn't see.

Q. Do you know who it was that said, "Fire on them;" do you know whose voice it was?—A. I think it was either Mr. Hatcher or Mr. Lea—either one of them that spoke. I take it to be one of those.

Q. Did you go back there where the firing was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did you go?—A. I went right across the street about like that [indicating] from where they were firing, up in a little office where Dr.—I forget the fellow's name. It was a doctor's office (used to be), Wooden & Paths, I think, and Gillham's saddle shop. I went up there where the doctor's office used to be, and I staid there until the firing stopped. Only one or two pistols fired after that.

Q. Did you notice where the colored people went when the firing commenced?—A. They went in different directions.

Q. They ran, did they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Firing after they ran?—A. They fired after them; fired whilst they were running.

Q. You heard that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. I went from there down to the drug store, and came from there to Squire Jones's room.

Q. Well, you went from that locality to another part of the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go back again that afternoon or evening?—A. No more than I came by the crowd to Westerly Jones' office.

Q. Did you see any of the men that were killed?—A. I saw two that were killed. I saw Ed. Davis and Jerry Smith, who lived at Jackson's Branch.

Q. Were they colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whom you knew?—A. I knew them.

Q. Were they single men, or men of family?—A. I don't know; I think Smith was a single man.

Q. Where was Smith shot, where did the ball hit him?—A. I did not take notice of that.

Q. Did you notice where the other man was shot?—A. I think he was shot in the head, from the way he had his coat over his head. I was coming up the street, and I was afraid they would shoot me, so I did not take notice.

Q. Now you have stated all you know of this occurrence, have you?—A. All that I know particularly.

Q. That is so far as you remember.—A. As far as I remember.

Q. How many shots do you think were fired in all?—A. I could not tell.

Q. You could tell something about it?—A. There was a good many shots; I took it to be about one hundred or more.

Q. Were the majority of them fired after the colored people ran?—A. When they told the colored people to stand back, they commenced firing, and I got out of the way myself.

Q. The moment they fired you say the colored people ran.—A. When they fired, they commenced falling back.

Q. Did they fire more guns or pistols after the colored people began to run away?—A. Yes, sir; they fired more after.

Q. Than they had fired before they started?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They started as soon as there was any firing.—A. As soon as the orders were given, they commenced running. I was back of the crowd myself. I got out of the way.

Q. Well, you heard that order.—A. Yes, sir; I heard that order.

Q. You heard the order to fire.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you go that night?—A. When the firing took place?

Q. No, that night after the trouble was over, where did you go?—A. I went to Squire Jones's room.

Q. Where is Squire Jones's room?—A. It is right up over Pickett Scott's barber shop, just opposite Nicholas & Hesberg's bar-room.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. I staid there, I suppose, about an hour.

Q. You spoke of finding Lawson. Where did you find him?—A. I went up to a lady friend's house of his, who he knew very well, from the city where he came, and he was there.

Q. Where did you stay that night?—A. I staid at home.

Q. Went to your own home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your business at that time of the year?—A. Well, I generally roll tobacco in the summer, but at that time of the year the factories commence closing, and I don't do anything until the season commences again.

Q. You work at the tobacco business then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you accustomed to smoke?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were Lawson and Love also accustomed to smoke?—A. Yes, sir; they smoke more than I do, both of them.

Q. Did you ever make cigars?—A. No, sir.

Q. You spoke of rolling tobacco. Do you mean putting it in bales?—

A. Making twists, coils, lumps, or anything like that.

Q. Putting it up in packages for market?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you remained in Danville ever since?—A. No, sir; I have been in Brooklyn, N. Y., ever since.

Q. When did you leave Danville?—A. I left Danville Sunday night, the 4th of November, I think.

Q. How came you to leave there?—A. My cousin advised me to leave.

Q. Who is your cousin?—A. C. Hawkins.

Q. You went to Brooklyn, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been there ever since?—A. I have been there ever since.

Q. What have you been doing there?—A. When I first went there I went to work in a factory, the week after I got there.

Q. You have been working there since you left, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other reason for your leaving except this occurrence?—A. Well, I thought my life was in danger.

Q. And that was the reason you left, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not stay to vote, then?—A. No, sir.

Q. How old are you?—A. I am going on about twenty-four years old.

Q. Had you registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were intending to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether Lawson had registered?—A. Yes, I think he had.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. How many colored men were there in town then out of employment?—A. I don't know the number.

Q. Well, you say the factories were all shut up?—A. I say they were closing up.

Q. There were a good many out of employment, were there not?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Two or three hundred?—A. I could not tell how many.

Q. A thousand?—A. I could not tell how many.

Q. Twenty?—A. I could not tell how many.

Q. Was there one?—A. I could not tell how many.

Q. You could not tell?—A. No, sir.

Q. Although you were out of employment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Hense was out of employment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Love was out of employment?—A. Love had got out that day. I don't know whether he was going to stay out all the time or not. I knew he was out at 10 o'clock that forenoon, or sooner.

Q. Then there were three that were out that you know of?—A. All three don't work in the tobacco business.

Q. Were you three employed that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you can say that you three were not employed that day?—A. Yes; me and Lawson. I don't know about Love.

Q. Now, when you and Love and Lawson came across Noel there in front of that store, do you say that when Lawson trod upon his foot he turned round and said, "What the hell do you mean, you damned black nigger you?"—A. I didn't say that.

Q. What did you say?—A. I said he was getting out of the way of a lady, and struck against his foot, and he says, "What in hell do you mean, you God damned black nigger?"

Q. And didn't he say, "That is all right?"—A. No, sir; he didn't say anything more; then I told Hense to go ahead.

Q. I did not ask you what you said. Didn't he say, when Lawson told him that he was getting out of the way of a lady, "Well, that is all right?"—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't he say that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you say to him, "It don't matter whether it is all right or not?"—A. Didn't I say to who that was all right?

Q. To Noel.—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not say, "No matter whether it is all right or not?"—A. I didn't say anything to him at all.

Q. Didn't you say anything to Lawson?—A. I says to go ahead, "You have asked him to excuse you."

Q. Go ahead where?—A. Down the street.

Q. You and Lawson were standing, were you not?—A. No; we could not be standing, and getting out of the way of the lady, too.

Q. You were standing on the street when Noel passed?—A. No, sir.

Q. What were you doing?—A. Walking down the street gradually, very slowly.

Q. Which way was Noel going?—A. Up the street.

Q. He was going one way, and you the other; you were meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he struck you simply because you told Lawson to go on; he had begged his pardon?—A. I don't know anything else he struck me for.

Q. Did Lawson strike him, too?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't both of you attack him?—A. No, sir; nobody but myself.

Q. Didn't Love?—A. No, sir; Love was a little behind us.

Q. How far behind you?—A. I could not tell. I don't suppose it was very far. I was not looking behind me. I was looking at the man striking me.

Q. What time of day was it when you next met Noel in the buggy?—A. I don't know as I met him in the buggy. He was going down street, and I was going down street.

Q. Wasn't he going one way and you the other?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you certain of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are certain that he did not turn the buggy round in consequence of something said to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not hear anybody exclaim, "Here I am," with an oath?—A. No, sir.

Q. To call attention?—A. No, sir; not to speak to him.

Q. Were you on the sidewalk or in the street?—A. On the sidewalk.

Q. On the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he drove right on and did not stop?—A. Drove right on and looked back.

Q. Did not stop, did he?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any harm in his looking back?—A. I don't know of any harm in his looking back.

Q. How did he come to look back, if somebody did not call to him, or something?—A. I reckon a man will look where he pleases going down or up the street.

Q. But a man don't generally look back without something attracting his attention.—A. Oh, I reckon he would do as he pleases without anything attracting his attention particularly. A man will look anywhere whether he is driving or walking.

Q. You don't have to look at your horse?—A. Yes, sir; you look at your horse, or you can do anything you want to when you are driving a buggy.

Q. You knew where to go, then, didn't you?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. You followed on right down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You followed on in the direction you were going?—A. I didn't have any business to turn back; I was not going back; didn't follow him; I was not thinking about him.

Q. You did follow him, didn't you?—A. No, sir; I didn't follow him.

Q. Well, did you go before him?—A. I could not go before him. He was driving and I was walking.

Q. Then you followed after him?—A. I walked down street, as I was doing first.

Q. Where had you started for?—A. I hadn't started for any particular place, I don't think.

Q. Did you walk very fast?—A. No; very slow.

Q. What became of him?—A. He drove down, I suppose, in front of the opera-house door. I didn't take much notice of him.

Q. Why, Lawson had notified you that that was the man you had had the fuss with, who was looking back, and he expected you to have a fuss with him.—A. He told me——

Q. You did not pay any attention to the man you expected to attack you?—A. No; I did not expect him to attack me.

Q. Didn't you see where he went?—A. I couldn't tell where he went.

Q. Didn't you say you saw him get out at the opera house?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you see him get out of his buggy?—A. No, sir; I was not noticing him.

Q. Paying no attention at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see him get out of his buggy and go on the sidewalk, and into the opera house?—A. No, sir; I was not noticing him.

Q. Did you see him coming out of the opera house?—A. I was not noticing which way he came until he got in front of this hardware store.

Q. Didn't Lawson say to you, "Yonder he comes with his friends?"—

A. That is when he was in front of the hardware store. We were walking along gradually, and after we got there he stopped and hit Lawson.

Q. Now, when Mr. Noel came up with Lea and Taylor did you say Taylor was one of them?—A. I don't know Taylor. He might have been there.

Q. How many men came up with him?—A. I could not say; about eight, or nine, or ten. I could not say.

Q. Did not pay much attention. The matter did not concern you—
A. The attention I paid, of course——

Q. You don't know how many men he brought up the street with him from the opera house?—A. I could not tell you exactly.

Q. To the best of your ability, how many?—A. I could not say how many.

Q. You could say how many you think.—A. I didn't have no judgment how many there were.

Q. You are not a judge of numbers.—A. I am not a judge of numbers if I have no business with them.

Q. I know you had no concern in the world, did not feel any interest in it, but give us the best of your judgment.—A. I did not have any concern with the men; no, I didn't have anything to do with them.

Q. Well, you heard my question. How many white men, to the best of your judgment, came up with Noel?—A. I could not say.

Q. Yes, you can say to the best of your judgment; probably you cannot say exactly.—A. I would not like to say.

Q. Oh, yes, you would; you would like to say now, if you will.—A. Well, I will say eight, or nine, or ten; probably there might have been more or might have been less.

Q. But, to the best of your judgment, it was eight, or nine, or ten came up from the opera house with Noel.—A. I suppose so; I could not tell. It might have been more or it might have been less; I could not say.

Q. But your opinion is that it might have been eight, or nine, or ten.—
A. I suppose about that—I could not say; more or less.

Q. What were the first words passed when they came up where you were?—A. No words passed at all that I heard; but that fellow struck Lawson, and Lea pointed that pistol, and says, "Stand back; I will shoot the last God damned one of you."

Q. To whom did he say that?—A. To the crowd, I guess.

Q. How many were there in the crowd?—A. I could not say how many.

Q. How many do you think there were of colored men with Lawson?—
A. I know that there were three there.

Q. You know that; but how many others?—A. I could not say.

Q. You could give us an idea.—A. I did not take any notice; I was noticing the fight.

Q. Oh, I reckon you could.—A. Oh, I could say, but I could not say to be positive of the fact.

Q. I don't want you to be positive; I just want you to give the best of your judgment.—A. I don't know; but there may have been some passed.

Q. How many were there when Lea presented his pistol and told them to stand back?—A. I was not paying attention to what was behind me.

Q. Who was there when he said stand back?—A. I walked up to see the fight.

Q. You were right with Lawson at the time, were you not?—A. I was on the edge of the curbstone, and he was about middle way of the street.

Q. What did you have in your hand ?—A. I didn't have anything.

Q. Didn't have a pistol ?—A. No, sir.

Q. What had you done with your pistol ?—A. I didn't have any.

Q. You owned one, didn't you ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you get one in your room when you went down there ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You went home to dinner, didn't you ?—A. I went to the place where I board.

Q. Didn't you get a pistol then ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you get one from somebody ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever had a pistol since you have been in Danville ?—A. Oh, yes; I have had one since I have been in Danville.

Q. What did you do with it ?—A. I lost it.

Q. How long before that did you lose it ?—A. Four or five years, I reckon.

Q. And you never got another ?—A. No, sir.

Q. And did not borrow one that day ?—A. No, sir.

Q. And did not have one in your hand at this fight ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You started a while ago to tell something that you said to Mr. Lea, and Judge Lapham stopped you. I want you to tell it.—A. I simply started to say that that was not fair to let a man be beat up that way, and Lea run up and he made the officer stand back, and the officer said "This is my duty," and he made them stand back, and they did not get to part them until it was pretty nigh over with.

Q. You did tell them that it was not fair to let a man be beat up that way. Was anybody striking him but Noel ?—A. Nobody but Noel that I know of.

Q. Well, man against man was fair, wasn't it ?—A. But knucks was not fair.

Q. How do you know it to be knucks ?—A. I took them to be knucks ; it was like knucks I have seen.

Q. Did Mr. Lea say, "Stand back ; there are going to be no weapons used ; this is to be a fair fight ?"—A. Didn't hear him say that.

Q. That is one of the times you did not pay attention ?—A. I was paying attention when the fight was going on.

Q. How long did the fight last ?—A. Two minutes, may be.

Q. Now, when the fight was going on, didn't the colored people come up very rapidly from all directions ?—A. I don't know whether they came up so particularly when the fight was going on as afterwards. They came up to see what was the matter.

Q. Did you see the scuffle between Lea and Adams for the pistol ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't see that ?—A. There was no scuffle between Adams and Lea for the pistol that I know of.

Q. There was no wrangling between them at all. Did you see any one man try to take Lea's pistol away from him ?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you hear the pistol fired ?—A. I heard the pistol fired.

Q. Where were you then ?—A. I was there. There was a heap of them fired then.

Q. I mean the first one. Who fired the first one ?—A. Lea fired the first pistol.

Q. Do you know where it was when he fired it—in what direction it was pointed, or how it came to be fired ?—A. I don't know how it came to be fired ; but I know he fired it.

Q. How did he fire?—A. He fired it right straight across the street. It struck Graves's store.

Q. That was the first fire?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he fired it right towards the crowd?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he fire at any particular colored man that you know of, or just at large?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you see any colored man hold of him trying to take it from him at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. You said you heard the white people say, "Get off the street, you damned niggers, or we will kill every one of you"?—A. I heard the white people.

Q. Who said that?—A. A good many voices said, "Get off the street."

Q. Didn't you hear a white voice say, "If you black folks disperse, the white folks would?"—A. No, sir; I didn't hear that.

Q. Didn't you hear any white man besides the police trying to get the crowd to disperse?—A. No, sir; no man as I knew of.

Q. Did you see Mr. Peter Booth?—A. I don't know Mr. Peter Booth. I might have seen him, but I don't know him.

Q. Well, did you hear a white man in the crowd, whom you did not know, begging them to disperse?—A. Begging who?

Q. The black people?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear or see Mr. Jeff. Corbin trying to do the same thing?—A. Jeff. Corbin was there, but he was way up above me, and I could not say. I didn't know what he was talking about.

Q. He was in the crowd of colored people, was he not?—A. I think he was standing between the white and colored; but what he was saying I don't know.

Q. Did not Captain Oliver say something?—A. Yes, sir; he said something to me.

Q. Didn't he ask the colored people to disperse?—A. I did not hear him say anything to anybody but me.

Q. What did he say to you?—A. He called me a God damn black son of a bitch.

Q. Did he say anything but that?—A. He says: "You are the God damn black son of a bitch that tried to raise a fuss last night."

Q. Where did you try to raise a fuss?—A. I told him I was not down town that night, and that is why he begged my pardon.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Freeman, the policeman, trying to disperse the crowd?—A. I don't think I saw Mr. Freeman; I am pretty positive I didn't.

Q. Did you see Policeman Adams have a pistol?—A. No, sir; he didn't have one.

Q. Didn't have one?—A. Not that I saw; I didn't see him have any in his hand; he might have had it in his pocket.

Q. While the white people were saying "Get off the street," what did the blacks say?—A. They didn't say nothing; I didn't hear it.

Q. What was the reason you could not hear it?—A. Because they didn't say it, I suppose; but I didn't hear it.

Q. Now, you were right in among the crowd of black people, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they make any response to all these orders to disperse from Captain Oliver?—A. What do you say?

Q. You heard what I said?—A. I didn't hear what you said.

Q. Oh, yes; you want time to make up your answer. I asked you if the colored people made any response to all these orders to disperse from Captain Oliver?—A. Oh, I don't know; I didn't hear them make an answer.

Q. You swear you did not hear anything said by the black people in that crowd about dispersing?—A. I won't swear to nothing I don't know. I said that I don't think the colored people said anything.

Q. Now, there were the police, and several white men trying to get the colored people to disperse. Did they make no answer at all to their appeals?—A. The time that all this was going on, the fuss commenced and was over in shorter time than all these words could be used.

Q. After the time that the first pistol was fired by Lea, how long was it until the general firing began?—A. I could not say; I don't think it was very long.

Q. Was it a minute?—A. Oh, yes; I suppose it was more than a minute.

Q. Now, during that time, when the crowd was coming up, excited by the firing of this pistol and by the fight, there were various men trying to get the crowd to disperse?—A. I will tell you, a good many colored people were leaving, as I thought, when the pistol was fired.

Q. I ask you if to all these appeals the colored people made no reply?—A. I didn't hear the colored people say nothing, as I can recollect.

Q. You can recollect all that the white people said, can't you?—A. The colored people don't talk back to the white people like the white people talk to them.

Q. You said something; you came up and remonstrated with Lea?—A. I didn't say nothing, only when they were fighting. I only said "It is not fair to let a man get beat up that way."

Q. You were not under any restraint by the presence of white people, were you? You had fought that morning with Noel, single-handed, and you talked back to him?—A. He didn't say a word to me that time.

Q. But you say the colored people would not talk back to the white people like the white people would to them?—A. I don't know. I don't think a word passed. I didn't pass a word to Noel.

Q. What was it you said?—A. What was it I said to who?

Q. To anybody during that fight?—A. I told Mr. Lea that I did not think that was fair to let a man be beat up that way.

Q. What did you say to Oliver?—A. He called me a God damn son of a bitch; and I told him I was not down town that night. He says, "You are the God damn black son of a bitch who was trying to raise a fuss down town."

Q. Now, I have dwelt long enough on that point. I am going to ask you once more if the colored people made no answer at all to the white people when they were asked to disperse?—A. I could not say, because I can't remember. I don't think that I heard them say anything.

Q. By the time the firing began how many colored people had come up?—A. A good many.

Q. Well, give us an idea.—A. I couldn't give you an idea.

Q. How many white people had come up?—A. I couldn't tell you; a good many white people.

Q. How many?—A. I couldn't say, but a good many.

Q. Which were the most, the white or the colored?—A. I was not looking back behind me very much, but there was a good many white people, a good many more than colored.

Q. A good many more white people on the sidewalk than there were colored people in the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Mr. Holland shot?—A. No, sir; I didn't know he was shot until I heard so.

Q. At what time did you start to leave; before this order to fire was given or afterwards?—A. I was leaving when the order was given.

Q. When the order to fire was given what did you do?—A. I went across the street, went up in that office, in the door; I couldn't get in; I went behind the door.

Q. You got away. Did you run?—A. Yes, sir; I run a little bit.

Q. And got into that office?—A. I didn't get into the office; I got in the door of it; it has got a double door.

Q. You got in behind the double doors?—A. I got in behind one of those doors.

Q. You couldn't see out then, could you?—A. The firing was going on.

Q. The firing was going on, but you couldn't see out?—A. No, sir; I couldn't see out.

Q. Now, you told Senator Lapham that the white folks kept on firing at the darkies after they ran?—A. They was firing at the time they was running.

Q. Well, at the time they run; they did not run before the firing, did they?—A. When they commenced to fire on them I suppose they went falling back then.

Q. Did not some man say if the crowd didn't fall back he would fire?—A. I suppose a man must have said that. I took it just like I heard it.

Q. That is what I thought.—A. A man says "fire on them" and he might have said fall back. You know when a man talks about shooting, a man don't have time to listen.

Q. I ask you if there was not some warning given?—A. Only some man said "fire on them."

Q. That is no warning. Did not something precede that? Did not somebody say, "If you don't fall back we will fire."—A. I didn't hear that.

Q. Well, you ran to get behind that door, and could hear the firing, but could not see?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether all the colored people ran then, or some stood and returned the fire?—A. A good many ran; I didn't look back to see.

Q. You didn't see whether all were running or not?—A. I saw a good many running; I couldn't say it was all of them.

Q. You don't know whether any of them stood their ground until the end of the firing or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know whether any of the pistols you heard were fired in the air or not?—A. I don't think it was fired in the air.

Q. Could you tell by the sound whether a pistol is fired in the air or at a man?—A. I am no judge of shooting at men that way.

Q. You cannot tell the difference in the sound of a pistol whether fired in the air or at an object? You have told us that you didn't see them, but you didn't think they fired in the air.—A. I have got a privilege to think what I want to think about anything, and that is my thought, just to think, that is my privilege.

Q. It is your privilege "just to think," but your thoughts are not testimony; we want what you saw.—A. Well, I am telling what I saw. I couldn't say I saw so much firing when they told them to fall back; when they told them to fire on them they fired.

Q. Why do you keep using those words, "fall back," and then take them back?—A. I don't.

Q. You said somebody might have said "fall back".—A. I say I didn't hear it.

Q. You didn't hear, then, anybody say "fall back?"—A. No, sir.

Q. After you got behind that door could you tell by the firing whether the white people were firing or the black people?—A. I didn't see any pistols in the black people's hands.

Q. You did not see when Freeman came up whether he had a pistol or not?—A. I didn't see any pistol in colored people's hands.

Q. After you got behind that door you didn't see any pistol in white men's hands, did you?—A. I saw them before I got behind the door.

Q. When you were there in the crowd before you ran, your back was to the black people, wasn't it, and your face to the whites?—A. Of course.

Q. Then you couldn't tell whether there were any black men behind you who had weapons or not?—A. I didn't see any.

Q. Of course you didn't if you didn't look at them.—A. Well, the whites were on this side [indicating] and the colored on this side, and I was standing between the party.

Q. There were two hundred or three hundred black people there, were there not?—A. I couldn't say; there may have been; I couldn't say.

Q. Well, there were over one hundred, were there not?—A. I don't know; I suppose so; I don't know.

Q. Well, you can say there were no pistols there.—A. I didn't see any.

Q. There might have been lots of colored people with pistols and you not see them?—A. Of course; but I didn't see them.

Q. You did not examine Freeman, did you?—A. No; I didn't have any business to.

Q. They were all standing up close together, were they not?—A. I didn't notice them standing close together.

Q. But you took notice enough to see that none of them had pistols?—A. Of course I saw the whites have pistols; I didn't see the colored.

Q. How many white men did you see have pistols?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. More than one?—A. Oh, yes, more than one.

Q. Did you see as many as five?—A. I will state I don't know how many I saw, but I saw a good many.

Q. Well, give us some idea.—A. I don't know; but I know it was over twenty-five or thirty-five.

Q. Over twenty-five or thirty-five pistols that you saw in the hands of the white people?—A. Yes, sir; I had an idea myself that they all had them.

Q. Did any one of them show their weapons before that firing began?—A. All of them had their pistols in their hands.

Q. Now, why did the colored people crowd up on a lot of people that were armed if they were not armed?—A. I don't suppose they had any idea this fuss was going to take place.

Q. Although there were men with pistols in their hands threatening to shoot every damn one, as you say Oliver said?—A. I didn't say Oliver said that.

Q. What did Oliver say?—A. He said I was a damn black son of a bitch.

Q. When was that said; at the time they said fall back?—A. Nobody didn't say fall back that I heard.

Q. You said to Judge Lapham that the white people said, "If you colored people don't get off the streets we will kill every damned one of you."—A. I told him that in my first examination. Of course he said that; they were shooting then.

Q. Who said that?—A. I couldn't say who said that.

Q. You say that was said before the shooting took place?—A. No, sir; I told you what you asked me to tell you.

Q. Do you say now that that exclamation was not made until after shooting?—A. I say that the man said "fall back." I didn't say that he said it in the time all this firing commenced.

Q. When was it?—A. I said they said it when Noel and Lawson were fighting—commenced to fight. This large crowd had not gathered there then.

Q. When did you hear that exclamation "If the colored people do not get off the streets we will kill every damned one of you?"—A. I suppose that was just about the time the firing commenced.

Q. Exactly. Now, notwithstanding all these threats, and this display of pistols, the colored people kept pressing up?—A. They didn't keep pressing up that I knew particularly.

Q. How close were they to the white people?—A. They were not very far apart.

Q. And there were a great many more colored people than whites, were there not?—A. I didn't say that.

Q. I ask you if it was so?—A. I didn't count either party, but I thought there was more whites than colored.

Q. The white men had all got out of the opera house by this time, hadn't they?—A. I didn't know anything about the opera house, except I heard there was a meeting there.

Q. What direction did the white men come from?—A. Some came up from the opera house.

Q. Where did the others come from?—A. Gathered from all parts of the city. An excitement was created and they came to see what was the matter.

Q. But you say it was just about a minute between the firing of the first pistol and the general firing?—A. I didn't say that. I didn't say how long it was.

Q. Well, state now.—A. I couldn't say; I don't know.

Q. Why don't you know; you were there, were you not?—A. Yes, I was there.

Q. Well, you have an idea of the flux of time, haven't you?—A. I couldn't say, not knowing; I couldn't tell you this; I could tell you it wasn't an hour between the time; I don't think it was half an hour.

Q. It was from any time to half an hour?—A. I say it was inside of half an hour, I think, and I know it wasn't an hour.

Q. You think it was half an hour?—A. I didn't say; and I don't say that; I think it was inside of an hour; I know it was not an hour.

Q. Are you willing it should stand as your judgment that it was about half an hour?—A. I don't want it to stand on my judgment at all; I told you I thought it was inside an hour; about what minutes I couldn't say.

Q. Why didn't the colored people go away when they had received so much warning?—A. I reckon they thought they had as much right on the street as anybody else.

Q. That is true; they did have the same right there as the white people precisely; and that is the reason they did not leave?—A. No, sir.

Q. When the officers of the law came up and asked them to go, why didn't they go?—A. Who was that?

Q. Freeman came up?—A. I didn't see Freeman at all.

Q. You don't deny but what he was there, do you?—A. I reckon he was there.

Q. Was not Walter Withers there?—A. I think he came up after Bob; I am not sure, but I think he did.

Q. Didn't he try to get the crowd to disperse, too?—A. I can't say; at the time this was going on I don't suppose policemen had much to do with it, because I don't suppose they thought they could settle it; I know that Adams went up to part these parties and a fellow made him go back.

Q. I ask you if Mr. Withers, a colored policeman, tried to get the colored people to disperse?—A. Now, I say I don't know that he came up before Adams; I don't think he got up before Adams.

Q. I didn't ask you if he came up before Adams; I asked you if he tried to get them to disperse?—A. I didn't see everybody in the whole thing.

Q. Did you see Mr. Withers, the colored policeman?—A. I saw him once.

Q. Did he try to get the crowd to disperse?—A. I didn't hear him say anything; he was standing near Woolfolk & Blair's door.

Q. I didn't ask you where he was standing. Did you hear him try to get the crowd to disperse?—A. I didn't hear him say anything.

Q. Not a word?—A. Not at the time I saw him.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. What was it that Lea said or did which caused you to make the remark you say you made to him?—A. About beating the man up?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, he had the pistol drawn and didn't allow anybody to part them.

Q. What had he said?—A. He had said, "Stand back, or I will blow your God damned black brains out," or something like that. I told him it wasn't fair to let a man beat a man that way.

Q. What did he say in answer to that?—A. Made them stand back.

Q. Made who stand back?—A. Made everybody stand back.

Q. So as to let the fight go on?—A. Let the fight go on.

Q. He made no answer then to that remark of yours?—A. No, sir.

Q. And is that all you said to him?—A. That is all I said to him at that minute; I don't remember saying any more to him.

Q. Now I want to understand whether Noel came up and struck Lawson without anything whatever being said?—A. Struck him without a word said to Lawson; didn't hear him say a word to anybody.

Q. Or to you, or to Love?—A. Didn't say anything to Love or to me.

Q. And are you able to say at what time Noel took hold of Lawson?—A. I suppose he must have struck about two or three licks before he took hold.

Q. You think he struck one or more times?—A. I know he struck him once before he took hold of him.

Q. Can you say how they had hold of each other when they were separated?—A. I think Lawson had him somewhat about the collar, and I think he had Lawson somewhere about the collar.

Q. Who was the person who separated them?—A. George Adams, the colored cop.

Q. Was he a policeman?—A. He is a policeman.

JOHN F. CARL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you now reside?—Answer. Danville, Va.

Q. What is your employment?—A. I am superintendent of the National Cemetery there.

Q. How long have you been there?—A. Since August 22, last.

Q. Have you been a union soldier?—A. I have; yes, sir.

Q. Were you present in Danville on the 3d of November last, when what is known as the riot or massacre occurred?—A. Yes, sir; I was present.

Q. I wish, if you please, you would state what you saw of that affair, from the time you first saw the gathering until the close of it.—A. I was on the main street in Danville, Va., on the 3d of last November, and about 3 o'clock, at my estimate, I had stepped into a clothing store for the purpose of making a purchase—Mr. Wiseman's store—several doors south of Market street, and perhaps 75 yards south of the scene of the trouble or riot. I was about to make a purchase when my attention was attracted by a tumult on the street. I went out following several others who went from the store, perhaps nearly all the people in the store, and I saw gathering a great crowd about 75 yards south, probably in front of the notary's office.

Q. On Main street?—A. On Main street, on the same side of the street; and I then saw what appeared to me to be an encounter between two or more parties. I could not see the parties except when they would raise their hands above the crowd. The encounter seemed to last for a minute or two probably, when there was a pistol shot fired, and the crowd upon that dispersed as a general thing. I did not see many more people in that immediate vicinity after the firing of the pistol. I then crossed over on the opposite side of the street for the purpose of going up to try and ascertain what was the cause of the trouble. I passed on up in a southerly direction, I believe, to a point opposite and above the scene of the riot, or at least to a point above on the opposite side of the street, recrossed and passed down in front of the notary's office about where I supposed the encounter occurred. While there I saw several white men gather on the sidewalk, probably fifteen or twenty, and a good many colored people in the street. There was a colored man in the street, a mulatto, who seemed to demand or ask something of some one on the sidewalk; seemed to ask the arrest or something of that kind, of some one on the sidewalk. One white man stepped to the curb of the sidewalk and replied, "Here I am, what do you want of me?"

Q. Did you know that man?—A. No, sir; I didn't at the time, and don't at present, I believe.

Q. When that man said, here I am, &c., what reply was made?—A. The reply was that "You are not the man," and the yellow man in the street seemed to point to some one else; I could not see who he was pointing to. He said, "You are not the man, I mean the other man" or words to that effect, and I started away. There was some one mentioned there that there would be trouble; I had my boy with me, twelve years old, and I wanted to get away; I advanced a few steps from there when my boy called my attention to the place again by saying, "Father, they are going to shoot." I then saw a number of pistols in the hands of a number of men on the sidewalk, held at what I call a "Ready."

Q. Who held these pistols, white or black?—A. White men on the sidewalk held the pistols at a "Ready," and immediately afterward the firing commenced.

Q. At a "Ready," that was upward?—A. They held them, the right hand grasping hold of the pistol, and the left supporting the right hand. Immediately after that the firing commenced; there was no lapse of time scarcely; and I then took my boy into a hardware store in the vicinity. I did not know the name of the proprietor at the time; it is Voss & Co. I turned around then to note progress, and it was about over then; it did not last over a few minutes, probably.

Q. Did you notice whether the colored men in the street there were armed or not?—A. I did not see any arms in the hands of any colored men there.

Q. What had they, sticks or anything of that kind?—A. I saw several men having driving whips, I believe.

Q. Driving whips?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Such as teamsters use?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many white men were there at the time the firing commenced, on the pavement?—A. Probably from fifteen to twenty.

Q. How many colored men in the street or near by?—A. The colored crowd was composed of a motley number of all ages and sexes, from six years upwards; and I suppose there was a sprinkling of more or less boys, youths, I estimate them at one hundred and fifty or two hundred.

Q. How did these people gather together; who were they?—A. Such as gather together walking along on the street. The greater number of them seemed to be gathered simply out of idle curiosity. I was a stranger, but they seemed to me to want to ascertain what the trouble was.

Q. What was the attitude of the blacks; were they aggressive, threatening, or what was their attitude?—A. They seemed to me to be a little more defiant than usual; that is, they seemed to stand up for something or other; that is, to make their demands and back them up a little more than usual; that is, they seemed to be a little more forward, I thought, than usual in crowds of the kind; they were probably excited on account of the first encounter, I thought. I don't know it to be a fact, but my idea was that they desired to secure the arrest of the white man who was fighting with the colored man before; that was my idea, I don't know the fact.

Q. Were they threatening in any way?—A. I could not say that they were; I didn't hear or see anything of the kind.

Q. Where was the crowd of colored people gathering from?—A. From all points generally in the city; all directions at least accessible.

Q. How were the white men formed; you have been a soldier, you can tell us how they were formed?—A. They were formed along the sidewalk, I believe. When I saw them just previous to the firing they were ranged abreast or nearly so, perhaps a double line; there was some in the rear of others, I know, and the right of the front line rested on the curb, and the left inclined toward the buildings, across the pavement diagonally.

Q. With the buildings on one wing and the curb at the other?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the firing began what did the blacks do?—A. They began to disperse pretty rapidly; immediately, I thought.

Q. How long before they were dispersed?—A. It was a very short time. At the close of the firing I didn't see any more of the negroes.

Q. Did you then look round to ascertain the effect of the firing;

how many were killed?—A. Yes, sir; I went to the rear of the square and passed up on to what I believe is Union street, on the corner of the Arlington Hotel, and I saw two men lying on the opposite corner diagonally, one lying upon the pavement; one at the corner of Wiseman's store.

Q. That is the first corner beyond Market street?—A. Yes, sir; on the same side.

Q. Where did the firing come from, the whites or the blacks?—A. The firing was commenced by the whites as I thought.

Q. Did you see any firing or hear any firing from the blacks?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you so placed that you would have noticed it?—A. I could not say positively, there might have been some answering shots that I would not have noticed, but I did not hear or see any. The greater number of discharges came from the side of the whites I know and might have drowned just a few shots from the other side. I didn't see any.

Q. Did the firing continue after the colored people began to disperse?—A. Yes, it continued some time; that is, it continued until they had gotten off the street, entirely out of the vicinity.

Q. How many shots were fired, in your judgment? You are a soldier, you can tell us about how many?—A. I estimate about one hundred and fifty.

Q. Did the firing of that number of shots create any perceptible smoke?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. When the smoke cleared away where were the negroes?—A. I didn't see any in that vicinity.

Q. To what extent did it create a cloud of smoke?—A. To such an extent that it hid objects on the opposite side of the street during the time, for a few seconds, half a minute probably.

Q. Were the whites re-enforced during the time of the firing; did you see the number increasing?—A. Yes, sir; my impression was that a good many were added to the number before the firing ceased.

Q. Do you know where they came from?—A. From different directions.

Q. Did you know anything about the meeting going on at the opera house at the time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you notice whether the re-enforcements were armed as a rule or not?—A. Yes, sir, most of them were.

Q. Had they their arms exposed; did they exhibit their arms by holding them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any other arms besides pistols?—A. Yes, sir; I saw several men with shot-guns.

Q. Can you describe where the men with shot-guns were; where you saw them?—A. They were on the street; on the pavement, at least.

Q. Was that at the beginning or end of the controversy?—A. That was right at the end of the encounter.

Q. Were they shot-guns or rifles?—A. Shot-guns, mostly.

Q. Do you know whether any of them were fired?—A. No, sir; I don't think they were.

Q. You would be able to tell the discharge from the discharge of a pistol?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After the negroes had dispersed, after the colored people had gone, and you had seen these dead bodies, what occurred then afterwards there, or near by? Did the whites collect in a crowd?—A. Oh, yes; there was a great deal of excitement immediately following. There was a number of people came down the street, from the south is I believe the direction, and assembled in front of the Arlington Hotel, or rather in front of the Planters' Bank, which is immediately opposite, and a gentleman commenced to harangue them; advised them to disperse. A white-haired gentleman raised up right in front of the Planters' Bank, I believe, or the Southern Telegraph office, and commenced counseling moderation, and to avoid further trouble and disperse.

Q. Who was he?—A. I don't know who it was.

Q. I will ask you if it was Colonel Cabell?—A. I don't know. I don't know that I can recognize the gentleman now or not.

Q. Did they disperse then?—A. They did not disperse entirely; but it seemed they cheered him. Several men cheered him and seemed to take it kindly, and did not proceed any further; they stopped right there. The regular militia immediately took the place of the citizens then.

Q. Do you know whether any of these persons who fired were at once mustered into the police?—A. No, sir; I do not. I left town immediately after I saw that riot.

Q. How far is the cemetery from the town of Danville?—A. That is, I did not leave the town, but went to the cemetery, which is immediately on the southeastern limits of the town, about one mile from the scene of the encounter or riot.

Q. Did you notice where the bodies you saw were hit?—A. No, sir; I could not see at the distance I was.

Q. You made no examination?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any shouts or exultation on the part of the whites after the firing and before this crowd gathered there; did you see any display of excitement?—A. Nothing more than general nervousness. They were very quiet so far as noise or vociferation was concerned.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. The fight was over before the crowd that came up from the opera house got there, wasn't it?—A. I didn't notice any special crowd coming from the opera house. I noticed people gathering, but didn't know where they came from.

Q. There were about fifteen or twenty, you say, when the firing first commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any that came up while the firing was going on?—A. Yes, sir; I thought there were, from different directions.

Q. They could not have had time to come very far, I suppose?—A. No, sir; I suppose in the immediate vicinity.

Q. Those men that you saw that came up armed afterwards took no part in the fight, did they?—A. Not that I saw.

Q. They got there too late?—A. Entirely; most of them did; yes, sir.

Q. Didn't many of them run home to get arms; run into hardware stores, &c.?—A. I saw one or two going into the hardware store that I was in at the time.

Q. Had you got into the store with your little son before the firing began?—A. No, sir.

Q. How far were you from the door?—A. I was probably five paces from the door at the time the firing commenced; probably five paces from where the parties stood that commenced firing.

Q. You hurried on in then, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And having left your son in safety you went back to the door to look?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now when you got back to the door to look, was it nearly over then?—A. Yes, sir; only a few shots fired afterwards, straggling shots.

Q. Can you say that no colored people fired at all?—A. I cannot say that any colored man fired, but I can say that I did not see any arms in their hands, or hear any answering shots that I could distinguish.

Q. From where you were whence you saw the smoke you could hardly tell whether the shots were from one side or the other, could you?—A. Yes, sir; I could tell the direction of the firing from the sidewalk, from the direction the smoke would take.

Q. And you saw no answering shots?—A. No, sir; not to distinguish.

Q. Did the firing cease when all the colored people had run?—A. Well, yes, sir; as far as I could see. There was some smoke intervened as a matter of course, but I could not see any colored people, and then of course the firing ceased.

Q. Supposing that the white people had felt compelled to fire in the first instance by necessity, do you think from what you saw, that they fired after it was no longer necessary?—A. I don't know how to answer that exactly.

Q. I mean supposing that there was originally any necessity for the white people to fire, as they allege in self-defense, did they fire after the necessity was over?—A. They ceased firing after the crowd dispersed, and there was nothing to fire at.

Q. Do you know whether the crowd had all gone before they ceased firing?—A. No, sir; I could not say that because I say the smoke intervened that way, and I could not see any opposite party.

Q. You said the crowd was composed of all ages and sexes. Were there any women there?—A. Yes, sir; I noticed several girls.

Q. Where were they?—A. They were mixed indiscriminately in the crowd; not immediately in the front of the crowd, but more in the rear.

Q. In the rear of the crowd?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they saying anything?—A. Not that I noticed.

Q. Did you hear them urging the colored men on?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any exclamation from the colored people of anger?—A. Nothing more than the party whom I mentioned in the street, the yellow man.

Q. What was his name?—A. I don't know.

Q. He was demanding something; you thought it was the arrest of a party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any voices seconding him?—A. No, sir; I did not hear any.

Q. Did you hear any colored man but this one making any speech at all?—A. Not that I recollect, use any language in reference to the matter whatever.

Q. Did you see any white men trying to make peace?—A. Not immediately. No, sir, I did not. Before the firing commenced, or rather before the crowd thickened up, I saw some persons trying to disperse them, among others a colored policeman, I thought—I looked at them from the opposite side of the street—trying to get the crowd to disperse. There was not many there then.

Q. Could you hear what he said?—A. No, sir.

Q. And could not hear what they said to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any white men aiding the policeman, or doing the same thing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know Captain Oliver, of the Grays, there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see him or Mr. Corbin or Mr. Freeman?—A. No, sir; I am a comparative stranger there.

Q. How long have you been there?—A. I have been there since the 22d of August.

Q. What position do you hold there?—A. I am superintendent of the National Cemetery there.

Q. While this was going on did the colored people press up towards the white people standing on the sidewalk?—A. There was a little interval between the curb and the front of the line of colored people, about one yard or two. I suppose they were probably surging back and forth.

Q. The gutter was near them, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; and some a little further at times.

Q. Now, you spoke of the whites forming, to use the language of Mr. Sherman. Was there anything like a military formation, more than the sidewalk would make men take who were facing somebody in the street?—A. I took it to be from necessity. Men that were about to engage in an encounter of that kind would necessarily have to make some kind of formation to avoid hurting each other.

Q. Present a front?—A. Yes, sir; present a front.

Q. And the curbing on the sidewalk answered for that purpose?—A. The position of the whites at the time and the colored crowd rendered it necessary for them to change their position from the direction of the curbing; they had to form a diagonal line across the pavement in order to face the crowd.

Q. So that when they formed the diagonal line across the pavement one end of their line rested against the building?—A. Yes, sir; in that direction.

Q. And the other on the curbing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say there were, all told, about one hundred and fifty colored people?—A. That was my estimate.

Q. Up to the moment the firing began was not that number momentarily increased by others arriving?—A. Yes; it had been up to that time.

Q. There were not very many up to the time of the first firing?—A. No, sir; the most of them had gathered after that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Senator Vance asked you about the white people believing it was necessary to fire for their protection. Do you think there was any necessity for firing to protect themselves?—A. As I understood the Senator he put a hypothetical case.

Q. I ask you as to the real case, as you saw it.—A. I do not believe there was myself.

Q. You think the presence of the white men, armed as they were, there was no danger of the crowd attacking them?—A. I think not.

Q. Were you on the same side or opposite side of the street to where the white men were?—A. I was on the same side of the street.

Q. The white men formed in line; a diagonal line, that way [illustrating], and you were off here, were you?—A. Yes; I was to the north.

Q. Were you in the rear or in the front?—A. I was to the left; rather to the left, in front.

Q. The colored people were off here [illustrating], and you were off here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From that point of observation you could see both the whites and blacks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would have no difficulty in seeing from which point the firing came?—A. No, sir; I was satisfied in my mind from which point the firing came.

Q. Could not you as a soldier tell from the sound also as well as from what you could see?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then your position was to the left flank of the white crowd along the line of building?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far were you from the left flank?—A. I was within about five paces of where the firing commenced.

Q. Then how far would you be from the crowd of colored people in the street?—A. The front ones were about me, in fact, and some below on the pavement. I had to pass through a portion of the crowd to get into the store. They ranged then from a line below where I stood across to the center of the street and up the street.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would draw for the use of the committee a diagram of the scene showing the crossing of Market and Union streets, and about the relative positions of this line and yourself and the colored people.

(The witness prepared and submitted the following diagram :)

SOPHIA POWELL sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Question. Where do you reside ?—Answer. I live in North Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there ?—A. I have lived there about nine years.

Q. Are you married or single ?—A. Married.

Q. Have you a family ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in the city of Danville on the 3d of November ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you go there ?—A. I went there in the afternoon.

Q. What time in the afternoon ?—A. I went there between 2 and 3 o'clock.

Q. For what purpose did you go there ?—A. I had been doing some sewing for some of the people that work in the factory, and I went over to get my money. They told me to come Saturday afternoon and I would get my money.

Q. While there did you see anything of this disturbance ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the first you heard or saw of it ?—A. I didn't see any in the beginning of it; but I was down street, at the lower part of the town, and I heard there was a fight up town, and I saw a great excitement, and people going upstreet; and I didn't know where my husband was. I thought he was uptown somewhere, and I heard the shooting, the first fire, and I thought I would go up and see if he was in the crowd, and I would get him to go home, and that is why I was up there.

Q. What was the first you saw as you were going up there ?—A. As I was going up, just before I got up, I heard the firing; I could see people firing just before I got up there.

Q. Which street did you go up ?—A. Right up Main street, up on the left-hand side going up.

Q. As you were going did you see any one with a gun ?—A. As I come back I met them going up with guns.

Q. That is when you left there ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was with you ?—A. Violet Keeling.

Q. Was she in pursuit of her husband also ?—A. Yes, sir; we went over together.

Q. Now go on and tell what you saw and heard there.—A. As I was going up—I was on the left-hand side going up, and the shooting was on the right-hand side going up—and just before I got up to the crowd the firing commenced, and we turned to go back down to Mr. Page's store, and stopped in the store, as we thought, out of reach of the shooting, and I looked up and the colored people was all running; and we stood there and looked awhile, and this Mr. Blunt—I knew him—I saw him stand there and shoot several times at the people running.

Q. Saw who shoot ?—A. Mr. Blunt.

Q. You saw him do what ?—A. He was shooting at the people, the colored people who were running.

Q. Did he come out from the ranks where he stood, and shoot ?—A. Yes; he come down to the corner.

Q. Following after them ?—A. Yes, sir. The people came down the street and then he turned as they turned down the corner going down to Swayne's factory, and shot manfully. He just killed anybody he could; didn't make any difference who they were, that way he was shooting.

Q. What is his business there ?—A. He keeps a photograph gallery.

Q. Did you see any other one follow and shoot as he did?—A. The firing commenced and it seemed they were all just walking, I thought.

Q. The white people?—A. Yes; colored people were running.

Q. Did you see any colored people with arms?—A. No, sir; didn't see one with arms.

Q. Did you see any firing from the colored people?—A. No, sir; they didn't have time, the way they were running.

Q. Now, how many pistols do you think you heard fire off?—A. I can't certify; there were so many of them, you see; I didn't get right up to them.

Q. There were a great many, were there?—A. Yes; a great many.

Q. Did you hear anything said by the white people after the colored people commenced running?—A. No, sir; I wasn't up there. As I came on down street I met them going up street with guns.

Q. As you went back, you mean?—A. Yes; they were making up towards where the shooting commenced as I was coming from it.

Q. There is where you saw persons with guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Going up to the scene with guns in their hands?—A. Yes, sir; and I was coming from it.

Q. That was after the firing had stopped, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear those persons saying anything?—A. I heard Mr. Shadbow tell a colored man to take care of the children and things, but I didn't hear him say anything about the firing.

Q. What did you say he said?—A. He told the colored man who staid with him to take care of his children and his things. After I got across the bridge I heard some of the white people came over and told them if they didn't leave and go home from there, that side of the river, they would go and raise a mob from this side of the river, and that scared the colored people off and they all went home.

Q. Did you see the gathering of the white people in the streets after this firing?—A. After the firing?

Q. Yes, across the river?—A. Coming over in town, you mean.

Q. No, gathered together in groups.—A. No; I didn't stay over there very long to see; I come away.

Q. Did you hear any firing of guns after the firing up there where the crowd was?—A. Not during the day.

Q. No; afterwards, in the evening after the negroes ran up there dispersed after the firing you have described. Did you hear any firing later in the day?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear any after that at all.

Q. Did you see white people gather together with guns, or arms of any kind?—A. I saw they was shooting, and I met them coming up as I was going down.

Q. Did you hear any disturbance that same night?—A. Yes, sir; I was afraid to stay at home; there was shooting, and the neighborhood seemed to be so stirred up we didn't stay at home.

Q. There was shooting, then.—A. Round the neighborhood then; yes, sir.

Q. That night.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where it came from?—A. No, sir; I just heard it.

Q. Was it shooting of pistols or guns?—A. It was shooting; I can't tell which; I am not acquainted with them enough to know one from the other.

Q. Were you frightened by it?—A. Yes, sir; I was afraid to stay home; I didn't think the white people had so much against the colored people; certain I was afraid.

Q. Was your husband a voter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had he registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know the reason why?—A. He was afraid to go to the polls.

Mr. VANCE. I reckon she don't know whether he voted or not.

The WITNESS. Yes, I do; he didn't go to the polls.

Mr. LAPHAM. During that evening did you see any white men patrolling around the streets?—A. At night do you mean?

Q. Did you see any white men patrolling around the streets that afternoon?—A. I didn't; no, sir; not before I left town; you see I left town that evening, but I heard shooting.

Q. You went across the river then?—A. Yes; I live across the river.

Q. Well, did you see it there?—A. I heard them shooting round there.

Q. Did you go out of your house after you reached home that evening?—A. Yes, sir; there was but we two, and my husband didn't have no arms, and I was afraid to stay there, and I wouldn't let him stay; just him and I; we didn't have any arms.

Q. You left from fear; then where did you go?—A. I went down to Violet Keeling's and staid there.

Q. You and your husband?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean you shut up your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On which side of the river is your house?—A. I live on the north side.

Q. You are in what they call North Danville?—A. Yes; not exactly in the town of North Danville, sort of on the edge.

Q. How far is it from the place where you went?—A. About a quarter of a mile, I reckon, as near as I can guess at it.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. When did you hear that shooting in the night?—A. It was after the fuss in the evening, round the neighborhood where I live.

Q. Who was doing the shooting?—A. I didn't see them; I heard it, I said.

Q. You heard guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabouts did you say Mr. Blunt was standing when he was shooting at these people?—A. I was in Mr. Page's door.

Q. Where was Mr. Blunt?—A. He come down on the corner on the right-hand side of the street going up.

Q. What corner was that?—A. I don't know; he turned and shot down towards Swayne & Wiley's factory.

Q. Don't you know the name of the corner he was standing at?—A. I don't know the name of it.

Q. Is it not the market corner in the front of the market?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Blunt personally?—A. Yes; I know his face when I see him; I have been up in his photograph office.

Q. You know it was he who shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was he shooting at?—A. Shooting at the colored people running.

Q. What was he shooting at them for when they were running?—A. I thought he was shooting at them to kill them; I don't know.

Q. Don't you know he was shooting in the air to scare them?—A. No, sir; I don't know whether he was trying to scare them or kill them; he was shooting.

Q. You don't know whether he aimed at them?—A. He was shooting that way.

Q. Right in that direction?—A. Yes; right in the direction they were running he was shooting.

Q. How many of them dropped as he shot?—A. I don't think none of them dropped.

Q. Do you know any of the men he shot at?—A. No, sir; I don't know; I might have known them; but then I didn't notice them particularly, because anybody frightened that way didn't take time.

Q. And you were standing at Page's?—A. At Mr. Page's

Q. Well, where you were standing is north of Market street, isn't it?—A. It was on the same side of Market street.

Q. And it was nearly opposite the opera house, wasn't it, where you were standing at Page's?—A. Yes; I think it was.

Q. Now, he was shooting down Swayne & Wiley's?—A. Yes, sir; he shot down that way, and shot the other way; he turned himself and shot.

Q. Now, when he shot down to Swayne & Wiley's you could not see what he shot at?—A. I saw the people turn.

Q. You saw the people turning; but when you saw him shoot down that way you could not tell what he was shooting at?—A. I couldn't tell; don't suppose the man was shooting at nothing.

Q. You couldn't tell, of course, what he was shooting at; he was shooting down street, and you couldn't see down?—A. He was standing on the corner and shooting right toward them, and anybody would take it for granted he was shooting at them.

Q. Yes; take it for granted; but you didn't see anybody he was shooting at, did you?—A. I saw them running.

Q. You didn't see them running after they turned the corner?—A. Yes; I could see a little way down the street.

Q. You were on Main street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the side of it opposite to the opera house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Swayne & Wiley's crosses Main street at right angles, doesn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how can you see down that street?—A. I didn't say I could see all the way; I say I could see part of the way.

Q. You could just see the mouth of the street?—A. I saw them when they turned the corner.

Q. And when he shot he came down to the corner and shot down that street; you couldn't see anybody that he was shooting at?—A. Oh, they didn't get time to get out of the street.

Q. Could you see them?—A. I couldn't see them; but they hadn't time to get out of the street.

Q. That's argument; you say now you did not see anybody that he shot at?—A. I saw the people, as I told you, when they turned the corner; he shot at their backs, the way they were running.

Q. Well, but he did not shoot until they had turned the corner, did he?—A. He hadn't got down to it.

Q. He didn't shoot around the corner, and when he got down to the corner, the people that run in that street were out of your sight; and all that you saw was that he fired his pistol down that way that they ran?—A. The people when they turned, he wasn't very far behind them; they hadn't time to get out of that street.

Q. I didn't say they had; but I say you could not see them after they turned down that street?—A. I could see them a little.

Q. You did not see them when he shot, while they were in that street?—
A. Some of them.

Q. Then he must have been at the corner?—A. He came down to the corner.

Q. Well, but he came down to the corner before he shot, didn't he?—
A. Yes; but when I saw him he might have shot at the time of the other firing; I don't know that.

Q. I know; but when he got down to the corner and commenced firing the people had gone down and were out of your sight?—A. Yes; but the others were not out of my sight, they were running.

Q. Where did they run?—A. I don't know which way they run.

Q. Where were they when he shot?—A. They were running.

Q. I know they were running, but where were they?—A. On the street.

Q. Which street?—A. Main street.

Q. How far from you?—A. Not very far.

Q. Fifty yards?—A. I don't know; I can't certify exactly, because anybody frightened can't tell exactly how far in yards.

Q. You were not so badly frightened but what you could see a man around the corner in another street?—A. Anybody would take notice of a man shooting that way.

Q. How far were they from him when you saw him shoot in the street?—A. Not very far.

Q. Those that had not turned into Swayne and Wiley's?—A. They were not very far.

Q. Well, 20 yards?—A. May be, it might have been 20; may be less; I would say somewhere between them.

Q. It was not more than that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Not more than 20 yards?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many shots did he fire there?—A. I didn't count; can't tell; he shot several times.

Q. How many times did he shoot when he was down to Swayne and Wiley's?—A. He shot several times down that way, and then turned and shot.

Q. How many times do you think he shot all together in your sight?—
A. I don't reckon he shot any less than half a dozen; but I can't certify how many times he shot.

Q. Did he stop and load his pistol?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was a repeater, was it?—A. I don't know what sort it was; it was a great big pistol; I don't know nothing about it; it seemed to be a great long one; I don't know what it was; I never handled any pistols; and don't know one sort from another.

Q. These people at whom Mr. Blunt shot on Main street, were they going up or down the street?—A. Coming down, because everybody looked as if running down.

Q. Then they were shooting right toward you, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; a good many of them passed me.

Q. A good many bullets or people?—A. When they first commenced firing, the bullets or shot or something flew right over my head.

Q. Where were you when you first heard the firing?—A. I was coming up to look, to see if my husband—

Q. I know; I don't ask what you were going up for, but whereabouts you were?—A. I can't tell you exactly the spot, but I was up above Mr. Page's and come back and stood in his door.

Q. And the shots that you heard went over your head?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear it strike anything over your head?—A. I don't know; I was frightened and then there was such a smoke.

Q. Could you judge how close it was to you?—A. No, sir; I could hear it; I can't say how close.

Q. Did you hear it whistle?—A. I heard it rattle.

Q. Heard it rattle?—A. Yes, sir; I could hear it singing over my head.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I simply want to get at the locality. [Handing witness a diagram of the street.] Do you understand this; that street purports to be Main street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This Market street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, that is Mr. Joplin's store; in what direction from Joplin's store were you?—A. I don't know Joplin's store.

Q. That is the corner store, on the corner of Market and Main—hardware store—do you know that store?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is the opera house; were you opposite the opera house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were near the corner, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is Joplin's store?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did Mr. Blunt stand; did he stand on the opposite side of Main street from you?—A. Yes, sir; on the opposite side.

Q. In the middle of Market; then that mark, number 22, is where you stood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And number 26 is where he stood?—A. Yes, sir; coming down.

Q. Here is the Arlington House; you were coming from this direction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you stopped there at the corner of Main and Market?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he stood in the middle of Market on the opposite side?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't you know that one man fell dead here?—A. I didn't see that.

Q. You don't know?—A. No, sir.

Q. The colored people went down Market street, did they, from Main?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he fired from here down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is the place about where you stood on the corner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This where Mr. Blunt stood; here's the opera house, and here's the store you speak of?—A. Yes, sir.

VIOLET KEELING sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. I live 2 miles from Danville.

Q. Are you married?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived at Danville?—A. I have been there about eleven years now.

Q. Are you a native Virginian?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want you to go on and state in your own way what you saw, on the 3d of November, of the riot at Danville; when you first heard of it, and what you saw, and what you heard.—A. I came over to town. I have to go over to town every Saturday. I work in town. That was my daily occupation.

Q. Who were you working with?—A. I was working in Mr. Holland's factory.

Q. Tobacco factory?—A. Yes, sir. And on Friday evening they stuck up a notice, so I didn't go back on Saturday morning to go to work.

Q. This notice informed you that there would be no work done the next day?—A. No, sir; not to go to work until Monday; and on Saturday evening I came to draw my money. He told us to come at 9 o'clock Saturday morning, but I didn't go, and went Saturday evening to draw my money. And I was down the street in Mr. Arrington's store waiting for a man to come and wait on me, and I saw the white people come into the store door, and I saw the white people run to the store door mightily, and I went to the door and looked to see what was the matter, and I saw white people come running down the street.

Q. Where were you?—A. I was at Mr. Arrington's store.

Q. Where was that?—A. As near as I can come at it, I think it is about five doors from the toll-bridge.

Q. How far from the market?—A. It is a right smart ways from the market, because that is just when you first get into town. As I got up to go to the door to look I heard them say to the man, "That is Hense Lawson fighting." I was acquainted with him, and I heard he and Mr. Noel's son had got fighting, and I said, "I must go up and look after my old man; I don't want them to get beat to death;" and whilst I said that I met several white people running, and went up to Mr. Page's, and whilst I was up there I looked across to the right hand and saw the people starting up out of the opera house, and a white man looked up at the opera house and said something, but I didn't understand what he said, but when he said it they all commenced running down in a big hurry.

Q. Out of the opera house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you?—A. I was standing at Mr. Page's.

Q. Was that opposite the opera house?—A. About a door above. I heard the shooting and I run in his store, but came back to see who was doing the shooting; and when I came back to the door I saw the colored people running; and when I saw them running so, I asked what was the matter; and they said they were running to get out of the way all they could. And I saw Mr. Blunt when he came out and shot.

Q. Had there been any firing before this?—A. Before Mr. Blunt shot? I don't know whether Mr. Lea did or not.

Q. Did you hear any firing?—A. Yes, sir; I heard this firing, and while I was standing there some one said "who is that that shot?" I was looking to see them take him up and carry him to jail, but Mr. George Lea run up, said he worked at the Banner warehouse; then I asked where the warehouse was, and found out from Mr. Frank Barnes. It then stopped, I reckon, about 3 minutes, and I heard some one say "Fire!" and the people commenced running, and when the people commenced running I looked across the street and spied Mr. Blunt, being acquainted with his looks—met him every morning. I was very well acquainted with him and I staid around to look, and until I saw all the people had gone but me and Mrs. Powell; but I was certain it was Mr. Blunt shooting, and I am certain he shot.

Q. What did you see; had he a gun in his hand, or what did he have?—A. He had a pistol and was shooting.

Q. Where was he standing?—A. As near as I can tell you he was standing right in between the street if you cross to go to the market square to Mr. Holland's and Mr. Swayne & Wiley's.

Q. Then he was standing right on the market crossing, Market and Main was it?—A. Yes, sir; he was standing—you cross Main street across this way [Indicating] to Swayne & Wiley's. It was right at the corner of Mr. J. N. Nicholas' bar-room.

Q. What did you see Mr. Blunt do?—A. I saw him shoot.

Q. How did he act; what did he do?—A. He acted like a man provoked.

Q. What did he do with his pistol?—A. He just had it out in this direction. [Indicating.] When he shot he looked down this way. [Indicating.] When the people was running he turned it just in this direction, and then turned and shot and shot. Mr. Blunt was the last man that I saw shoot on the street.

Q. Did you hear the crack of the pistol?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see the smoke from the pistol?—A. Yes, sir; I was standing looking; didn't run until everybody had left us. I was standing looking, trying to make out what it would be.

Q. You say the colored people commenced running. Did they commence running before the firing?—A. They commenced running when the people hollered. The white people said, "Fire!" and the colored commenced running then; and then, after I went on down the street they were running yet. I didn't know what they were running for, but when the white people said "Fire" they commenced and run all they could. The first pistol fire they got out of the way, and then they came together again—all the white people. The colored people were standing there talking, and when the white people got up there from the opera house, a colored man said (I heard him say it, standing behind me) that he didn't think the white people would do much at what they were going to do, the people run so. I heard him say that.

Q. Mr. Blunt denied firing when the colored people had practically dispersed?—A. Yes, sir; wherever he saw one. It looked like he shot anybody running. That is the way he shot.

Q. Now let me understand you. You had come to get your pay for your work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you were not working that day, and the factory hands were not, the factory was not running?—A. No, sir.

Q. And, as you were at this place not far from the bridge, you heard an alarm and people were running to a fight, and you heard Hanse Lawson was connected with it?—A. Yes, sir; being acquainted with him.

Q. And you walked on up then to the corner of Market and Main, to that grocery?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you were there when the first pistol was fired?—A. I was there when Mr. Lea shot in that gang, and the other men about five or ten minutes after he done that shooting.

Q. You heard a single pistol shot; you cannot tell who shot it, but some minutes after that you heard some one cry out "Fire!" and a general firing commenced, and the colored people scattered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From where you stood could you see the crowd of colored people across the way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any weapons in their hands?—A. No, sir; I didn't see them have anything. It looked like they were running—trying to get out of the way.

Q. When they came by you did you see any weapons?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they have any guns?—A. No, sir; I never saw anything of the kind.

Q. What sort of people were they; women and children, or men?—A. Colored women; no white women on the street that day; if they came out they came out in the morning; there were none on the street that evening.

Q. There were no white women, then, that evening?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you meet any on the street that afternoon?—A. Any ladies?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; there was not any white ladies on the street that day.

Q. Any women and children?—A. Yes; colored women and children, running and screaming and hollering, and running into stores.

Q. Was that unusual, not to see white ladies out that afternoon?—

A. As a regular thing you might see them out sometimes Saturday evening; but Saturday afternoons it is the custom and rule to see none but workingwomen on the street.

Q. Were there any white workingwomen that you saw about that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you say when the firing proceeded the colored people dispersed; what occurred then—what did you do then?—A. I went across the bridge and went on still to look for my husband. I wanted to find him, and happened to come across him and told him not to go up street, because the white people looked like they wanted to kill the colored people; to come on and go home.

Q. Were you in North Danville?—A. No, sir; in South Danville. And happened to look back and saw the white people coming down close to the toll-bridge, and I insisted on Keeling coming out of town—I didn't want him killed, and went on over the river. And about that time Mr. George Abbott and Mr. Billy Abbott came and said, "You had better all go away now. I want you all to go away and let things quiet down, because they are coming armed down the street." I spoke then, and said, "They didn't rouse the town to shoot; you have done harm enough; they ought not to follow them over the river."

Q. You went on home, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I went on from there home.

Q. What condition were the colored people in that night?—A. I suppose I can't speak for any one but myself; but they that was right around there, they didn't have any sleep at all; they didn't know what hour or what time they might come in on them, and most of them around the neighborhood were staying up and clustered together Sunday down at my house and another lady's house, setting down talking about it—they was not going to town and how they were going to vote and all, and they were afraid to stay at home and staid at one another's. Where there were two together they wouldn't stay.

Q. Do you know whether your husband voted at that election?—A. Yes, sir; I know whether he voted. He didn't vote.

Q. Why didn't he vote, if you know?—A. I will tell you the reason he didn't vote. I didn't want to trust him at the ballot-box, because life was better to him than the ballot-box, and I thought it was best for him to stay at home and save his life. My husband didn't even have a pocket-knife; I had a little pen-knife and I took that. He didn't even have a pocket-knife, and I thought it was best to take that even going to my work.

Q. In other words, he was afraid to go to vote?—A. Yes, sir; and I was afraid to go to work.

Q. Didn't I understand you to say that you staid away from your work on election day?—A. Yes, sir; I staid at home that day.

Q. Was there a general fear among the colored people that this trouble would break out again on the day of election?—A. I will tell you what way I looked at it, the way they talked when I would get in the presence of them, it seemed they were all afraid to go to the polls as bad as they wanted to vote, which I believe every colored one there was a Republican and wanted to vote.

Q. Were they afraid to vote?—A. They were afraid to vote.

Q. Did that fear grow out of this firing on the 3d of November, you have described?—A. I don't believe they got really over that until to-day; up to this present time.

Q. Did their staying away from the polls grow out of that fear? Did they stay away from the polls from the fear that grew out of the firing there on Saturday?—A. Yes, sir; they staid away and I reckon it was better; and most of them staid home and didn't go about, and I saw less pass on the day of election amongst the colored people than I ever did.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Do you think your husband has got over his scare yet?—A. He says if it continued like it is, which I like to see him vote all the time, when the time comes to vote, I like to see him go to the poll and vote, and I asked him if he would vote and he said that if it continued like it was he didn't think he would ever go and vote any more.

Q. Didn't think he would ever vote any more?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are any of the colored people in your country Democrats?—A. I don't know; I don't have nothing to do with that sort.

Q. I ask you if any of them are Democrats?—A. I am telling you just what I know; I don't have nothing to do with them, and don't find them.

Q. Well, are any of them Democrats?—A. Sir?

Q. You heard the question.—A. No, sir; I didn't heard.

Q. Are any of the colored people Democrats?—A. I don't know; I don't ask them; because I generally talks with them like myself. I don't have much to do with people. But, as for my part, if I hear of a colored man voting the Democratic ticket, I stay as far from him as I can; I don't have nothing in the world to do with him.

Q. You don't speak to him?—A. No, sir; I don't allow him to come in my house.

Q. That is not the rule among all the colored people?—A. I don't know for anybody but myself.

Q. Why do you have such a dislike to a colored man that votes the Democratic ticket?—A. I will tell you as near as I know. I think that if the race of colored people that has got no friends nohow, and if they don't hang together they won't have none while one party is going one way and another the other. I don't wish to see a colored man sell himself when he can do without. Of course we all have to live, and I always like to have a man live even if he works for 25 cents a day, but I don't want to see him sell himself away.

Q. Cannot a colored man vote the Democratic ticket without selling himself?—A. I think if a colored man votes the Democratic ticket he has always sold himself, because the white man is no friend to him any-way.

Q. Now, when you find a white man voting with the colored people, don't you think he sold himself?—A. I will tell you what I think of him. I think he is a man who has a judgment of his own head, and knows what he is doing.

Q. Then you think very well of a white man who sells himself, because he is a man of judgment?—A. I think he knows what he is doing.

Q. But the darky you don't think has got as much judgment as the white man?—A. I think that is his business. Why I think so the colored people—the old race where I grew up—very few of them ain't got sense enough to vote, but can't be led off by Democrats, I know that.

Q. Well, who leads off these white men now?—A. I reckon they look after their own. I reckon justice take them in heart and their consciences lead them to vote the way they want to vote, and they got the head to lead them on.

Q. It is a pretty general rule down there, that if a colored man sells himself you won't have anything to do with him?—A. If I knew a colored man that voted the Democratic ticket to come to my house, I would tell him to go somewhere else and visit.

Q. Suppose your husband should go and vote a Democratic ticket?—A. I would just pick up my clothes and go to my father's, if I had a father, or would go to work for 25 cents a day.

Q. Are not most of the colored people of the same way of thinking as yourself?—A. I don't know anybody but just myself.

Q. But you talk with them?—A. I don't have much to do with anybody, because I don't think anybody around that neighborhood is as big a fool as myself. I am a fool because I have nothing in the world to do with any face any whiter than my own.

Q. Are not the white people down there good friends to the colored people?—A. Yes, friends to them; rather kill them.

Q. But you said in your testimony, if I recollect aright, that you were astonished; that you did not believe the white folks had anything against the black folks.—A. No, sir; I didn't say that, but I believe by hearing several of them talk, that I knew they must have had something in their heart against them, because they said they feared the colored people were going to carry the election, and I believe they had something against them on account of that.

Q. Where were you when the firing began, how close to the place?—A. As near as I can come at it, to tell you where I was, I was at Mr. Arrington's store; may be, I will say, between four and five doors from the toll-bridge, standing there waiting for my money.

Q. That is where you first heard the firing?—A. That is where I first heard the pistol fired, and I thought I would go up and see; and I heard that Mr. Noel's son and Hense Lawson were fighting, and they had beat a man near to death; and I thought I would go up and see, and see where my husband was, and whilst I went up I looked across the street and saw a great many whites was clustered about the opera house.

Q. They were in the opera house, were they not?—A. No, sir; they were sitting up in the opera house.

Q. Well, I said they were in the opera house.—A. Yes, sir; they were in the opera house; and I called my attention over there to look at them while I stood to look at them, and was amazed at them to see them sitting up there, knowing the said business, and I kept on up the street and got against Mr. Page's; and whilst I was standing there I heard some one say, "Who is that fired here; who is that shot that pistol," and Mr. Lea walked up.

Q. You were then in front of Page's.—A. I was standing in Page's.

Q. Where was George Lea?—A. He was right there at the corner, at Jones's drug store.

Q. He was not at Wolfolk & Blair's?—A. He was at Jones's drug store. I don't know whether he had fired; there had been some firing, but I was not present.

Q. Were all the balance of the whites and blacks there when he said that?—A. All the colored were there then, and the policeman, Mr. Bob Adams.

Q. How far were they from you?—A. They were on one side of the street and I on the other.

Q. You were right on the opposite side of the street?—A. I was within about two doors from the market.

Q. Tell what you heard George Lea say then; who was it that called to know who shot that pistol?—A. I could not tell you; a large crowd of them was up together.

Q. Was it a colored man or a white man?—A. I don't know who it was; I don't know whether it was white or colored.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said that George Lea——

Q. He said he was the man.—A. He said it was George Lea that done the shooting, I understood him to say; he said that he shot in that gang. Some one asked him who shot that; he said George Lea, that worked at the Banner warehouse.

Q. What took place then?—A. Then, at that time, some one said—I don't know who—but some one said “Fire,” and when he said “Fire” I saw Mr. Lea make two steps out midway of the street, and when he stepped out he commenced to shoot, and then the people commenced to run. They were running all they could, and when the firing was so hard I made my escape and run back in Mr. Page's store, and came back to look to see who was doing the shooting.

Q. Now, you say that Lea and the white folks with him that did the firing were in front of Jones's drug store.—A. Mr. Lea was not in front of the drug store. They were standing there near against Mr. Nicholas's bar-room.

Q. You told me just now, as I understood you, that it was in front of Mr. Jones's drug store.—A. I said this: when I saw Mr. Lea holler, and he did the shooting, he was standing on the corner against the drug store.

Q. And then immediately after he said he did the shooting the firing began?—A. Yes, sir; some one said “Fire.”

Q. Where were all the people standing when the command fire was given?—A. The white people were standing near midway of the street as you go to Mr. Holland's factory, against Mr. Nicholas's bar-room, and when he commenced firing the people commenced running in every direction.

Q. Where were the colored people standing?—A. They were standing in the middle of the street.

Q. And the white people were standing about half way into the middle of the street.—A. They were; done got off the walk way.

Q. When the command was given.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was in front of Nicholas's bar-room on one side, and Jones's store on the other?—A. Between Mr. Nicholas's bar-room and Mr. Page's shoe-store; that was the street that runs there.

Q. You say this didn't occur in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. I don't know where Woolfolk & Blair's is, but I know where the shooting was done.

Q. How far were you from the parties when these words were spoken?—A. I was on one corner of the street and they were down in the middle.

Q. Were you on the opposite side of the street?—A. I was right on the corner of Market, and they were about midway of the street that goes to Market.

Q. They were about midways of the street that leads up to Market; whereabouts did you say there were?—A. The white people?

Q. The colored people?—A. They were then in the middle of the street just around—

Q. Between what stores, so I can tell where it was.—A. They were not in between any stores.

Q. Well, there were stores on both sides of the street.—A. The colored people were standing in most every direction. I cannot tell certainly where they were standing, but I know they were standing all to themselves in most every direction; standing looking.

Q. Well, the white people were all close together?—A. All that came out of the opera house went out there.

Q. They didn't come up there until after the firing was over, did they?—A. No, sir; the firing didn't commence really until they got up there.

Q. You stated a while ago they were all sitting up in there?—A. They were sitting there, but all come out and went up.

Q. Was not the firing over before they got up there?—A. The white people were running when the man looked up and asked the question, but I don't know what he told them, but they came down and went up there.

Q. Was not the firing over before they got up where it was?—A. No, sir; it was not over. They hadn't been there two minutes before the firing commenced, and right smart shooting was done after they got up there.

Q. How many got up there before the shooting was done?—A. All in the opera house got up there.

Q. They all got down.—A. They all came out.

Q. All got up before the firing began?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw Mr. Blunt do some of the shooting, did you?—A. I saw him do some of it, too.

Q. Where was he when he shot?—A. He was standing between Mr. Nicholas's bar-room and Mr. Page's shoe store. He was standing right on the corner that branches off from the market.

Q. Where were you standing then?—A. I was standing at Mr. George Page's.

Q. You had moved then, had you, from the upper place?—A. I was standing there to see, after I run a little ways; after the first shot I run off that way and staid awhile, and then when they commenced firing so I went into Mr. Page's, and came back again to see who done the shooting, and I saw Mr. Blunt, being acquainted with his features, and I stopped to look at him.

Q. Down what street was he shooting?—A. He was shooting every one he saw to shoot at.

Q. Yes, every one he saw to shoot at; but in what direction; where they were?—A. He was shooting upstreet, and down-street, and across to the market.

Q. Did he shoot up and down Main street?—A. Yes, sir; he shot across the market, and then he shot across towards Mr. Holland's factory.

Q. He shot towards the market, and then he shot towards Mr. Holland's factory?—A. He shot four ways: down the street, up the street, and across the street.

Q. Did he shoot up Market street any, where it crosses Main; did he go down and shoot up?—A. He shot across Market street across to the market, and he shot up towards the opera hou .

Q. Did he shoot at anybody?—A. Well, the people were running, and I don't know whether he was shooting at the people or not. I know he was shooting the way they were going.

Q. But whether he was aiming at them, or trying to kill, you don't know?—A. I will tell you how it was with him; I won't say for certain, but it seems he was shooting about a man's height, and didn't care whether he hit.

Q. How could you tell he was shooting a man's height?—A. I know he didn't try to shoot up over his height.

Q. How could you know; you could not see where the bullets went?—A. I don't know that; you can go down and see them.

Q. Where did they go?—A. They went into the corner of the shoe-store.

Q. What shoe-store?—A. Mr. Hicks'; went into the corner of Mr. Hicks' shoe-store, and into Swayne & Wiley's. In the corner of his factory you can see where the bullets went in about a man's height.

Q. That is on Market street, is it not?—A. That is on Market street, but above and across from the market, going over on the right-hand side; the market is on the left-hand side.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I have a map here that I want you to understand before you answer me. This [exhibiting map] represents Main street, and this represents Market street. You came from the bridge, which is down this way [indicating], up this way about nearly opposite the opera house. Did you stand on this corner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stood on the corner, that is No. 23?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say that Mr. Blunt stood in the middle of Market street on the line of Main?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the place then, is it not [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You understand these streets? Is this the line of the colored people retreating down Market; turning from the right and going down this way?—A. Yes, sir; they were running down Market and down Main.

Q. And the firing, therefore, from where he stood was down this way [indicating] and down this way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Governor Vance has asked you about the colored people, you especially, having very strong feelings of opposition to the Democratic party. Tell us why that is so.—A. Well, I will tell you why I think so. I may be wrong, but I think this way: I think if a colored person votes the Democratic ticket he have no privilege, and if he vote the other he may have some, for he haint got not none no how, and what little he have he wants.

Q. Have these scenes that you witnessed that day anything to do with your feeling with regard to the Democratic party?—A. Sir?

Q. I will ask you who were these people who fired upon the colored people that day; were they Democrats or Republicans?—A. I don't think he could say he was a Republican.

Q. Does your feeling of hostility grow out of the fact that you think the Democrats have done you wrong?—A. Yes; I really think so.

Q. Is that the ground of opposition? You know there are kind, good people among the Democrats, I suppose?—A. Yes; and I believe if they treat the colored people right, the colored people was humble they bound to treat them right.

Q. Then, if they treat the colored people like men and women, many of them would vote the Democratic ticket?—A. I will say this much.

I will say a Republican should vote the Republican ticket; and I believe a man half a Republican and half a Democrat will do anything.

Q. Your feeling all grows out of the way they treated you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why do you dislike the Democrats?—A. I will tell you because the reason why I say so. Whilst I think that the colored people ought to vote with the colored and the white with the white, and let them stay to themselves, I believe if they vote together they would be better off.

Q. Is it because they have to vote separately at different places, and have not the same rights; is that what you mean?—A. As to the rights, all I say about the rights, I think if the colored people would look like they wanted to, and would behave themselves to the white people, the white people might treat them tolerably well. They are not going to treat them right if they vote with them. They think if they buy them for 10 or 15 cents they don't amount to anything.

Q. And you think the white people don't like some of the colored people because they sell themselves?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in that way those who sell themselves bring themselves into discredit?—A. Yes, sir; these people that sell themselves I don't want anything to do with.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What rights have the Democrats deprived the colored people of?—A. I did not say certainly they have deprived them, but they will do it if the colored people sell votes. The white people say, well, we will do it anyway, and then buy them back at voting time.

Q. Who tells you your rights will be taken away?—A. I don't ask anybody to tell me; I can know and feel for myself.

JAMES G. MILLER sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Four years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Manufacturer and dealer in fertilizers.

Q. Were you in Danville on the 3d of November last?—A. I was.

Q. You saw and heard something of this contest, did you not?—A. Yes; I saw some of it.

Q. What is the first you saw or heard of it?—A. I saw at first some little excitement on the street right opposite my business house, and at the same time saw a white man and colored man fighting. They had clinched, and seemed to be pummeling one another, or scuffling. At the same time I saw a white man stand near by with a pistol in his hand, with a considerable crowd of colored people standing near by; after the fight was over, which didn't last very long, there was a considerable crowd of colored people between me and the two men who were fighting.

Q. Did you hear any outcry from either of the combatants, before they were separated?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you hear Lawson hallo enough?—A. I heard some of the parties present say he said it.

Q. Didn't you hear him make any outcry of any kind?—A. I did not.

Q. Did not you hear the cry of murder?—A. I did not.

Q. You have learned since, or learned about that time, didn't you, that those two persons were Noel and Lawson?—A. Noel and Lawson.

Q. Were you examined before the committee of forty?—A. I was.

Q. You say now you saw one man standing near with a pistol?—A. I saw one man at first, but very soon afterwards I saw a second.

Q. I will read you this statement:

During the fight of Noel and Lawson, from the time that I first saw them, three white men, with their pistols drawn, stood very near, and around Noel and Lawson, who were fighting.

A. I did afterwards see another.

Q. I ask you if this statement was in your deposition?—A. I think it was.

Q. So that, in all, you saw three white men standing there?—A. I saw in all—I didn't see them at once, at first. As the fight progressed I saw the three.

Q. Before the combat finished there were three white men, with drawn pistols, standing around them?—A. Yes, sir; three white men.

Q. Go on now from that point. After the separation of the combatants what further occurred?—A. There seemed to be some slight abatement in the excitement, until a colored man sprang forward from the crowd, which was very dense, and seized either one of the white men that had a pistol or his pistol, I won't be positive which, and they both fell to the sidewalk, and very soon I couldn't see through the crowd, but very soon the same colored man jumped up and ran round the crowd.

Q. Ran towards the colored people?—A. Ran towards the colored people, and had gotten around the crowd, and was making his way off at that time, and the pistol was fired.

Q. Fired from where?—A. From the sidewalk.

Q. From where the white people stood. It was fired toward him as he was running?—A. Toward him, it seemed to be.

Q. Do you know who fired it?—A. I do not. The next thing I saw was a white man in the midst of the crowd; a considerable excitement was getting up about that time. I don't know that I stood at the door all the time, but the next thing I saw was a white man standing in the midst of the colored crowd beckoning, talking to them as if he was trying to disperse them, which I learned afterwards, from him, he was trying to do. They began to gather. The colored people seemed to be not at all disposed to disperse, and I saw the white people were gathering, too, and I commenced to close the door of the store. Before I got through closing the door they commenced firing.

Q. Who commenced firing?—A. I don't know who fired. I didn't see any of the firing, but I heard it. I wasn't looking in that direction at the time. I was trying to get the doors closed.

Q. Did you see white people coming up there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After this struggle about the pistol?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice what the colored people did when the firing commenced?—A. They broke and fled as fast as they could, so far as I could see from the door, which was partially closed or nearly closed.

Q. The colored people dispersed as soon as the firing began, did they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they run or walk away?—A. They ran, I think.

Q. Were there shots fired after them as they were running?—A. I didn't see any.

Q. Did you hear them?—A. I heard shots fired.

Q. After they began to run?—A. I heard shots fired, but it didn't last but a very short time; I suppose that they run just as soon as they commenced firing.

Q. Did you see any colored men with arms?—A. I did not.

Q. Don't you know that shots were fired after the colored people began to run away?—A. I don't know it.

Q. Did you not hear the shots?—A. I heard the shots, but the door was closed.

Q. Shooting continued after they commenced running?—A. The shooting continued for a short time.

Q. Until they had entirely dispersed?—A. And I opened the door to look out, and the street was pretty clear.

Q. You did that immediately after the firing ceased?—A. Pretty soon after the firing ceased.

Q. Where were the white people then?—A. Some few on the sidewalk, and scattered about.

Q. They hadn't fled from the street?—A. I saw some there that were there when the firing commenced, but they had scattered to some extent.

Q. Can you name these three people whom you saw with drawn pistols around Noel?—A. I could give the names of two of them.

Q. Well, give the names of the two?—A. One was Mr. Taylor and the other was George Lea.

Q. You knew them at that time, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you near enough to hear anything either of them said?—A. I was not; I was across the street.

Q. I think you stated you were standing about 60 feet away?—A. Well, the width of the street. I was standing in a store door.

Q. And they were on the opposite side?—A. They were on the opposite side, close up to the sidewalk.

Q. Can you state what white man it was who fell on the sidewalk?—A. Mr. Lea fell when this colored man sprang at him.

Q. Who was the colored man who sought to take his pistol from him?—A. I didn't know him; he was a very large man.

Q. You have not since learned who he was?—A. I have heard who it was, but I don't know.

Q. Have you seen the same person since?—A. I don't know that I have.

Q. Where were these three white men with pistols standing when the colored man sprang forward to seize the one that Lea had in his hand?—A. I didn't see but one whose pistol was seized standing at the time.

Q. Whether the other two remained or not you cannot state?—A. I cannot positively; I suppose they were there, though I don't remember to have seen them.

Q. Do you know where Noel and Lawson or either of them were?—A. I didn't know anything about Lawson, but Noel came over to the store where I was doing business.

Q. Before the firing commenced?—A. Before the general firing commenced.

Q. For what purpose did he go there?—A. Well, he had a relation living in the same house, and he might have come to wash himself.

Q. He was bloody, wasn't he?—A. He was not very bloody, but bloody to some extent.

Q. Well, he was bloody enough to be washed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any such fleeing of white people as of colored people when the firing began?—A. I didn't see it.

Q. While the blacks separated and fled the whites remained; that is, they didn't break up and go away?—A. They didn't break up, no, sir; they immediately assembled in front of the Arlington Hotel, and the town sergeant ordered out the Danville Grays——

Q. I don't care about all that. Didn't you hear any exultation from them before they went up to the Arlington?—A. I heard one man say, "We have got them on the run."

Q. Didn't you hear anything said about the Democracy having a triumph, or "Hurrah for we Democrats," or any expression of that kind?—A. No; I have no recollection at all of that.

Q. But you heard one man say, "We have got them on the run"?—A. That is what I understood him to say. He was on the other side of the street.

Q. Do you know who he was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was he?—A. It was Mr. George Lea.

Q. You heard Lea himself say that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You understood by that that he meant the colored people, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir; I understood him to mean the colored people.

Q. Did you see any evidence that the white people who were standing there were in any danger from any cause?—A. I did, sir; I expected to see a mob.

Q. What could a mob do against men who were armed?—A. There were only a very few white men there, and I didn't know but what the colored people were armed too.

Q. You did not see any arms?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any, but I heard persons say that they had arms among them.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Where was this little crowd of white people standing when the difficulty occurred?—A. They were standing in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office.

Q. Where is your place of business?—A. Right on the opposite side of the street.

Q. Just the width of the street between?—A. Just the width of the street between me and the office.

Q. Where is Mr. Jones' drug store?—A. Mr. Jones' drug store is the corner house on the same square, below.

Q. You say from where you were you could not hear what was said in the crowd?—A. No, sir; I could not.

Q. Do you think it reasonable that that colored women (Sophia Powell and Violet Keeling) could have heard down to the drug store what was said in the crowd?

Mr. LAPHAM objected.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. How far is it down to Jones' drug store from where they stood?—A. Right diagonally across the street.

Q. And below?—A. Yes, sir; I reckon it is 650 yards, diagonally.

Q. From where they stood, diagonally across to the market, in front of Jones' drug store, would be 650 yards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how far is it from there down to Mrs. Page's, spoken of here by the witness?—A. It is the width of Market street and about half of the other square, which is, I reckon, at least 60 yards from Jones' drug-store.

Q. Sixty yards from the drug store?—A. Page's is on the same side of the street.

Q. Could the witness, standing in front of Mrs. Page's, see up or down

Market street?—A. Yes, sir; they could see up and down Market street from Page's store.

Q. From Mrs. Page's, I mean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is on Main street, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About 60 yards below Market?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, Market comes across Main at right angles?—A. I say it is 60 yards from Jones' drug store, which is on the west side of the street.

Q. That would be 60 yards deducting the width of the street?—A. I say it is 60 yards to Mrs. Page's; that is the width of Market street and half a square.

Q. Now, when standing there could they see up or down Market street, except right at the crossing?—A. Yes, sir; I think they could see.

Q. Isn't it built up closely on both sides of Main street, up to Market?—A. Yes, sir; they could see up and down Main street.

Q. I don't mean that; I mean could they see down Market?—A. Oh, no; certainly not.

Q. Did you see anything of Mr. Blunt firing at any of these parties on the retreat?—A. I didn't see Mr. Blunt until after the streets were cleared, and quiet was somewhat restored. He was not firing when I saw him.

Q. Did you see any weapon he had on him?—A. Yes, sir; I think he had two pistols in his hand or around him.

Q. Did you see whether any of them had been emptied or not?—A. I did not; never heard.

Q. You only saw men in the crowd talking to the colored people who afterwards told you they were trying to keep the peace?—A. That is all.

Q. You didn't hear what Captain Oliver said?—A. No, sir; I saw him, and heard he was trying to keep the peace, and a man by the name of Booth.

Q. Now, Mr. Lapham asked you the question if you thought there was any necessity of any fear reasonably entertained by that crowd of white people there?—A. I thought there was great ground for fear.

Q. Why did you think so?—A. Well, sir, there were very few white persons present.

Q. How many do you think, in your best judgment?—A. At the time it commenced I don't remember to have seen more than three or four.

Q. That was the first fist fight.—A. That was the first fist fight that was at the time when the first pistol was fired, soon after the fight and before many white people began to gather up, and I fully expected to see the general attack.

Q. The general attack.—A. Yes; by the colored people that were standing in the street.

Q. Were they saying anything; did they appear angry or restless?—A. I did not hear a word they said, but they seemed to be very stubborn.

Q. Were they pressing up to the white people?—A. They were as close up to the sidewalk as far as I could see, as they could get without getting upon it, and very close together.

Q. Just at the moment of firing, how many colored people do you think were there?—A. At the moment of firing I was closing the door; they were gathering all the time, but just prior to that I would suppose there were from one hundred to one hundred and fifty at least.

Q. Were there many women and children among them?—A. I don't remember to have seen a single one; there might have been some there.

Q. You saw no weapons in the hands of the colored people?—A. No, sir.

Q. After the firing was begun could you judge from the sound and character of the firing, whether they were using guns or pistols?—A. I could not.

Q. How long did the firing keep up?—A. A very short time; I don't suppose it lasted a minute.

Q. You think that those men who fired had a reasonable apprehension that they were about to be mobbed by overwhelming numbers.—A. I certainly felt that way.

Q. You felt that way as a looker-on.—A. Yes, sir; as a looker-on.

Q. Had the people from the opera house come up by the time the firing began?—A. They had begun to come; that is one reason I closed the doors.

Q. They began to pour out, I suppose, as soon as the firing began.—A. Well, they were coming up rather scattering at the time I closed the doors, and just before the firing commenced; very few had come.

Q. And those people who reinforced the three white men, you say they came from the opera house or other directions.—A. No, they would fall in from other directions.

Q. Was there any expectation of this riot by the white people, any preconcerted design to bring it about for the purpose of keeping them from voting, or anything of that sort?—A. No, sir; no preconcerted design for that purpose. I think there was a general apprehension there would be some disturbance on the day of election.

Q. What was that apprehension caused by?—A. I suppose it was caused by the excited state of political excitement at the time growing more especially out of a speech that Mr. Sims made there on the night before. It was a very exciting contest up to that time.

Q. That had inflamed the minds of both whites and blacks, had it?—A. Yes, I think so.

Q. I will ask you if you know what kind of treatment is measured out to any black man there who votes the Democratic ticket or tries to do it.

Mr. LAPHAM. You are to speak of your own knowledge, Mr. Miller.

A. So far as my knowledge is, I don't know; my actual knowledge.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Have you any information on that subject derived from colored men themselves?—A. I have.

Mr. VANCE. That is competent, I think.

(Mr. Lapham objected.)

Mr. VANCE. Now, Mr. Miller, coming back to the riot, you say you are of opinion that those men were under a reasonable apprehension at the time they fired. Do you think from what you saw that they fired any longer or more than was necessary provided their original fears were correct?

A. I am not prepared to say what would be necessary. I am satisfied there was not as much firing as some report there was done.

Q. Do you think there was any firing done out of a spirit of cruelty?—

A. I have no idea there was anything of that sort.

Q. Do you know, or have you any information tending to show that a portion of the firing was done in the air for the purpose of scaring?—

A. I have no doubt a considerable portion of it was.

Mr. LAPHAM. I submit that is no answer. He did not even see it.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Was there any difficulty in restoring order after that?—A. None at all.

Q. The people attended the meeting at the steps of the Arlington, and heard the speech of Colonel Cabell, who exhorted them to submit to order and keep quiet.—A. Yes, sir; and go to their business.

Q. And they did so; all except the Danville Grays and such as had been appointed special police.—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Your first answer was that the witness examined before you could, from the position described by her, have seen along Market street for some distance.—A. I understood him to say Main street.

Q. Why, of course, a person in Main street could see along that street.—A. Decidedly. Well, I understood him to say Main street; of course, they could not see on Market street. Mrs. Page's was the point I was inquired of; if they could see up and down Main street.

Q. She stood on the corner.—A. I misunderstood the question if he said on Market street, because I understood him to say on Main street.

Q. Yes, and at Mrs. Page's.—A. Yes; a person could see up and down the street on Main street, but not Market.

Q. No distance on Market.—A. No, sir.

Q. Could not they see the entrance?—A. They could see where Market turns off Main street, but not down Market street.

Q. But they could see people running into Market street, couldn't they?—A. It is at right angles exactly with Main street.

Q. Now, a person coming up to the corner of Main and Market could, of course, see along Market street, couldn't they?—A. Of course, if they came to the corner of Market, but at Mrs. Page's they could not.

Q. Well, this witness speaks of standing at the corner.—A. Of course they could see on the corner of the street; corner of Market and Main.

Q. Where do you say you first saw Mr. Blunt?—A. I don't remember exactly the spot. It was after the streets were cleared.

Q. It was after you had reopened your store, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you went into the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, tell me as near as you can, where it was.—A. Well, I must confess I don't remember.

Q. He had two pistols in his hands.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that did not impress you?—A. No; not especially as to the spot.

Q. Which way was he going?—A. I think he was going up Main street.

Q. From what direction?—A. From the river.

Q. Main street does not go to the river, does it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know whether he was running out of Market street or coming up Main.—A. He was not on Market street; I saw him on Main.

Q. You don't know but he had came out of Market street, do you?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. How was he holding those pistols?—A. I think he had them in his hand.

Q. One in each hand.—A. I think so; I am not positive about it.

Q. Whether they had been fired or not you are unable to say?—A. I don't know.

Q. They were revolvers, were they not?—A. I suppose so; I didn't examine them; didn't say a word to him.

Q. As near as you can state where he was; was he above Market street on Main when you first saw him?—A. I don't think he was, but I am not positive.

Q. Well, was he about at the intersection of Market and Main?—A. My recollection is so indistinct as to that I am not prepared to say. I saw him somewhere on Main street.

Q. But after the violence was over and the colored people had fled out of sight you saw him coming with two pistols up Main street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By your place of business?—A. I don't know whether it was above or below my place of business. I saw him somewhere on Main street, but as to the point I am not certain.

Q. You didn't go out of your store, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you saw him somewhere along there?—A. Yes, I saw him somewhere on Main street.

Q. What he had been doing with those pistols you don't know, of course. Had you ever known the colored people in the four years you had been there to endanger the safety of the whites by any riotous demonstration?—A. I don't know that I have.

Q. Why did you close the door of your store?—A. Because I saw that the mob, or the colored people, were very stubborn. They could not disperse them, and I saw more white men coming up.

Q. Where would the shots come from that would strike you?—A. They would come from the other side of the street.

Q. What other side?—A. The north side.

Q. Who were there?—A. The white men were there.

Q. You closed your door because the bullets fired by white men might reach it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you kept it closed until the firing was over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The people coming from the opera house came directly towards you, didn't they?—A. No, sir; they came on the other side of the street.

Q. Well, they struck Main street where the gathering of the white people was?—A. The opera-house is on the same side of the street, only lower down.

Q. They came up Main street, then, to where the white people were standing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if the whites fired at the black men they would fire in the direction of your store?—A. Yes, they would.

Q. And you closed your store for that reason?—A. Yes, I did.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Something was said about politics. What are your politics?—A. Well, sir, I have been a Conservative. I was an Old Line Whig before the war, and I hardly know what I am since.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You know with which party you act in Virginia?—A. I have voted with the Democratic party ever since the war.

W. E. SIMS sworn and examined.

The CHAIRMAN [exhibiting diagram]. Here is what purports to be a map of a portion of Danville, together with an index giving references to certain figures and places. I wish you would look at it and say whether you are acquainted with the locality, and whether it is a correct map and a correct index of the figures referred to. I do not ask you in regard to any fact involved in the controversy, but only as to whether it is a correct representation of the locus in quo.

The WITNESS. I prepared that paper and prepared this index. I am familiar with the place where this affair is said to have occurred. I made this plat from my knowledge of the locality, and the marks and figures I took, not from any knowledge of my own, except as to houses and streets. The position of witnesses I only took from the depositions of witnesses taken in my contested election case in the senate of Virginia, where I am contesting the seat of John L. Hurt, and from the testimony taken before the committee of forty, ex parte testimony in Danville. From this testimony of witnesses I have located witnesses, and I think it is accurate. I do not mean mathematically accurate, but it describes the situation of affairs.

Q. That is, you simply show by this map the location of witnesses as you understood their testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I do not propose to examine you further now in regard to this matter.

Mr. VANCE. We propose to send to Danville and get a regular, authentic map of the city, and as to these positions assigned here to the various parties, of course we could not admit that.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; it is a matter of proof.

A. WALTERS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you a citizen of Danville?—Answer. No, sir.

Q. Were you there on the 3d of November?—A. I was there on the 3d of November in the evening. I live a mile from the corporation line.

Q. You live in the county?—A. Yes, sir; I live in the county.

Q. Are you an old citizen there?—A. Yes, sir; I have been there ever since I was a boy.

Q. Your name has been mentioned by some of the witnesses, and I will ask you to state what you saw of what is called the Danville riot on the 3d of November.—A. On the 3d of November in the evening there was a meeting in the opera house of the citizens of Danville for the purpose of having some resolutions signed, as I understood, and I went up in the opera house about the time that meeting was about half over. I had not been to a political meeting during the canvass; had not taken any part in politics so far as the meetings were concerned. I am an old man and don't like to go out from home nights, and have something else to do in the day. While we were in the opera house I saw there was considerable excitement out on the street; men kept jumping up and going to the front side of the opera house next to the street and looking out of the windows. Colonel Cabell was making some remarks and he told them to be quiet; that probably it was only somebody trying to break up the meeting. I came very near getting up and going out myself. I had some curiosity to see what such excitement was about, but after they got through with their talk they proposed for every man to come up and sign these resolutions (they read a parcel of resolutions); and I, living in the country, thought I wanted to put my name there. They suited me. I thought it was all true and right; and I forced my way up to the table and asked them to let me sign the writings, as I was an old man, let me get out of the crowd. Everybody got back and they gave me the pen. I think Dr. Cole, of Danville, was standing right as my back. He asked me to put his name too, and I think I did so. At soon as I signed the writings I came out; came down the steps on the sidewalk and the streets were pretty clear. Somebody came along and told me my grandson Walter was shot. I went on up the street.

I saw Mr. Corbin and this colored policeman standing on the corner right at the upper corner of Market street—not a street; it is an alley probably; about 20 feet wide; it is a very narrow street. I met these two men, and three or four men, but the streets were cleared just in that little time. It was perfectly clean of men, women, and children except a few scattered along on the sidewalk. I went up to Mr. Garrant's store, which is about three doors or four doors probably below Union street; just four doors from the upper end of the square from where I saw Corbin and the policeman. Withers and may be two or three other men standing around with them. Corbin then remarked that this policeman had done everything he could to disperse that crowd, and if the other policemen had done their duty as much so as he did, they might have saved the trouble; saved them from getting into the difficulty. I then went on up to Mr. Horace Garrant's store and inquired for my grandson, though I met some two or three between the corner and the store, who told me my grandson was right badly shot. I went up and found him lying on a counter, on a mattress, and by this time Mr. Holland, my son-in-law, had gotten up, and he was afraid his wife would hear of it, and come down on the street. He asked me to go up and keep his wife from coming down; didn't want her to come down there. I had just brought my horse to a blacksmith shop a square or two below, and I just walked off after having some conversation with the boy that was shot—a young man about twenty-one years old. I asked him how he was shot, and he told me somebody had shot him.

Q. I don't know that it is material to state what occurred there. I have no objection to your stating what Mr. Holland said, though.—A. I just went and got my horse and went up to my daughter's and told her I thought her son was wounded, but I hoped not badly.

Q. What I wished to call your attention to was whether you saw the scuffle of two whites pushing Jack Redd?—A. Jack Redd or George Lea? I saw no scuffle between Jack Redd, and, in fact, didn't see any scuffle with anybody.

Q. Did you say as you were passing along, "Boys, it is very hot, but it is not half as hot as we are going to make it?" Do you remember that?—A. When was that?

Q. That afternoon?—A. I never said any such thing. I may have told them that if they didn't behave themselves—if they started another row—it might be worse than that. I will tell you another thing I told them——

Q. The reason I ask you this question is because I understand that witnesses have stated that, and we wanted to hear your version of it.—A. Well, if they stated anything of that sort, I reckon I didn't state it.

Q. What have you said in regard to that matter?—A. I may have told them that if they started another row it might be worse than that.

Q. What I wish to ask is what you said on that occasion?—A. I don't know as I said anything at all.

Q. Did you say anything such as I have read to you, "Boys, it is very hot, but it is not half as hot as we are going to make it?"—A. I didn't see any of the boys. The streets were clear, but I didn't have any conversation with any of the colored people that evening.

Q. You didn't?—A. No, sir. Since that I will tell you what I did say—

Q. I don't ask you what you said since; that, for a man of your age, would be too much. What you said then, at the time, is the only point of inquiry, and if you say you did not say that I have no further question to ask you.—A. I have no recollection of having any conversation with any of them on that evening.

Mr. VANCE. Who was it said that he said that?

The CHAIRMAN. John Stone.

The WITNESS. I don't know John Stone.

The CHAIRMAN. He did not say you knew him, but that you said in passing so and so on the Market Square as you were passing the neighborhood. Are you called Captain Walters?—A. Yes, sir.

Washington, D. C., February 19, 1884.

WILLIAM P. GRAVES sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I moved there in 1852.

Q. What is your age?—A. I was sixty-three last fall.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am a commission merchant.

Q. How long have you been in that business?—A. I have been in that business there since 1857, I think.

Q. What part, if any, do you take in politics?—A. I have taken no interest in politics except to vote until the last election, when I took some little interest. I have not attended a political meeting for some time until the last election.

Q. Did you belong to any political organization prior to the last election?—A. I belonged to the Third ward in which I reside.

Q. To what?—A. To the Third Ward Club.

Q. Democratic club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you one of the signers of the circular?—A. I was.

Q. Were you at the meeting at the opera house?—A. I was.

Q. Did you sign the resolutions indorsing that circular?—A. I had signed them previous to that time. I was one of the original signers. I did not sign it upon that occasion.

Q. So that you both signed the circular and approved the resolutions indorsing them?—A. I do, emphatically.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November?—A. I was in the meeting.

Q. What time did you leave the meeting?—A. I left the meeting soon after they commenced signing the resolutions.

Q. Had there been any firing in the street before you left?—A. I had heard none. There was some excitement during the meeting—

Q. Never mind now, just answer my question, please. Where were you when you first heard any firing?—A. I was on the street near Nicholas & Hessberg's.

Q. In the line that had been formed there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which way from it?—A. I had started out of the opera house—

Q. Come right to my point, please; answer my questions?—A. I want to do that.

Q. Where were you at the time you first heard the firing?—A. I answer that question by this, that I was near Nicholas & Hessberg's store.

Q. How far from the white men who were formed upon the street?—A. I didn't see the white men, but from what I can understand it was some three or four buildings below.

Q. Were you below the crowd of colored people, too, or above them?—A. I was—well, somewhat in the edge of the crowd.

Q. Of the colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What class of colored people did you see there?—A. Well, I can't answer that question exactly.

Q. Only whether they were different ages and sexes.—A. I saw only one sex; I remember seeing only one sex.

Q. You do not remember seeing any women.—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, you saw children.—A. I can't say I did; I think not.

Q. No boys.—A. I don't remember any; there might have been some boys.

Q. Were you armed?—A. I was.

Q. What did you have?—A. I had a Smith & Wesson, .44-caliber-pistol.

Q. A five or six shooter.—A. A six-shooter.

Q. Was it loaded?—A. It was.

Q. Did you discharge it?—A. I did.

Q. How many times?—A. Four times. I would like to make a little explanation there, sir——

Q. Oh, I will give you an opportunity. Do you know Charles Adams?—A. I do.

Q. Did you see him?—A. I did.

Q. Did you fire at him?—A. I did not.

Q. Didn't he raise his hands and say, "My God, I aint doing anything, don't shoot me?"—A. He did.

Q. Well, didn't you fire?—A. I did not.

Q. You deny that, do you?—A. I deny it most positively, sir.

Q. Where did you fire your four shots?—A. As I came out of the opera house, coming up Main street towards my place of business, just as I got at the corner of Nicholas and Hessberg's the firing commenced; just above it, and I must say for a few seconds, it was about as hot a fire as I have ever been in.

Q. Yes, I should judge so.—A. For about a few seconds, and then it was I fired, from the fact that I have never yet been able to stand and let a man shoot at me or strike me without returning it.

Q. Where did you fire?—A. I fired in the crowd in front.

Q. In the colored crowd.—A. In front.

Q. Among the colored people.—A. Amongst the colored people.

Q. Four shots.—A. I fired one shot there. I fired one shot, perhaps two shots, there in that direction. I fired another shot in another direction, rather across the street, perhaps; I don't remember exactly.

Q. Was that after the colored people began to flee?—A. Some of them were running at the time.

Q. You fired in the direction they were running, did you not?—A. Yes, sir, I fired; some of them were running.

Q. Where did you fire the other two shots?—A. I fired one shot across the street.

Q. What did you fire across the street at?—A. Well, I fired there in the direction they fired; the bullets were coming towards me.

Q. You fired toward the colored people.—A. I fired toward the colored people.

Q. Where did you fire the other shot?—A. I fired one shot down off Main street.

Q. What was that at?—A. Well, there was a colored man had been firing, or rather attempting to fire, up that street, and I fired in that direction.

Q. At him.—A. No, sir; I did not fire at him. I didn't fire at any one in particular on that occasion.

Q. Well, you fired into the crowd.—A. No, sir; I can't say that I fired into the crowd then.

Q. What did you fire at?—A. I fired more in the air than in any other direction.

Q. Do you mean to have us understand now that you fired in the air?—A. I didn't fire there with the purpose or expectation of hitting any one.

Q. How long was that after the first firing?—A. It was a very few seconds after.

Q. After the crowd were fleeing, wasn't it?—A. After they had commenced fleeing.

Q. Have you ever been in the military service?—A. I have.

Q. Where?—A. I was in the Mexican war.

Q. In what capacity?—A. I was a volunteer; an orderly sergeant for eight months, and for eleven or twelve months I was an assistant commissary and quartermaster.

Q. So that you had some military experience.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you get the revolver you had?—A. About, I think, as near as I can remember, about a month previous to that time.

Q. Where did you get it?—A. I bought it of Mr. Schoolfield, a hardware merchant in Danville.

Q. Can you say what supply of them he had at that time?—A. I think I got the only one of that kind he had at that time.

Q. Hadn't he other kinds?—A. Yes, sir; he had a good many of them.

Q. A good many others.—A. A good many others.

Q. What were they?—A. I think he had some .38-caliber pistols, and he had other pistols, I don't remember, I didn't notice particularly.

Q. Well, you took the most effective arm he had?—A. The one I thought the most effective.

Q. And you are a judge of the effect?—A. I think I am a pretty fair judge.

Q. When did you load that revolver?—A. It was sent to my office loaded.

Q. You directed it to be so done?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you receive it at your office?—A. A few hours after I purchased it.

Q. And that was about a month before the affair?—A. I think it was about a month. I don't remember the exact time. I think it was about a month.

Q. Didn't you belong to a secret political organization?—A. I belonged to the ward club.

Q. Didn't you belong to a secret political organization?—A. I don't know anything about your secret political organization.

Q. Didn't you know of any such organization at Danville?—A. I do not.

Q. You don't know of any existing prior to the election?—A. I do not; with the exception that our club meetings were held in private. There was nothing particularly secret about them, but that there was none except the members of our party expected to attend those meetings.

Q. You held them in secret?—A. I don't understand the question.

Q. You held the meetings in secret?—A. Yes, sir; they were private.

Q. Wasn't there an executive committee of that club?—A. I think there was.

Q. Were you a member of that?—A. I was not.

Q. Do you know who constituted that executive committee?—A. I do not; I don't remember.

Q. About when was it organized?—A. It was organized probably early in the campaign; I don't remember.

Q. About how long before the election?—A. Four or six weeks before the election, or two months; I don't remember exactly.

Q. Was it before the month of August?—A. I think not; I don't remember the exact date of it.

Q. You didn't see the line of white men on the street at all, I understand you?—A. I did not.

Q. You didn't fire then by reason of any animus, you say, against them?—A. No, sir; I was firing only in self-defense.

Q. Why did you go there? For the purpose of self-defense?—A. I was passing from the opera house in the direction of my place of business.

Q. Did you not know before you left the opera house there was a disturbance there?—A. I did not.

Q. I thought you said there was something said in the opera house?—A. There was something said in the opera house; there was some little said in the meeting, and there were a number of persons who got up and went to the front windows, where they could see in the front street.

Q. You say you left the opera house?—A. And Colonel Cabell remarked——

Q. I didn't ask that.

Mr. VANCE. I think he is entitled to give that explanation now, you stopped him before.

Mr. LAPHAM. No; I hardly think it is called for. I am only addressing myself to questions personal to himself. I don't ask what Colonel Cabell said, or any other person.

Mr. VANCE. Well, I don't think you ought to ask him and not give him a chance to explain.

Mr. LAPHAM. The difficulty is he is not answering the questions I ask.

The WITNESS. I didn't know what the disturbance was. I didn't know that there was any firing. I heard no firing and I didn't know what it was. There was some little excitement.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Where did you first draw your pistol?—A. It was very near Nicholas & Hessberg's door.

Q. Had any one assaulted you?—A. They were firing right in——

Q. Had any one assaulted you?—A. Well, my dear sir, I thought so; they were firing right in my direction.

Q. Who was the person who assaulted you?—A. I can't say; I can't say who it was that assaulted me. They were firing right in my direction, as the bullets in the side of the house will show, coming from the street.

Q. You know where it is said the line of white people stood, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which direction were you from them?—A. I was on the sidewalk very near——

Q. Well, they were on the sidewalk, too?—A. They were on the sidewalk; I could not see them.

Q. Where were you with reference to them?—A. I was right at the corner of Nicholas & Hessberg's store the lower corner, between the lower corner and his front door; very near Nicholas & Hessberg's front door.

Q. How far from the point where the line of white people stood?—A. I forget exactly, but there were three or four buildings between?

Q. Was it up or down Main street, where you were?—A. It was down.

Q. You were below them on Main street?—A. I was below them on Main street; yes, sir; between the opera house and them.

Q. Between the opera house and the line of white people.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of what building do you speak which will show the marks of the bullets.—A. All of those buildings.

Q. Well, you didn't shoot in front of all of them.—A. No, sir.

Q. I want the one you refer to.—A. I think there may be some bullets along about Hessberg's and the adjoining building; there are some bullet marks also below in the building that was occupied by Averett & White at that time.

Q. How many composed the executive committee of your club?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did they make any reports to the club or were their operations secret?—A. No, sir; their operations were not secret.

Q. Did they make any reports to the club?—A. I could not say.

Q. That you remember now?—A. I don't remember the reports particularly.

Q. You don't remember any reports made by them?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Nor you can't give the name of any member of the executive committee.—A. No; I cannot give the name of a member of the executive committee.

Q. You were examined as a witness before the committee of forty, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who examined you?—A. Mr. Bowen.

Q. Give his full name.—A. I don't remember his full name. He is a young lawyer there who conducted it. I think his name is Philip Bowen.

Q. Do you remember whether you signed a deposition?—A. I think I did.

Q. Were you inquired of one word as to what occurred in this riot of the 3d of November?—A. I think I was. You have my deposition there; it is published.

Q. I am testing your recollection now.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there one word inquired of you as to what occurred in this riot?—A. Yes, I think there was.

Q. You think there was.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I will be fair with you and let you look over your testimony and see what you say about it, because I desire to deal fairly with you.—A. I also would desire to deal fairly with the committee.

The WITNESS. [After examining the report of the committee of forty, handed him by Mr. Lapham.] I find that I am mistaken.

Q. Then you were not inquired of as to anything which took place on the 3d of November.—A. From that I think I was not; I was laboring under the impression that I was.

Q. It was well known that you were there, wasn't it?—A. Yes, I think it was. It is some time since I read that report.

Q. It was well known that you had a pistol.—A. I think it was.

Q. And that you fired your pistol.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why you were not inquired of you are unable to state.—A. I am unable to say.

Q. Were you not sworn to tell the whole truth?—A. I think perhaps I was.

Q. The subject of that inquiry was the riot, was it not?—A. It was.

Q. And you were sworn to tell the whole truth.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you did not say one word about the riot itself.—A. They examined other persons there upon that particular point.

Q. Yes; but you were at liberty to tell what took place. Can you give any reason why you were not examined as to this riot?—A. I cannot.

Q. You were examined solely upon the subject of the Readjuster meeting on the previous evening.—A. So it appears from the report.

Q. Well, don't you remember?—A. I had forgotten until I read that deposition.

Q. Well, having read it, don't you now remember that that was the only topic upon which you were asked?—A. I think perhaps it was.

Q. You entertained the feelings expressed in your testimony in relation to that meeting, did you not?—A. I didn't hear the question distinctly.

Q. You entertained the feelings implied in what you said about that meeting.—A. I do, sir; I do, sir.

Q. And did through the day Saturday.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went into this crowd entertaining those feelings.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You carried your pistol there entertaining those feelings.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you see Charles Adams?—A. Just as the firing commenced, Charles Adams rushed into Nicholas & Hessberg's front door and stopped at the door, from the street, and threw up his hands and begged not to shoot.

Q. Begged who?—A. Begged some one not to shoot him. I think he stated he had just been shot at, and I told him when he threw up his hands and told them not to shoot him, I turned to Adams and told him to go into the house, and he did so. In a few minutes the scene of action changed, and the firing was down North Market street as has been described. Whilst I was standing very near the corner of the street, and just a few feet below the house of Nicholas & Hessberg's store, Adams ran out of the side door, and ran down the street for a short distance; there were a good many persons firing down that street at that time; I hollered to Charles Adams and told him to go back into the house. As I hollered to him he faced, turned about, threw up his hands, and hollered not to shoot.

Q. Hollered to who?—A. He hollered not to shoot; perhaps to me I told him to get in the house or he would be killed, and he got in the house. I didn't know at the time that Charles Adams had been shot. I afterwards asked him where and when he was shot. He explained that he was shot just as he threw up his hands and begged not to shoot. Adams was then facing me, right front. I asked him where he was shot, and he said he was shot in that arm [indicating the right arm], shot there, and the bullet came out here. Now, any one who will see the position of Charles Adams and myself will know that it was impossible for me to have fired that shot. It was impossible for me to have fired that shot. I don't doubt one moment if I thought Charles Adams was there trying to shoot me I would have shot him in a minute, if I had wanted to have done it in the first place. I was as close to him as this gentleman, with my pistol, and I could have shot him if I wanted to have done it, without any difficulty upon the commencement of the riot, and he would never have known what hurt him. I had no disposition to shoot Charles Adams or any one else except in my own self-defense.

Q. That is the second time you saw Charles Adams?—A. This was the second time I saw Charles Adams.

Q. Did you fire your pistol at that time?—A. I did not at that time.

Q. Well, about that time?—A. I had fired before that time.

Q. Didn't you fire your pistol after that occurrence?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had shot your pistol before that?—A. I had shot four times before that.

Q. Now, don't you know that that is the time that Adams came out to get the horses he left standing there?—A. There were no horses there.

Q. Don't you know he came out for the purpose of getting them, and they had been frightened and run away?—A. No, sir; I don't think such is the fact; the horses were not there.

Q. You didn't hear anything about their being there?—A. I heard afterwards that he went there for that purpose, but his horses were not there.

Q. No, they were not; I agree to that.—A. They were not there; and my impression is that Charles Adams had put his horses away and come back and went into the crowd.

Q. You were alone during all these proceedings, were you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who was in company with you?—A. I didn't notice any one particularly, just at that time. There was a good large crowd; the street was full.

Q. I am speaking now of white people.—A. As I came out, I didn't know that there was any one with me at all—

Q. I repeat again the question, were you alone during all this period when you fired these four shots?—A. I was not alone, but I didn't remember until since then who was with me.

Q. Well, if you remember now, you can answer who was with you.—A. Mr. Charles H. Conrad, I think, when Adams ran into the door, was standing by my left arm when I ordered Adams to get in the house, in the front door.

Q. What right had you to order him?—A. He threw up his arms and begged for mercy, and I wanted to save his life.

Q. That is the mode in which you did it; you ordered him in?—A. I ordered him in; told him to get in the house.

Q. Who else was with you?—A. I don't remember who else was there; there were a number of persons; the crowd was pretty thick.

Q. Of white people?—A. There were some white people.

Q. Can you name any other one than the one you have named?—A. I could not have named any one at all; some gentlemen have reminded me since that they were near.

Q. I prefer your recollection of what took place at the time; what I want to get at is whether anybody was co-operating with you at that time or whether you were acting on your own responsibility?—A. I was acting on my own responsibility.

Q. Do you know whether you hit any person?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you design to hit any person?—Well, I can't say—

Q. Give me a frank answer to that question?—A. I can't say that I did.

Q. Did you design to fire without hitting anybody?—A. I designed to protect myself.

Q. Did you design each pistol shot you fired not to hit anybody?—A. No, sir; I didn't say that.

Q. You fired then with the idea that you might hit some one?—A. I fired with the idea that I might hit some one——

Q. Are you sure you didn't hit any one?—A. I am not, sir.

Q. You might then have killed one of the men who was killed?—A. I can't say.

Q. You might have done so?—A. I can't say; there was no one who fell there.

Q. You may have done so.—A. I can only say this; that there was no one shot and I saw no one fall, and I didn't see any one who was shot.

Q. You shot in the crowd?—A. I shot in the crowd.

Q. A man might be ahead of your bullet and fall without you seeing him.—A. He didn't fall there.

Q. No; but he might fall.—A. There was no one fell in that part of the street; I saw no one fall at all.

Q. For what purpose did you procure this revolver originally?—A. I procured it for this purpose——

Q. Well be frank about it.—A. I will. From the state of feeling that was existing, I was very sure that there was bound to be a collision between the races. I was very sure that there would ultimately be some collision between the races, and I thought it was necessary for every one of us, every white man, to be prepared to defend himself and his family.

Q. No one had ever molested you, had they?—A. What do you mean by molesting?

Q. I mean what that term implies; no colored man had ever assaulted you had there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When?—A. Upon several occasions.

Q. Name one.—A. Well, some years ago——

Q. Oh, I don't want to go back in the buried past. I mean during that time.—A. I wish to answer your question frankly, and if you will permit me to do so. I will do it.

Q. Well, go on.—A. Some time ago—it has been some considerable time—I was walking on the street with Mrs. Graves on my arm——

Q. When was it?—A. It has been two or three years ago.

Q. Very well, go on.—A. I was walking on the street with Mrs. Graves on my arm, and I met some colored women, and one of them endeavored to run right between Mrs. Graves and myself, although she had hold of my arm.

Q. A colored woman?—A. A colored woman; that was one occasion.

Q. Was that all there was of it?—A. I caught her and shoved her to one side, and moved on. That is all of that.

Q. Now do you mean that that occurrence prompted you to buy a pistol three or four weeks before election?—A. I don't mean that that alone did.

Q. Who was that woman?—A. I didn't know her.

Q. Was it in the day-time?—A. It was in the day-time on Sunday.

Q. In broad daylight?—A. In broad daylight.

Q. Had you a pistol then?—A. I had not.

Q. Did you have one before you purchased this?—A. Many a one I have had. I just told you I was an old soldier; have been in the army.

Q. I mean during your living in Virginia?—A. I have not used one. I have a pistol that I got during the war. That I gave to a widowed sister who lives in the country, and I had had no pistol for many years at home until I purchased this one.

Q. Now, what other menace, if any, was there which prompted you to buy this pistol?—A. I have very frequently, in walking the streets—a good many of the sidewalks of our streets have rocks, what we call stringers, two parallel lines, upon which the people generally walk. Frequently, in walking the streets I have encountered negroes, more particularly negro women; I have generally turned to the right, and I have very frequently come in contact with them. I first gave the way, but I found if I continued to do it they would press me off the sidewalk altogether, and I generally walked straight along on the right hand, and if I come in contact with any one, why, they generally give the way; I didn't strike her with my fist or anything of that kind; I generally strike them with my shoulder, and pass on; I have had frequent occurrences of that sort. Upon another occasion, not very long before this thing occurred, there were a couple of negroes in my warehouse—I have a tobacco warehouse in town; that is my business, selling tobacco on commission—a couple of negroes came up with a basket of tobacco, and ran with the basket against me; there was no necessity for it, they could have walked past; they could have passed around without striking me at all, but they ran right against my leg and hurt me a little; I remonstrated a little with them for doing so, whereupon they cursed me.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said, "God damn you, I'll strike you."

Q. What did you say?—A. I hit him over the head with my stick, sir.

Q. What more?—A. That was all.

Q. That was all of that occurrence, was it?—A. That is all of it.

Q. Did you have him arrested?—A. He had me arrested.

Q. How soon?—A. In a few hours.

Q. Who before?—A. Before the magistrate, a man by the name of Luck.

Q. Was the case tried?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were acquitted, I suppose?—A. I was not.

Q. You were not?—A. I was not. Mr. Luck asked me if I was afraid of the negro.

Q. You don't say you were convicted there?—A. I say that I was fined.

Q. Is that so? When was that?—A. That was two months before the election.

Q. How long before you bought this pistol?—A. Not a great while before that; perhaps a month or two; I don't remember the exact time.

Q. You paid the fine, of course?—A. I did.

Q. And had money enough left to buy this revolver?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you name any other incident or menace that prompted you to buy it? What was the name of that colored man?—A. I don't remember his name; I didn't know him, and don't remember his name now.

Q. Now, do you mean to say that you lived in fear from that occurrence?—A. No, sir; and that was one reason why I was fined. The magistrate asked me if I was afraid of the negro doing me any bodily harm. I told him I could not say that I was, as I felt perfectly able to protect myself. Although I was getting a little old, I was not afraid, and could not say that I was.

Q. Then you didn't entertain any fear of personal injury that prompted you to buy this revolver?—A. Not upon that occasion, I didn't.

Q. What?—A. I say I didn't entertain any fear of personal injury from that party.

Q. Well, you didn't know of any one else, did you, who would be likely to threaten you?—A. There was very great excitement all through the town; there were a great many threats being made; threats of violence.

Q. Was there any excitement before this circular was issued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time was that issued?—A. I don't remember the date.

Q. About how long before this occurrence?—A. It was, as well as I remember, a few weeks.

Q. Do you know who wrote it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who?—A. Judge A. M. Aiken wrote it.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. In Danville.

Q. Do you know how many were printed?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was printed in large numbers, wasn't it?—A. Large numbers, and a considerable demand for them, and we could not print them fast enough.

Q. Was it not sent to the Democratic headquarters, and printed by them?—A. No, sir; they were printed in Danville.

Q. Don't you know of any printed anywhere else except in Danville?—A. I don't; I suppose there were.

Q. You have no doubt about it, have you?—A. I don't know, but my impression is that they were.

Q. Do you know how extensively it was circulated?—A. I think it was very extensively circulated.

Q. Very extensively?—A. I think so; I think there was a very considerable demand for them.

Q. It was not circulated openly, was it?—A. I think so.

Q. Was it about Danville?—A. No, they were not circulated immediately about Danville; it was issued there.

Q. How much was the fine for your assault upon the negro?—A. It was a nominal fine, and the costs I don't remember exactly, but some five or six dollars, something like that, as well as I remember; I don't remember; the fine was nominal.

Q. How much was the fine; I am not asking about costs?—A. Very small; I don't remember,

Q. Less than a dollar, wasn't it?—A. I think so; I think perhaps it might have been a dollar; I don't remember the amount.

Q. Were these two colored men in your employment?—A. They were not; they were in the employment of Mr. Shelton.

Q. What were they there with a basket of tobacco for?—A. They were getting up his tobacco.

Q. Which was in your warehouse?—A. In my warehouse; they were in his employment.

Q. When was that occurrence?—A. I can't give the time exactly.

Q. About when?—A. It was a few months before the election, as well as I remember.

Q. Did you see either of the two colored policemen the day after the riot?—A. I don't remember to have seen them.

Q. You know them both, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they not excellent police officers?—A. I cannot say that they were.

Q. Can you say they were not?—A. I cannot say they were not.

Q. Didn't you esteem them as fairly faithful officers?—A. I can't say that I did.

Q. You know nothing to the contrary, do you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Wasn't it understood there prior to the election among the Democrats that in case there was a Coalition procession or parade it was to be broken up?—A. Sir?

Q. Wasn't it understood there prior to the election that if the Coali-tionists undertook to have a street procession in Danville it should be broken up?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear nothing of the kind?—A. I heard that there was some probability of there being a street parade there on the morning of the election. This was the rumor; I don't know how it got about or anything about it; it was rumored there was to be a torchlight procession the morning before the election, and they were to march in three columns to the polls and take possession of the polls. That was the rumor; I can't say how it originated or anything about it.

Q. Now, please answer my part of the question. Wasn't it understood if that was attempted it was to be broken up?—A. No, sir; I will answer you frankly. There was no understanding to that effect, but I think if it had been attempted it would have brought about a collision; I will frankly state that.

Q. And your understanding was, then, it was to have taken place the evening before election?—A. On the morning of the election, before day.

Q. Who did you hear say anything of that kind?—A. It was a general rumor.

Q. Just answer my question, please; who did you hear say anything of that kind?—A. I can't say.

Q. Name any one person—A. I cannot name any particular person now; I will simply say it was the general rumor of the town.

Q. Well, a general rumor among Democrats?—A. I presume it was among Democrats.

Q. Did you hear any such thing from the Coalitionists?—A. I did not.

Q. Then you must have heard it from Democrats. You had no intercourse with the opposite party, had you?—A. I had none, sir.

Q. So you must have heard it from Democrats?—A. I think it was from Democrats.

Q. But you cannot name any individual whom you heard speak on the subject?—A. I don't remember. I will say this, I remember to have heard—I think it was Dr. Holley—say that Mr. Wheeler told him that he had become responsible for the torchlights and lanterns.

Mr. VANCE. That is entirely hearsay testimony. I shall call for similar things on the other side.

Mr. LAPHAM. Yes. I didn't ask for that.

Q. Did it not occur to you on your examination before the committee of forty that it was singular you were asked no questions about this riot?—A. It did not.

Q. It never occurred to you?—A. I didn't remember it until I read the deposition.

Q. Don't it now occur to you as extraordinary that you should not have said anything about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, that answers it.—A. There were plenty of others—

Q. No, you have answered my question, I don't want anything volunteered. You have answered my question and that is all I desire.—A. All right, sir.

Q. Have you had any military service except in the Mexican war?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When?—A. In the last war.

Q. In the Confederacy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your rank?—A. Captain.

Q. How long did you serve?—A. Twelve months.

Q. Where?—A. In the army of Northern Virginia.

Q. Well, these poor colored people were left at home during that time, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were peaceable?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you been a dealer in slaves?—A. I owned slaves in the war.

Q. I didn't ask whether you owned them; I asked whether you had been a dealer in them?—A. I have sold some slaves and have bought some others in my life.

Q. Well, that makes a dealer. That is all.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Were you in General Mahone's brigade, and Longstreet's division or corps?—A. I was in Pickett's in 1861. I was in the Eighteenth Virginia Regiment, Pickett's brigade—first Cox's brigade, afterwards Pickett's—Longstreet's division.

Q. You were asked to give some reason why you were not examined on the riot matter when you were before the committee of forty, and you were not permitted to say these reasons. Now, why, do you suppose?

Mr. LAPHAM. You assume that there was a reason. I have asked him and he says he can't give any.

The WITNESS. I was going on to give them when you stopped me.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Why is it you were not asked questions about the riot when you were before the committee of forty?—A. I suppose there was a sufficient amount of testimony on that subject from those who knew more about it than I did.

Q. And as you had gone up to hear Sim's speech you would know more about that than the others, probably?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you were telling about coming out of the opera house and were asked if you fired your pistol and you said you did, you were asked how many times, and you said four times, and then you said you wanted to explain, and you were not permitted to explain. Will you now explain what you wanted to then. Whatever it was you had in your mind then you can say now.—A. I don't remember now what it was I intended to remark at the time.

Q. Why did you, near Hessberg's, pull out your pistol and fire?—A. I pulled it out and fired because they were firing upon me. I thought that I was in danger myself, and I pulled it out for my own self-protection.

Q. Do you know that any bullets were coming towards you; and if so, why do you know it?—A. Well, an old soldier remembers very well the peculiar noise of a bullet; I don't think I shall ever forget it.

Q. Did you hear anything of that peculiar music of Charles the Twelfth on that occasion?—A. I thought I did sir.

Q. Did you see any flash or smoke in the direction of the colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you confident they had arms and were using them?—A. I don't remember to have seen the pistols at the time, but then the bullets were coming from that direction as the print of the bullets on the side of the building shows that they must have come from out in the street and could not have come from the white people who were on the sidewalk.

Q. You were on the sidewalk, as I understand you, near Hessberg's?—A. I was on the sidewalk within a few feet of Hessberg's front door.

Q. The white people were on the same sidewalk to your right as you faced the street, or were they to your left?—A. Just in front of me.

Q. The white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With their backs to you?—A. I could not see the white people at that time, there were so many colored people between me and those white people, I could not see them at all.

Q. But the white people, so far as you could see, were on the same sidewalk with you?—A. I understood they were.

Q. Could you see how many there were?—A. I could not.

Q. Were there any colored people on the sidewalk between you and the whites?—A. There were.

Q. They were principally on the street and lapping over on the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you fired a part of your shots in the air?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. You were asked if you attended any secret political meetings. Were the club meetings there anyways secret further than that no one but Democrats were admitted?—A. That was all.

Q. The public at large were not invited?—A. No, sir; none except Democrats were expected to attend these club meetings.

Q. Is that common?—A. It is.

Q. Do you know that both parties in Congress do that here every day; hold meetings in which the other side is not invited?—A. That is my understanding.

Q. About this Charles Adams matter, I believe you have sufficiently explained that; you say you did not shoot at Charles?—A. I did not shoot at Charles Adams.

Q. On the contrary, when you found him holding up his hands and uttering the exclamation that you spoke of, you ordered him to go into the store to get out of danger?—A. And by that means, I think, I saved Charles Adams' life twice that day.

Q. You spoke once, when asked the reason why you bought that pistol, that you believed like many others did, that a collision between the races there was coming.—A. I thought it was inevitable.

Q. Since your residence in Danville, can you recall any other incident of a violent mob on the part of negroes; rescuing persons from jail, &c.?—A. I can.

Q. When was that?—A. It has been some years ago. There was a colored man arrested and put in jail for some purpose, I don't remember what now. The colored people surrounded the jail—

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you present?—A. I was. The colored people surrounded the jail and threatened to break it open and take the prisoner out, and the demonstrations were so very great the mayor came out—Mayor Coles at the time—read the riot act and ordered them to disperse; they failed to do so; he ordered up the military company that was in existence at that time; they charged bayonets upon them and dispersed them after bayoneting one man.

Q. How long ago has that been?—A. It has been several years.

Mr. LAPHAM. That is very indefinite.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Give as near the time as you can.—A. As well as I can remember it has been some six or eight years ago; it may have been a little longer or may not have been so long.

Q. Who was the mayor at the time?—A. Dr. Coles. If I am permitted to say so, I can name another case in which there was considerable excitement and violence threatened; there was no violence.

Q. Well, when was that?—A. It was some years ago. Our present mayor, Mr. Johnson, and Judge Latham, now of Lynchburg, had a difficulty, and Johnson, I think, endeavored to get up a sort of a row, and was threatening to mob Latham and his party.

Q. Was there any actual assemblage of violent people?—A. Something of that sort, sir; and I think it was prevented by the Democrats taking the part of Latham and Mr. Lewis, who was there at the time.

Q. What were the politics of the parties then—Latham and Johnson?—A. Johnson was a Democrat and Latham a Republican.

Q. And the Democrats took the side of Latham and prevented a row?—A. I can remember that Dr. Mead, a very staunch Democrat, Judge Eakin, and, I think, Captain Mead, and myself espoused the cause of Latham and Lewis, and that put a stop to it.

Q. You were asked if it was not understood that this spoken-of torch-light procession was to be broken up. You say you don't remember that there was any such understanding.—A. There was no such understanding.

Q. But, in the inflamed state of the public mind, you think it probably would have been broken up?—A. I have little doubt but that it would have brought on a collision.

Q. You say it was understood that they were to have that before daylight and take possession of the polls?—A. Take possession of the polls.

Q. Was it also understood around there that no colored man was to be allowed to vote the Democratic ticket?

The CHAIRMAN. That is too vague.

Mr. VANCE. That is about the same line as the understanding that the procession was to be broken up.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think the whole of it is too vague; however, I will not object.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. I will ask you whether it was not a generally understood and accepted fact in the community that the colored people had combined, by various contrivances, social and political, to prevent any colored man from voting the Democratic ticket?—A. It was.

Q. That is an understood fact, then?—A. It is an understood fact, and has been for several years.

Q. Have you any knowledge, or had you any information whatsoever, of any combination, or intent, or purpose, or design on the part of the Democrats or white people of the city of Danville to bring about this riot in order to intimidate the negroes to prevent their voting?—A. Please repeat the question.

Q. I say, have you any knowledge or information that there was a combination among the Democrats or white people to bring about this riot; to get up a riot in order to shoot the negroes, to intimidate them from voting?—A. There was nothing of the sort; upon the contrary, the leading Democrats all the time were advising them not to have any difficulty at all, and they were doing their utmost to endeavor to prevent the young men from getting into any difficulty, and they were counseling and advising peace, and advising them by all means not to get into any difficulty until after election.

Q. I will ask you if it was not the opinion of your party leaders, and the design of the party leaders there, that it was your true policy to avoid anything like a riot?—A. It was.

Q. For the sake of the party you dreaded the effects of a riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I will ask you further, notwithstanding the fact that the public mind was inflamed at this time, and everybody was apprehensive, yet if the occurrence of this riot at the time, and in the way in which it occurred, was not totally unexpected?—A. Totally unexpected.

Q. By these hot-blooded young men getting in a fist fight with a colored man on the street?—A. Totally unexpected, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody fire at the colored people after there was no longer any necessity for doing so?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you think there was any necessity for these white men on the street to fire in the first place, from what you could see of the crowd and the situation?—A. I think there was.

Q. Did you see any damage inflicted upon the colored people or attempt to be inflicted after that apparent necessity had passed away?—A. I did not.

Q. Was there any difficulty in controlling the crowd after the firing was over?—A. As soon as the firing was over I went as quick as I could to my warehouse, and I mounted a horse and went home as quick as I possibly could, from the fact that it was generally rumored, and we had received a letter, which had been intercepted, in which they stated that if a fight should occur at the lower part of the town that the women and children on the outskirts would be murdered, and as soon as the affair was over I went to my warehouse and mounted my horse—my residence is a mile from the warehouse, from the scene of this action—as quick as I could I mounted a horse and went home, and with a few other persons, friends, for the purpose of protecting the outskirts of the town.

Q. You were not present, then, at Colonel Cabell's speech?—A. I was not.

Q. And the proceedings taken there to preserve order?—A. I was not.

Q. Have you any reason or facts tending to show that the colored people had received orders from somewhere not to vote on Tuesday; if so, give those facts? If it is a mere suspicion, you need not state it.—A. It was generally understood. I cannot say that I could state any particular person who said it, but it was generally understood that such an order had been given.

Q. Did you learn that from any colored man?—A. I think I did; but I could not name the colored man at this time.

Q. Well, don't state it then if you cannot give any name. Do you think they could have voted with safety on Tuesday?—A. I am very certain of it; they could, I am sure of it.

Q. There was rather an anxiety that they should vote, was there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They didn't vote in Danville?—A. Very few of them.

Q. Do you know any other precinct in the county at which they did not vote?—A. They didn't vote at New Design; I was there during the election.

Q. You were there during the election?—A. Yes; I rode out to New Design myself, and they did not vote.

Q. Did you see any there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. Well, there were quite a number of persons. Well, the voting precinct was some several hundred yards, in a school house. At New Design there are two or three stores, and the voting place is several hundred yards or a quarter of a mile or half a mile, perhaps, from these stores. I don't think there were a great many colored persons there, but there were a good many at the stores.

Q. A good many at the place, but not at the place of voting?—A. Not at the place of voting. I saw as I went on several crowds of colored people in the road just this side of New Design. I was also at Wimbeshers.

Q. Did they vote there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far is that from town?—A. It is hardly a mile; not more than a mile.

Q. How far is it from town to New Design?—A. I think it is about 4 miles, as well as I remember.

Q. Wimbeshers is on the same side of the river with Danville, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And New Design is on the north side?—A. And New Design is on the north side.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Where did you vote?—A. I voted at the Third ward precinct; very near my house.

Q. In Danville?—A. In Danville.

Q. How many precincts are there in Danville?—A. Three.

Q. What time in the day did you vote?—A. Near the middle of the day, I think.

Q. Had you been to either of the other polling places before you voted?—A. I don't remember now whether I had voted when I had gone to New Design or not; I voted either just before I went there or just as I returned.

Q. Just think a moment which it was.—A. I could not say positively which; I voted before I went to Wimbeshers.

Q. What is your best impression?—A. My impression is now that I voted before I went to New Design; I would not say positively.

Q. What time did you go to the polls where you voted?—A. I went to the polls; the polls are very close to my house—

Q. Well, that don't tell what time you went there.—A. I was going to remark, I went soon after breakfast, I think; I walked from my house down street.

Q. What time is your breakfast?—A. About 8 o'clock.

Q. Then you think you stayed there from 8 to 12 without voting?—A. No, I don't think I remained there as long as that.

Q. Why you think you voted just before you started for New Design?—A. I think I went back home. I first walked down to the precinct and stayed a short time, and I think I went back home and got my buggy and horse and passed by again, and I either voted then and went on to New Design. I don't remember whether I voted just before I went to New Design or whether I voted as I returned from New Design and came back.

Q. I thought you just stated you thought you voted before you went?—A. I say I don't remember which. That is what I stated.

Q. I understood you to say you thought you voted before you went?—A. Well, I don't remember which it was. It was either just before I went or after.

Q. What is your best recollection as to which it was?—A. I didn't think it was important and didn't charge my memory with it.

Q. I might think different; I want your best recollection which you say it was?—A. I really can't say.

Q. Who went with you to New Design?—A. Dr. Temple.

Q. Any one else?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any one else there from Danville?—A. There was.

Q. How many?—A. I remember one other man—well, he is frequently in Danville, but I don't know as he is a resident of Danville. His name is Barksdale.

Q. How many were at the polls at New Design when you went there?—A. Very few immediately round the polls.

Q. Well, in the vicinity of the polls?—A. Some fifty or a hundred persons I suppose.

Q. How many around the polling place in your precinct before you went away?—A. Not a great many.

Q. About how many?—A. I suppose forty or fifty.

Q. Had they increased any before you returned?—A. No, sir.

Q. What time did you get to Wimbeshers precinct?—A. In the evening.

Q. Before the voting finished?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By evening, you mean afternoon?—A. It was 4 o'clock I suppose.

Q. Where were you from the time you voted until 4 o'clock?—A. From the time I voted until 4 o'clock? I just stated that I didn't remember exactly whether I voted before I went to New Design or when I returned.

Q. What time did you return from New Design?—A. We stayed at New Design I suppose half an hour, perhaps three-quarters, and we returned to Danville, and we stopped down street about the Arlington Hotel for a short time, and met some friends there, and then rode up to the other precinct.

Q. What precinct?—A. The one where I voted; stopped there a few minutes, and from there I drove out to Wimbeshers.

Q. Who went with you there?—A. I don't remember now. I can tell you some persons who were there, but I don't remember who went with me.

Q. How many white people were there?—A. I suppose there was perhaps a dozen.

Q. You don't remember who went with you?—A. No, sir; I don't now.

Q. Were you armed?—A. I think perhaps I was.

Q. Oh, now; you think perhaps you was. Let's have an answer.—A. I think perhaps I was.

Q. You know whether you were or not?—A. I had been armed.

Q. Were you armed that day?—A. I think I was.

Q. With what?—A. A pistol.

Q. The same one you had the night of this riot?—A. Yes; I think probably it was.

Q. You carried it with you all day, didn't you?—A. I had carried it with me sometime.

Q. Did you carry it in sight?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You concealed it. Wasn't it in sight?—A. I think not.

Q. Did you see any other white men armed?—A. It was not in sight; I remember now, I had on my overcoat, and that sort of concealed it.

Q. Very well, did you see any other white men armed?—A. I did not, and no one saw my arms there.

Q. Wasn't Dr. Temple armed?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Why did you go up to this precinct, 4 miles from town?—A. I went to see how the election was progressing, and see whether they were voting there or not.

Q. And you went to the other with the same purpose, I suppose?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you went to the opera-house meeting knowing it was to be a meeting exclusively of Democrats, on the afternoon of the 3d of November, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell the committee why you carried your revolver there?—
A. I had been carrying my revolver regularly for a month.

Q. Well, was not that the case with white men generally?—A. My impression is it was the case with white men; both white and colored.

Q. Now that don't answer my question.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, I think it does.

The WITNESS. It does. I insist upon it, it does.

Mr. LAPHAM. I say it isn't a fair answer, and I repudiate it. I ask you whether that was not the case with white men generally?—A. I don't know that such was the case, but my impression—it is but an impression—is that they both go armed.

Q. I didn't ask that. I didn't call for that answer at all. You were appointed a special policeman, were you not?—A. I was not—I was.

Q. Why, how many mistakes you are making.—A. I was, sir.

Q. When?—A. The night after the riot.

Q. [Handing a map of Danville to witness.] You came out from the opera house. Now, I want you to point out to me where you stood when you fired the first shot. Here's the opera house; this is North Market street; you went right up Main street to this corner?—A. Right here; up here; across here.

Q. No; there is where the white people were; you were below them. On which corner were you?—A. If I understand this map correctly, this is Nicholas & Hessberg's store here. I went across here.

Q. You crossed Market street?—A. I crossed Market street.

Q. That is, you went up Main past Market?—A. I came up here.

Q. And you were at the corner of Market and Main?—A. I got right there.

Q. You stood about at the corner of Market and Main?—A. I was right on the sidewalk here. There's Nicholas & Hessberg's front door; I was right close to that.

Q. Well, close to the corner?—A. Well, right there [indicating]. I was there when it commenced.

Q. Now, was not there firing behind you; that is, down Main street from you, there?—A. Will you permit me—

Q. Was not there firing from persons between you and the opera house?—A. Not at first.

Q. No; but at any time?—A. The firing as I stated; pointed out the position there where I was standing.

Q. At what time was the firing from persons between you and the opera house?—A. Between me and the opera house, it was about the close of the firing.

Q. Do you know whether a line of white people formed there?—A. I think not.

Q. Do you know?—A. I saw no line of white people there.

Q. Were you before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Empaneled to investigate this case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether your testimony was taken down there?—
A. I do not.

Q. Do you remember whether you testified there about what occurred when Mr. Sims addressed the meeting, or testified to what occurred during the riot?—A. I do not remember that they said anything to me before the grand jury about Sims at all.

Q. Why was it not just as pertinent to ask it there as it was before the committee of forty?—A. That is not for me to say.

Q. It never has struck you, then, that there was any occasion for a difference of examination upon the topics upon which you were to testify?—A. Certainly there is. I was not aware that there was anything occurred; there was no fight, and no difficulty of that sort occurred at the time of Sims's speech.

Q. Well, there was not when you were examined before the committee of forty that was to investigate this riot. Now, did not you mean to have it understood before this committee of forty that the speech Mr. Sims made was the cause of this riot?—A. That was one cause of it, I think.

Q. The principal cause?—A. I think that had as much to do with it as anything else; but that was not the only cause.

Q. No; but didn't you talk about that all day Saturday among the white people—among the Democrats?—A. Well, it was generally spoken of.

Q. Was it not discussed in this meeting in the opera house?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing said about it there?—A. I think not.

Q. But you had been talking about it during the day?—A. Yes, sir; it was spoken of during the day.

Q. Was there any expectation that Mr. Sims would be there Saturday?—A. It was generally known that Sims was there.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. The day you went out to New Design, did you see any colored people with guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. There were one or two colored men on the road just this side with guns.

A. Which way were they going?—A. They were standing still.

Q. Standing still on the side of the road?—A. Yes, sir; there were some eight or ten colored persons, and one or two of them had guns.

Q. Were you along that night when one of the patrol was fired upon and wounded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Hubbard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did it take place?—A. It was just outside of the corporation line, some hundred yards.

Q. Was it near any houses?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who live in those houses?—A. Colored people.

Q. Anybody else?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which direction did the shot come from?—A. It came from the yard of these colored people.

Q. It came from the yard of a colored man's house.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The man was wounded and the horse also, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any word said at the time of the firing?—A. I did not.

Q. What was the patrol doing; just quietly passing by?—A. Quietly riding along the road not interfering with any one.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Were you with them?—A. I was close by.

Q. You spoke in answer to Mr. Vance of an occurrence when there was an attempt by colored people to rescue a prisoner; about how many years ago was that?—A. I think, I remarked, perhaps some six or seven. I don't remember; it may have been more than that or perhaps less.

Q. It was as early as 1871, wasn't it?—A. I don't remember the date. I am a poor hand to remember dates.

Q. Were you there?—A. I was.

Q. Was Judge Aiken there?—A. He was.

Q. How many colored people were killed?—A. None; there was one bayoneted, but he recovered.

Q. Was there a white man injured?—A. One shot.

Q. By whom?—A. By one of the military.

Q. Give the name?—A. I think it was reported that Judge Aiken—Aiken was then studying law and was a member of the military company.

Q. How many efforts since you have lived at Danville have you known to rescue persons from jail?—A. I don't remember any other except that.

Q. Was not there a mob to rescue Yates from jail?—A. What Yates? I ask for information; I don't remember.

Q. Do not you remember an effort to rescue in August last?—A. I don't remember anything, sir.

Q. Do you remember anything about the man who it was charged had murdered a man by the name of Shepperd?—A. Yes, I remember that.

Q. When was that?—A. It was last July, I think.

Q. I thought it was August.—A. I think; I am not positive, but my impression now is that it was about July.

Q. Did you have anything to do with it?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you know anything of it personally?—A. No, sir; I was in town, but not present.

Q. You don't know personally what took place there?—A. No, sir, except this; I know that the military was ordered out to protect these men.

GEORGE ADAMS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live in the country about 2 miles from Danville.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November last?—A. When that row was?

Q. Yes.—A. I was in Danville and came to town that day. I go there every Saturday.

Q. What are you at work at there?—A. My chaps work in a factory. I run a little saw-mill at home myself.

Q. Your boys work at the factory and you live out about 2 miles?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present at the time Lea assaulted Lawson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, tell what you saw and what occurred at that time.—A. When I was in Mr. Graves' store, I owed him about $4, and I was thinking to pay his clerk what I owed him and got out the money and I heard a pistol go off. The man that was about to receive the money; I had thrown the money out and he was about to take it, and I heard the pistol go off and a man cried murder, and he run, did not even pick up the money, and I took it and put it back in my pocket and run toward the door there.

Q. You were on the opposite side of the street?—A. It was on one side and I was on the other and there was a crowd made up mighty quick. When I got over there there were five men had pistols cocked.

Q. Name the five men?—A. Lawyer Barksdale was one, Lawyer Oliver was another, John Lea was one, and George Lea, and a man by the name of Bob Miller who is dead, he died since Christmas. These five had their pistols cocked, and Mr. Hatcher, he was the man that was holding the man, and a man named Taylor, and a Mr. Noel, I cannot remember what he had, was beating Hense over the head with a slat or stick, and had a bowie-knife in his hand, and was beating him over the head with something, and I went up and said, "Are you all going to stand and let that man kill that man," and Mr. Freeman came up. I did not want to go up; I didn't have anything.

Q. Is Mr. Freeman a policeman?—A. Yes, sir; and ne says, "Come up men, and let us part these men," and pointed towards me and I started around there. When I started around Mr. Lea cocked his pistol in my face and I grabbed it and he tried to snatch it out of my hand; when he tried to snatch it I fell across him, and when I fell Taylor hit me three licks over the head.

Q. With what?—A. With a stick, or whip-staff, or something of that sort. I don't know what it was, but it didn't hurt much, and when I fell I turned a somersault, and Lea shot at me twice.

Q. Shot at you?—A. Yes; and I run about a hundred yards and they shot at me again, and another fellow was running right at my side.

Q. Who shot?—A. Mr. Lea. There was another fellow running right alongside of me, named Jerry Smith, and when he had run with me about a hundred rods and they missed me and hit Jerry, and Jerry fell right against the wall of a hardware store, and I turned right across and went across to an alley to White's livery stable, and Mr. Peter Booth shot at me, and Mr. Hatcher says, "There's that damned George Adams. I tried my best to kill him." That time I went across the street and the firing sort of stopped for a minute or two, and I saw a man lying there and I came across the street. My mules were standing at the door. I came to move them and my boy sitting in the wagon. I saw a great crowd of men coming down the street with pistols and guns and I just made my escape right through the mob, and that time when I was going the mob was just the same as war.

Q. You heard firing like war?—A. Yes, sir. I went out a piece and waited till it was over, and a couple of men came and told me there were three men lying dead on the street.

Q. And you went away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go back?—A. No, sir; I didn't go back, but I know the man that went and fetched my wagon out for me.

Q. Did you know or anticipate any controversy, or did you expect any fight that day?—A. No, sir; I just thought it was a little row happened in the town. You know in Virginia if anything happens, everybody runs up to see what it is. That is the way all the colored folks run up.

Q. Were you armed?—A. No, sir; I didn't have a thing, was not expecting anything.

Q. You were in a store paying some money when you heard the riot outside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went out there; you say that Freeman called on you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he call on you personally?—A. Yes, sir; he says, "Adams come up here, let us part these men;" had his billy stick in his hand.

Q. Was Freeman armed with a stick or a pistol?—A. He might have a pistol. All the police carry pistols, but he had his billy just so. [Indicating.]

Q. His constable-stick?—A. Yes, sir. When he said "Come up here men, let us take this man off this man," I went around and Mr. Lea watched me and cocked his pistol right on me, and I grabbed it and he tried to snatch it out of my hand, and I snatched it, and when I snatched it again he fell and I fell across him, and Mr. Taylor fetched me three licks over the head and he shot right at me twice.

Q. Then you went away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you were fired at by Mr. Booth; what is his first name?—A. Peter Booth; and Hatcher said, "There is that damned George Adams, I tried my best to shoot him."

Q. Did you see Mr. Graves?—A. No, sir. They made two rounds of shooting. The first round they didn't kill but one man, that was Jerry Smith, and I run out to Mr. White's stables and then I came up, and old man Potter said, "Don't you tarry on the street here." I went up, and by the time I got back they were going on the same as war, and I got a man to bring my mules out from there.

Q. Was there any bad blood, or feeling among the colored people that there was to be a fight that day; did you hear anything of that kind?—A. No, sir; I did not hear any such thing.

Q. You came in just on your own business and were drawn into it, as you say you had nothing further to do with it?—A. No; I thought it was just a row got up, such as I generally saw.

Q. Did you do anything more than what you said to try and get the pistol?—A. No, sir; I didn't do anything more at all.

Q. Did you strike Lea?—A. No, sir; I did not strike him.

Q. Did you vote on the following election day?—A. No, sir; I didn't vote. Oh, yes, I voted. I live in the country; all we men that live around Wimbeshers' precinct, but the men in Danville didn't; I did not live in town.

Q. You voted in the country, at Wimbeshers' precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. I want to ask you a few questions. You talk so fast I can hardly keep up with you. Whose store were you in changing money when this row began?—A. Mr. Basil Graves' store.

Q. Is that on the same side of the street as Mr. Blair's office, or on the opposite side?—A. Here is the left side right here. [Indicating.] I was paying this money right there, and the firing commenced like over that side, on the right hand side going up.

Q. You are intelligent enough to understand what I mean when I ask you if Mr. Blair's office was on the same side this store was on or on the other side of the street.—A. I don't know where Mr. Blair's office is.

Q. Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair's. You know where Nicholas Hesserberg's bar is, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it on that side or on the other side from that?—A. On the other side from that.

Q. Then the white people who were on the sidewalk were on the side of the street farthest from you when you came to the door of the store and the colored people were between you and the white people?—A. The colored people were all in the street; they all just gathered around.

Q. There were some on the sidewalk, were there not?—A. I don't remember about that.

Q. Well, you heard the pistol fire while you were changing money.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. More than once?—A. No more than one time.

Q. And then you ran right out without finishing the trade.—A. Yes, sir; he ran out first.

Q. Who?—A. Mr. Sheppard.

Q. He went first?—A. And I just put my money right back in my pocket and went out with him.

Q. Did you go right across to where they were when you came out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the first thing you saw when you got out?—A. I saw Mr. Noel beating him over the head with something; I don't know what.

Q. Who?—A. Hense Lawson. He had a bowie-knife in his hand just so. [Indicating.]

Q. He had a bowie-knife in one hand and a piece of iron in the other, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was beating Hense?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Hense was hallooing murder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you say to the crowd or to the policeman?—A. I said, "Gentlemen, you all going to stand and let that man kill that man?" I said, "That looks mighty hard." They said, "We can't do anything at all; you see all them white men standing around with pistols." But Mr. Freeman commenced flinging up his stick to keep them back, and I said, "Come up here men and take this man off this man."

Q. Did anybody then take hold of the men to part them?—A. Yes, sir; two colored policemen went up, and I don't know but Mr. Freeman did. Two colored policemen took hold of them.

Q. Who took hold of Noel?—A. I do not know who took hold of him.

Q. Somebody took hold of him, did they not?—A. I don't know.

Q. Who took hold of Hense?—A. I don't know. I know one took Mr. Hatcher and one took Mr. Taylor.

Q. The police took them?—A. Yes, sir; sort of got them away from Hense.

Q. Got them back. Was anybody else striking Hense except Noel?—A. I did not see anybody else strike him at that time.

Q. Where was Lea standing with the pistol in his hand?—A. Right around there.

Q. When did you first get hold of the pistol? Was it after Noel and Hense were separated?—A. It was before they released him, and as I came around he cocked the pistol right in my face, and I grabbed it and tried to get it away from him, and I snatched it, and when I snatched it we fell and I fell right across him.

Q. Fell on the ground?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you fell on the ground it was fired?—A. No, sir; it did not; he fired it himself.

Q. Well, it was fired when you were on the ground?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Taylor took hold of my leg and flung me over Mr. Lea; fired right at me.

Q. Could you see him handle the pistol the way you were when you turned that somersault?—A. He was the man that fired at me and then I run.

Q. Well, did you see him or did you just judge that he fired?—A. It was him, I know.

Q. But you were on the ground when the pistol fired first?—A. I was watching him all the time, because he had the thing in his hand, and I was watching him all the time.

Q. He did not hit you at all?—A. No, sir, he did not hit me.

Q. Then did you get up?—A. Yes, sir; I jumped and run.

Q. When you got up you broke and ran?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who started to run with you, Jerry Smith?—A. Yes, sir; there was a gang of us came down——

Q. Well, you did not look back to see who commenced firing, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say, as soon as you got up you started to run, but did you look back to see what they were doing?—A. I run, and I heard what they said, and I know his voice.

Q. What did you hear?—A. He said, "Damn you, I will kill you," and I run right across the street after Jerry Smith fell.

Q. You did not go down street after that any more?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you go on to the sidewalk?—A. I run right through an alley.

Q. Where is that alley?—A. I can tell you the place where it is. It is right by Jerry Nichols' bar-room and Mr. White's livery stable. A woman fell, and I fell right over her and hurt my nose.

Q. You ran down that alley that leads out of the Market street?—A. No, sir; it leads right through Mr. White's stable.

Q. Did you go down Main street to the corner before you turned to the alley?—A. I ran down Main till I struck the corner of Market. There is where I saw Jerry fall, and then I went across and saw another alley. Both alleys came right in like this. [Indicating.]

Q. It was at that corner where Jerry fell?—A. Yes, sir; and his head fell right against the wall.

Q. How far from where you and Lea had the scuffle?—A. About 50 yards, if not more.

Q. How many shots were fired at you as you ran?—A. He fired at me twice more when Jerry fell, and said, "That is the son of a bitch I aimed to get."

Q. Could you hear him 50 yards?—A. He was right at me.

Q. Was he following you?—A. He followed me.

Q. He followed you up, and he said you are the man I aimed to get instead of Jerry?—A. Yes.

Q. How close was Jerry to you when he fell?—A. He may be was as close as that man.

Q. About 3 or 4 feet?—A. Yes, sir; and when I saw him fall I was scared, I turned and went right across the street.

Q. Now, you told us awhile ago that then there was a sort of pause. When was it that you heard the pistols pause awhile before they began again?—A. When I went across the street in that alley by Mr. White's stable, I came across the street to see about my mule, and everybody had pistols, and told me the order was to get away from there, and old man Potter said you get away from here.

Q. Never mind about that. When did you hear the next firing?—A. As I came across the street.

Q. After you had been down to the stable?—A. Yes; I did not go to the stable, I went across to see about my mules, if any of them had got shot. I got across and never did go back to see about the mules.

Q. How long was the pause after the firing?—A. I do not reckon more than three seconds.

Q. Oh, yes; you went from the stable back to the market.—A. Well, it was not a quarter of an hour. I just did make my escape. By the time I got from the market it looked like a war had started.

Q. As well as you could judge in your excited condition, how many white people do you think were there and how many colored people?—

A. It looked like to me as many colored folks as there were whites.

Q. Were there not some more?—A. I do not know about that; there were women.

Q. Well, you can judge.—A. Colored women were all mixed in; I know one thing, there was not a white lady on the street.

Q. What were the colored women doing?—A. They were trading; it was Saturday.

Q. In the stores trading?—A. Yes, sir; and looking on at what they saw.

Q. You saw Mr. Peter Booth shoot; who did he shoot at?—A. He shot down the street as I ran across.

Q. That was when you came back from the stable?—A. No, sir; when I went across towards White's stables he was coming across the street; he hallooed "George Adams, I will shoot you," and I run and he missed me.

Q. When did Mr. Peter Booth shoot at you?—A. Directly after Mr. Lea shot at me the two last times.

Q. Both of them took a crack at you?—A. Lea thought I was there to fight and was dead after me.

Q. But you had talked pretty rough, had you not? You did not tell them that you wanted to part them: you wanted a hand in it, did you not?—A. No, sir; I said, "You are all going to stand, gentlemen, and see them kill that man," just that way; I spoke as calm as I could and that time Mr. Freeman came up; he went into the crowd; had his stick and told the men to stand back; told me to come up and part these men.

Q. You jumped on Lea to take his pistol away from him; that was enough to make him think you took part in the fight.—A. I thought it was time; he was pointing right in my face and I grabbed it.

Q. What was he pointing it in your face for?—A. Going to shoot me.

Q. What for?—A. Because he thought I was coming up to take hold of him.

Q. Exactly; did Mr. Freeman ask you to help part them?—A. He pointed his stick; he says "Adams, take hold here; let us part these men."

Q. Were you in front of the store then or had you got out?—A. I had just got up to them.

Q. Didn't you hear any men trying to keep the peace? Did you hear Captain Olliver say "If they would disperse the whites would?"—A. No, sir; I never heard him say a word.

Q. Did you see Mr. Peter Booth trying to stop anybody from committing a breach of the peace?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see the colored policeman, Withers, try to stop that row?—A. Yes, sir; he tried to stop it, and Bob. Adams too.

Q. What did he say?—A. He told them to hold up; he had hold of these men; was holding them.

Q. After that, after these men were separated, did you see anybody trying to keep the peace?—A. I run; I didn't have a chance to listen at nothing.

Q. You did not have a chance to listen?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, are you right sure that Noel had a bowie-knife in his hand?—A. He certainly had a knife in his hand, but whether he hit Hense over the head with it or not, I cannot tell. He held it up just so. [Indicating.]

Q. Did you see anything in the other hand?—A. I didn't, but I saw blood.

Q. Well, a man could bring blood with his fist, couldn't he?—A. No, sir; I could not see his eyes and face for the blood.

Q. Cannot a man draw blood with his fist?—A. Cannot, unless you put knuckles on.

Q. How much do you weigh?—A. I weigh 160.

Q. More than that in the fall of the year, don't you, in hog-killing time. You are 6 feet high, are you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you weigh nearly 200?—A. No, sir, I don't; I weigh 165, I think.

Q. Well, you are as big a man as Lea, are you not?—A. I reckon I am.

Q. Are you not larger?—A. I don't know about that.

Q. You were strong enough at all events to jerk him down on the ground?—A. Well, he jerked and I jerked, too.

Q. If Mr. Taylor had not interfered to show fair play you could have whipped Lea, could you not?—A. I did not try to whip him. I just tried to keep him from shooting me.

Q. Well, you could have taken the pistol and you could have overpowered him, could you not?—A. I don't know whether I could or not.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Were you examined before the committee of forty?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been at Danville ever since this affair?—A. Yes, sir; I come there every day or two; sometimes I go there two or three times a week. I have got a little farm of my own and a team.

Q. Were you ever called before the grand jury?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is this the first time you have testified?—A. Yes, sir; the first time.

Q. Your being there was well known to everybody, was it not; that you were there and saw the riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you why you did not obey the subpoena of this committee and come last week when you were summoned?—A. The reason is that I came to the depot about two hours before the train came and I was in the room and locked the door; there was an old man in there asleep and I waked him. I asked him if I could lock the door; he said he had no objection, the key was in the door, and in about half an hour before train time Freeman came down and shook the door quietly, but it was some time before I would let him in. I thought somebody was coming there. People told me that I had better look out; if I was going away somebody might hurt me, but he kept on till I opened the door. He said, "Which way are you going, George?" I said, "I am going to Washington; I was summoned there." He said, "Have you got any whisky?" I told him, "No, I didn't have any;" and he felt all around me, just so [indicating], and he found I didn't have any and he stepped back and touched Mr. Lea and Hatcher and Dr. Temple and pointed then to me. They all came in and they said, "What in hell do you know about that row?" I said, "Well, I saw it all, and I was summoned down there." They said, "Well, you better know but damn little when you get down there."

Q. Who told you that?—A. Mr. Freeman, and I was mighty scared. I came outside and they watched me and Mr. Lea—I would have come if he had not looked at me so vengeful. He come up and looked like he would jump right through me. I would not mind Freeman, I had known him fifteen years; but Mr. Lea looked like he would jump right through me. He didn't say anything to me. Mr. Barksdale come in, and I said I didn't believe I would go on that train, and he asked me why? and I told him about it and that they asked for whisky, and searched for a pistol or anything. He said, "Come on, they are not going to bother you." "Yes," I said, "I think they would bother me." He said, "Here are $7, and come on to-morrow; if you are not a mind to come on to-morrow, wait until I come again. I will be here again the last of the week, and you come on with me. I will have other colored men and then you can go with them, and do not be afraid."

Q. And you waited?—A. Yes, sir; and Saturday evening I told him I was ready to come Sunday, but said I did not have money advanced for me to come on, I would have to find the money myself, and so I made up money to come on myself.

Q. Why did you lock the door there? Was that in the morning or the evening?—A. It was just about two hours before the train come.

Q. What time did the train come—daylight or dark?—A. It goes at 12 o'clock from Greensborough.

Q. At night or noon?—A. At night; and then leaves there at 1.

Q. Then it was night when this occurred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you lock the door?—A. They said they were going to all smoke what come down here.

Q. I do not ask you what they said. Were you afraid?—A. Yes, sir; I was afeard. That is the reason I did not come.

Q. If any of these men said anything to you—that is what I asked.—A. No, sir; did not say anything to me before.

Q. When you came out of that store you saw the colored people there, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Gathering?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they armed?—A. No, sir; did not see them have any.

Q. Are you sure about that?—A. I am sure they was all trading; nobody expecting anything; there was two or three factories all at work; were not expecting a thing.

Q. State whether you saw any weapons in the hands of any of them.—A. Never saw any.

Q. No clubs, or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir; never saw a pistol or gun, or anything.

Q. You are sure of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many women were there in this crowd of colored people?—A. Women and children? A good many children was there. I had three chaps there myself.

Q. Three boys?—A. Yes, sir; and women. A woman got shot.

Q. How many were there altogether; can you tell?—A. That got shot?

Q. No; how many were there altogether in that crowd?—A. There was, it looked like to me, about one hundred, but the height of them was women and children.

Q. Give us the name of the woman that was shot.—A. I do not know her name. She got shot, and I saw a gentleman take her off some where. They took her off and gave her $30. I could not state what her name was, but there was a woman there got shot.

Q. Who were the people that gathered around there? Did they look ferocious as if they were going to attack the whites?—A. No, sir; they looked mighty sorry and excited.

Q. Do you think they would have been dangerous to these white people with pistols in their hands, in front of them?—A. The colored?

Q. Was there any danger of the colored people attacking the whites?—A. No, sir; not a bit of it.

Q. Were there any signs or demonstrations?—A. No, sir; I didn't see no signs at all.

Q. Like a flock of partridges before a gunner?—A. Yes, sir; they looked mighty squeamy.

Q. Were there any indications in the crowd of a disposition to fight?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any of them that had any desire to fight.

Q. Were there any threats, or any blows struck?—A. No, sir.

Q. What you said is that it was mighty hard to see a man killed there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And wanted to know if they were not to prevent it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you stepped forward for that purpose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any colored man or woman striking a blow to any of these white people?—A. No, sir; I never saw nary one.

Q. Or uttering an insulting remark?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you try to hurt Lea? Did you strike him?—A. No, sir; I did not hurt him, and didn't try to hurt him.

Q. Where did you catch him, on the arm? He had his pistol this way, I suppose [indicating].—A. He had his pistol cocked so [indicating]. It was a mighty long one, and when he pointed round just so I grabbed him and said if I did not hold on this thing he will surely shoot me. He snatched me, and when I snatched him he fell and I fell across him.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What day was this scene that took place at the depot?—A. That was last Wednesday night.

Q. Who was the man who was asleep in the room there?—A. I do not know the old fellow; but the gentleman can tell. The old fellow has been there about five or six years.

Q. What room was it in the depot?—A. In the room where the passengers go and sit till the train comes. There are two rooms, one for the colored and one for the whites, and I went into the colored room.

Q. Well, Mr. Freeman came and shook the door and you let him in?—A. Yes, sir; it was away in the night and I thought I would see how it was; what it meant.

Q. It was a public room, was it not, a waiting room at the depot?—A. Well, there was nobody else there but me.

Q. But it was a room for the purpose of people waiting for the train?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you had no authority to lock the door to keep other people out?—A. No, sir; but I thought may be I would go to sleep, and supposing the door was unlocked somebody might come in and kill me.

Q. Kill you while you were asleep?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They kill people frequently there in their sleep in Danville, do they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is very common for policemen and others to go around and kill people asleep.—A. There has been a good many killed.

Q. While they were asleep?—A. Yes, sir; I could mention one. I do not know but what you saw it in the papers; I do not know, I forget the gentleman's name.

Q. He was asleep in the depot, was he?—A. No, sir; he was not asleep in the depot, but asleep in his room.

Q. What did Mr. Freeman say when he asked you where you were going, and what was your reply?—A. He said, "Well, George, which way are you going." I told him down the road. He says, "To Washington? I am going, too." Then he says, "Got any whisky?" and searched all around, and I says, "No, sir; I did not have any." I would not have thought anything, but he stepped out just to see and talk with Temple, Lea, and Hatcher and pointed to me, and Mr. Lea never did take his eye off me. I made sure he was going to hit me.

Q. What did Mr. Freeman say to you?—A. He asked me what I know about that row. I told him I saw it and was summoned down here. He said I had better know but damned little when I got here.

Q. He was coming to Washington at the same time on the same train, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And these other gentlemen were, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They all came to take the train and not to see you?—A. I do not know, but I was the only colored man.

Q. But you were the main man of the row and you thought they were going to kill you, did you not?—A. No, sir; but I thought I had better watch out.

Q. You say Lea did not say a word to you?—A. He did not say a word, but he looked at me mighty hard and rolled his eyes at me. I told Mr. Barksdale all about it; Mr. Barksdale can witness to it.

Q. But you did come?—A. I came last night with about 200. I saw there was a good chance to come, and I started last night and got here to-day.

Q. Did you bring two hundred escort on with you here?—A. They were going to a railroad, There was a white gentleman had them.

Q. What railroad?—A. I do not know.

Q. Where did they leave you?—A. They all got off the depot, down here, together.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Railroad hands?—A. Railroad hands; yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. They saw you all the way on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you not feel alarmed now?—A. I feel a heap better cheer than I did that night.

Q. What do you think about going back again? You have to go back home by yourself?—A. Yes; I suppose I will.

Q. Do you feel pretty uneasy?—A. Well, I have got the risk to run. May be I will go back with these men; I know pretty nigh all these colored.

Q. Well, some of these are women, and as you are not fighting folks, I am little uneasy about them getting back. Do you think you can get back in safety? Well, who heard the conversation between you and Freeman?—A. There did not nobody hear it. That old man didn't hear it; I know he was asleep, and the man that gives tickets out hadn't got there. Just as soon as he came and opened the ticket office they did not say any more to me, and Mr. Bardsdale come and they did not say a word to him.

Q. Do you not think you would have been safe in coming on with Mr. Barksdale?—A. I do not know. I said if he would let me stay in the coach with him I would come, and he said if you are uneasy I would not advise you to go.

Q. And you say you did not mind what Mr. Freeman said because you knew him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But that when Mr. Lea looked at you you gave up?—A. Yes, sir; I thought I was going to die certain.

Q. You thought that meant blood and destruction?

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You probably recalled what occurred on the 3d of November?—A. Yes; that is what I thought.

CHARLES ADAMS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live in Danville.

Q. What do you do?—A. Driver and teamster for Nicholas & Hessberg.

Q. Are they brewers?—A. They are agents for brewers.

Q. Do you distribute beer? Is that your business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you engaged that way on the 3d day of November last?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anything of the riot, as it is called sometimes, at Danville?—A. No, sir; I never saw any of it. I only saw one man with a pistol.

Q. Where was that, and who was it?—A. That was Captain Graves.

Q. Where was that?—A. It was on the corner of Main and Market streets.

Q. What time of day?—A. I really don't know; it was about 4 o'clock; somewhere along there.

Q. Who was the person you saw with a pistol?—A. Captain Graves.

Q. The gentleman who has testified this morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what occurred at that time.—A. I had just drove in with my wagon at the side door of the house and got out, and went in the house and went back in the rear part of the building.

Q. Whose building?—A. Nicholas & Hessberg's; and I heard some one hollering "murder," and I started towards the front door, and the man that I work for, Mr. Nicholas, was in the house, and told me not to go out the door. He says, "If you go out there there is going to be some trouble out there," and I went back in the house, and after that I heard the shooting commence very rapidly, and just about the time it was sort of ceasing Mr. Nicholas told me—he says, "Charles, you better go out there; your horses will go away." Just as I went out the horses were going a piece from the door very rapidly. I didn't catch them, but I heard somebody holler on the right side to me, and I turned to look, and Captain Graves was standing with his pistol in his hand at the corner, and I turned to him and says, "Captain, don't shoot me; I just run out to catch my horses." He says, "Well, get out of the way." I says, "I just run out to get my horses, captain." I thought he would understand me, and he says, "Well get in the house," and I started in the door backward, and before I could get in he shot me; just as I went in the door he shot a second time.

Q. Did he hit you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. He struck me, the ball went in there and came out here. [Indicating arm.]

Q. Just above your wrist?—A. Yes, sir; broke the small bone of the arm as it came out.

Q. You know Captain Graves well, do you?—A. I have known him ever since I was a little boy.

Q. You were raised in Danville?—A. I was principally raised in Danville.

Q. The Captain Graves you refer to is the gentleman sitting near you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is the witness who testified this morning?—A. W. P. Graves; yes, sir.

Q. What did you do; did you go back?—A. Yes, sir; I went back in the house.

Q. What did Mr. Nicholas say to you?—A. He asked me who shot me and sent after a doctor to have the wound dressed.

Q. What did you tell Mr. Nicholas at that time?—A. I told him that Captain Graves shot me.

Q. What did Nicholas say to that?—A. He says he was mighty sorry; he didn't see what Captain Graves wanted to shoot me for. I told him that I hollered at Captain Graves, too, before he shot me.

Q. You heard the general firing?—A. Yes, sir, I heard it, and started to the door, but Mr. Nicholas told me not to go out.

Q. Did you see anything more of the firing outside?—A. No, sir; it was over when I run out to catch my horses.

Q. Had you any arms; did you ever carry arms?—A. Never carried one in my life.

Q. I will ask you about the colored people generally; are they armed or not, so far as you know?—A. No, sir; not as I know of. I never saw any carry any arms with them.

Q. What are the politics of Captain Graves?—A. I have no doubt he has always been a very hot old Democrat.

Q. Did you hear Captain Graves's testimony?—A. This morning?

Q. Yes.—A. I heard a portion of it.

Q. Did you hear that portion in which he denied that he shot you?—A. I heard him speak to these gentlemen up here and say that he thought he was the occasion of saving my life twice; which he told me in town.

Q. Have you any doubt that he shot you, now, since his explanation?—

A. No, sir.

Q. Could you see him directly when he spoke to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could see the aim of his pistol?—A. Pointed right down direct towards me.

Q. There was no difficulty in hitting you if he fired towards you?—A. No, sir, not at all; there was nobody betwixt me and him.

Q. How far apart were you?—A. About 30 feet.

Q. How in proportion to this room; as far as from here to that door, [indicating] or farther?—A. About as far as the door.

Q. About 30 or 40 feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you throw up your arms?—A. I threw up my arms and says; "For God's sake, captain, don't shoot me."

Q. Both arms?—A. This arm. [Right.]

Q. Hold up your arm as you held it then, and please unbutton your shirt-sleeve and show us the wound, so that we can see the character if it.—A. [Exhibiting wound.] I had my arm in that position as I went in the door backward.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You were backing into the door?—A. Backing into the door; yes, sir. He was standing at the corner, and I was going in the door.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The ball struck near the elbow, ranged towards the wrist diagonally, and broke the smaller bone?—A. Broke the smaller bone.

Q. I will ask you whether you know that Captain Graves was acting as special constable to keep the peace?—A. I couldn't say myself, because I was at home.

Q. I don't ask you unless you saw him, because I don't want hearsay. Did Captain Graves say anything to you at the time he shot at you, except to tell you to get out of the way?—A. No, sir; I threw up my hands and says, "Captain, for God's sake don't shoot me," and I started in the house with my back to the door, looking right at him this way.

Q. Did you vote on the Tuesday following?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why didn't you vote?—A. One reason, I was at home wounded, and another reason, I was really afraid to vote. If I hadn't been wounded I wouldn't have voted.

Q. Why wouldn't you vote?—A. Because I was afeared.

Q. Had you registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you any instructions not to vote?—A. None in the world.

Q. Was it your intention to vote at the time you registered?—A. Yes, sir; it was.

Q. How old are you?—A. As near as I can guess, I am about thirty-four.

Q. You are a native of Virginia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a family?—A. Yes, sir; a wife and one child.

Q. Were you examined before the committee of forty?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you examined before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see enough of the crowd of people out there to tell whether the colored people were armed or not; could you see them from where you were?—A. No, sir.

Q. You could not see them?—A. After I say I heard some one call "murder," and Mr. Nicholas told me to go back and I went back in the rear part of the building again, and started to the door when the shooting commenced the last time and got near the door. Mr. Nicholas was standing in the door and came very near getting shot, and told me to go back and pull the doors together.

Q. When did your horses get away?—A. That was before I went out to catch the horses. He saw them start off and told me to go out and catch them.

Q. What started the horses; the general firing?—A. It was the general shooting; yes, sir.

Q. State whether there were marks of balls on the store.—A. I saw one or two, I believe.

Q. Where?—A. On the left hand side of the street where the firing first commenced.

Q. On the store of your employer, were there any marks of balls that you remember?—A. I don't think there are on his door, but there are on the door just above a barber-shop.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. You say Captain Graves called to you twice to go into the house before he shot?—A. He first hollered to me to get out of the way.

Q. You first hollered to him not to shoot, didn't you?—A. I says, "Captain, I just run out here to catch my horses." He says, "Get in the house." I was a piece from the door. I threw up my hand and says, "Captain, for God's sake don't shoot me," and before I could get in the house he shot me.

Q. Do you know any reason why he shot you when he told you to go into the house?—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Have you and he had any enmity or grudge?—A. None in the world. He may have had some against me unbeknowing to me.

Q. As far as you knew there was no enmity to you?—A. None at all.

Q. Who was with him at the time?—A. I saw somebody pass, but couldn't say now.

Q. You didn't see anybody by his side?—A. No, sir; I didn't. He came as I got out the door. I don't know whether he came up or down.

Q. You didn't know much about the position of these white people that were fighting up the street?—A. No, sir; I didn't see them. I can't tell whether they had got down to the corner or not.

Q. And after you got in the shop you didn't come out any more until it was all over?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who was in the house at Nicholas & Hessberg's when this took place?—A. There was three or four of we colored boys.

Q. Mr. Nicholas was there, was he?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Hessberg, too.

Q. Did they have a clerk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is his name?—A. His name is Mr. Carter.

Q. Do you recollect his given name?—A. His name is Dug Carter, I think.

Q. B. D., is it not?—A. It may be; I don't know; I never paid any direct attention to his name.

Q. Was Hessberg there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any other white men that you can remember?—A. I don't remember that there was.

Q. Are any of the colored people of Danville Democrats?—A. I don't know. I heard that one or two of them voted there on the day of election was Democrats. I don't know; I couldn't tell you.

Q. How do they treat the colored people who are Democrats there; you don't think much of them, do you?—A. You speak how I treat them?

Q. How do the colored people treat them?—A. They treat them the same as any one else, I suppose; that is the way I do.

Q. Are they received socially?—A. Well, I don't know any of them.

Q. You don't know any who are Democrats?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is this barber-shop where you saw bullet-marks?—A. It is the door above Nicholas & Hessberg's.

Q. On the same side of the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many balls?—A. I think there was one.

Q. You saw one?—A. Yes, sir; and one below.

Q. One below on what?—A. On Averett & White's shoe store. That is the next door below, on the corner of Market and Main.

Q. Across Market?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever look for any about Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never looked to see any there?—A. No, sir.

R. J. ADAMS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. Danville, Va.

Q. Are you a brother of the witness just sworn?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What has been your occupation in Danville?—A. I was a policeman for six months. Before being a policeman I was a tobacco roller.

Q. You were in the tobacco business and then you were a policeman for six months?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you cease to be a policeman?—A. First of January.

Q. Then you were a policeman during the time of what is called the Danville riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where you there present on that occasion?—A. Yes; I was there that day.

Q. Well, you may state when you first knew of the affray going on.—A. That day, I think it was about 3 o'clock, as near as I can recollect, I was at Mr. White & Everett's store, on the corner just below Market street.

Q. Corner of Market and Main?—A. Yes, sir; I stepped in and spoke to Mr. White; just as I stepped in and spoke to him I heard some one holler "murder." I thought at first it was fire, but I ran right up the street as hard as I could; by the time I got there I saw two pistols like this [indicating].

Q. Held up in the air?—A. Yes, sir; just so, and a double-barrel shot-gun, and just as I run up of course I started right on to separate the men that were fighting.

Q. Where did you see the double-barrel shot-gun?—A. Dance, I think his name is, standing in the door of the insurance office.

Q. Just opposite where this crowd was?—A. Right at the place, and the position he was standing was just beyond the two men who were fighting.

Q. Who held pistols?—A. Mr. Lea and Mr. Taylor, I think.

Q. Who were then engaged in a fight?—A. Noel and Lawson.

Q. Who was it cried out "murder"?—A. That was somebody outside; neither one of the men that was fighting; some of the boys outside hollered "murder," and of course I run on to part the men, and just as I run up Mr. Lea hollered out, "Damn it all, no man touch." I says, "Gentlemen, I am an officer of the peace and want to separate, the men." Then Mr. Corbin spoke and said, "That man is an officer; let's part 'em."

Q. Who is Mr. Corbin?—A. Jeff Corbin, who was here last night a week. He says: "He is an officer, let's part 'em." Lea says: "He can part them if he don't strike." I says, "Gentlemen, its not my business to strike, its my business to keep peace." Then I took hold of the two men and separated them, and got them loose, or was about to get them loose, and that time the scuffle occurred between Lea and George Adams. George Adams snatched Lea off the sidewalk down in the gutter; seemed to be trying to get his pistol out of his hand; I didn't see how it come, I was noticing the two men I had hold of, and as Lea raised out of the gutter he shot, and then the crowd scattered for a few minutes.

Q. Lea shot at who?—A. At George Adams. Then the crowd scattered for a few moments.

Q. Did Lea pursue Adams or did he stay there?—A. Not at that time. You see when he shot of course the crowd of colored people scattered. There was not more than two or three white people there then, the first time, and but six or seven colored people. It was about the time the factories was out in Danville, and Saturday evening there is always a crowd on the street.

Q. Two or three white people and half a dozen colored people?—A. At the first of it, yes; and the shooting of that one pistol caused people to come from each side of the street, both white and black, and I went up to the corner to blow my whistle, and send over to the chief, who was at the mayor's office; they were trying some cases over there and somebody told him, "Somebody come out and help;" if they didn't there would be a fuss out there.

Q. What kind of a call had you ; a telephone ?—A. No ; a whistle.

Q. You blew your whistle ?—A. Yes, sir ; by that time a crowd came from the court house and from the opera house. The whites came from the court house and the opera house, and of course the colored people were going on up, children and women and men.

Q. There were not any white women ?—A. I don't recollect seeing any white women on the street that Saturday ; don't know the reason of it, but there was no white women there at all.

Q. But the colored people gathered up, men, women, and children ?—A. Yes, sir, as they always do whenever they hear a policeman has a man. If a policeman has arrested a man you will find before they get to jail twenty-five women and children will follow on going to see what you are going to do with them. That's the way the crowd ran up that day.

Q. Were Mr. Hatcher, Oliver, and Motley there ?—A. Yes ; they came from the opera house.

Q. They were the person's who have been examined here ?—A. I don't know whether they have been here or not ; I think they have.

Q. Hatcher has.—A. He is the one, then. They were trying Mr. Oliver over before the court-house about having a concealed weapon on Friday night, and as he came down the street he walloed to me, "Damn it, get off the street."

Q. That is, Captain Oliver to you ?—A. Yes, sir ; he says, "Damn you all get off the street." Says I, "I am trying to keep the peace the best I can ;" he says, "We don't want none of your damn peace ; get out of the way." Then my younger brother, he steps up and says, "Bob, you get out of the crowd, because one of them men will kill you directly and you won't have any protection at all." That was before I got uneasy ; I was trying to keep the peace, and they all saw I was trying to keep the peace ; then I looked at it and thought over it, and sort of stepped back, and then I said to the colored people, "You had all better leave here. Of course you aint doing nothing to raise disturbance, but you better leave." Hatcher came up and says, "Damn it, make these niggers get off the street." Freeman says "The colored people aint doing nothing if you all don't bother them they won't bother you." Hatcher says, "Damn it, we are going to kill them and all their backers," just so.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. Who is that ?—A. Hatcher. Then Mr. Freeman, I reckon he must have got scared, left from where the white people was, stepped back of them, getting on the outside of the colored people, and of course all that was on the outside ; he did advise to leave ; I told them all to leave, and some got away. I saw from the spirit of the white people that they was going to attack them some way or other.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. At the time Mr. Hatcher made this remark, was he armed ?—A. Yes, sir ; he had his pistol.

Q. At the time how many white people were armed ?—A. Everybody up there had pistols.

Q. How many were there at that time ?—A. Fifteen or twenty.

Q. That was before the general firing ?—A. Yes, sir ; that was between the one shot and the general firing.

Q. No one had fired except Lea ?—A. Except Lea, up to that time.

Q. Now let me ask you if any of the colored people at that time had arms ?—A. I was the only man that had a pistol that I saw. We generally wear two kinds of uniform down there. I had a sack blue coat, and had my pistol in my breast-pocket, where it could be seen.

Q. Had you that exposed?—A. No; it was in my pocket. If I had pulled it out I would have been killed before I got it out; never thought of pulling it out; never put my hand on my pistol at all.

Q. What had you in your hand?—A. I had my billy. The pistol was in my pocket like this. [Indicating.] Mr. Motley says, "I see you have got your pistol; but, damn you, it will not do you any good in this crowd."

Q. How many, if any, of the colored people were armed?—A. I did see one armed; I did after the shooting; I saw one man run and fall, and as he fell he dropped his pistol somehow or another. That is the only pistol I saw amongst the colored people.

Q. Did you see any drawn, though?—A. No, sir; there was not one drawn.

Q. Had they any sticks or staves, or anything of that kind?—A. No; didn't have anything at all that I saw.

Q. You say they were all just out from the factory. Were they in their working clothes?—A. Working clothes; just coming from the factories.

Q. What threats were they making, if any?—A. Were not making any threats. This George Adams said more than anybody I heard, and all he said was, "It was a pity to let one man beat another dead," and he said to me, "I would like to show you the man that shot at me."

Q. Who said this?—A. George Adams.

Q. That was the one who testified first here. He said I would like you to see the man who shot?—A. I would like to show you the man who shot at me.

Q. Was that addressed to you?—A. I says, "George, you must go away from here." I says, "If you all keep on fooling round here you are going to get hurt." He says, "All I want to do is to show you the man," and then I heard Lea say, "Yes, damn you, I am the man."

Q. Did Lea step forward then to the curb?—A. I don't know whether he stepped forward or not. I heard him say, "Damn it, I'm the man," and the firing commenced. I don't know who was the first man who fired.

Q. Then Adams ran?—A. Everybody run.

Q. Did you see him run?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did the firing commence? Who fired the first shot?—A. I can't tell who fired first shot; they all came near about at once.

Q. Did you hear any cry to fire?—A. No, sir; all I heard I heard him say "Damn it, I'm the man," and the shooting commenced about that time.

Q. From whom did the shooting commence?—A. From the white people.

Q. By whom, so far as you observed?—A. I thought all that was there was firing from the way it was.

Q. What became of the colored people then?—A. They scattered each side of the street.

Q. How many shots were fired?—A. About one hundred and fifty or two hundred.

Q. Did you see any colored people fire then?—A. No, sir, they didn't have time to fire then; they run.

Q. Where did they go?—A. Some through the market, some up street, some down street.

Q. They dispersed.—A. Yes, sir; as quick as possible.

Q. How long did that firing continue?—A. Not more than two minutes, I don't think. It just continued about long enough for everybody to fire around what was in their pistols.

Q. Were these five-shooters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They all disappeared; where did you go then?—A. When the first shooting commenced I know I was standing sort of off the pavement. I runs down there and stopped at the corner, where I could see what they were doing. After the shooting was over I saw Captain Graves making way to where I was. I was the only colored man there just at that time. He made way to where I was, and I thought he was after me. Then I moved down street further. Just as I moved down street my brother Charles came out of the door——

Q. Out of the door of Nicholas & Hessberg's.—A. And I heard the captain holler, "Look out; I am going to shoot."

Q. Who?—A. Captain Graves.

Q. That is the gentleman who is sitting on your left now.—A. Yes, sir. Of course I knew there was no one down there but three men. That was another man that passed me and my brother. He was coming and of course I made way on down street and he fired, and when he fired the first time I kept going, and I thought I was shot, but wasn't; he fired again the second time; there were only two balls fired down Market street; two balls came down. Captain Graves shot down that street twice.

Q. You say one of these balls struck Charles Adams?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you ran on farther?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see where Captain Graves was pointing his pistol?—A. He was pointing it directly down that street.

Q. And you and your brother were the only persons there?—A. Me and my brother and another person that works for Captain Graves. I didn't hear any more firing and made right back to the street again. By the time I got back there of course all the men that had pistols had done shot them out, and had been and got double-barrel shot-guns.

Q. Did you hear your brother say anything?—A. No, sir; I couldn't understand what he said. I heard the captain say, "Look out," and I thought he was after me. I didn't know who he was after.

Q. Then the white men came back with double barrel shot-guns and the colored people all disappeared?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me ask you if the colored people showed any signs of resistance at the time they were first fired upon; when Lee first stepped out and made that remark.—A. No, sir; the first shot that he shot the colored people run; they left at the first shot.

Q. About how many pistols were fired in that first volley?—A. Only one, that Lea first fired.

Q. I mean when he came out on the pavement there and said, "I am the man."—A. That is about the time there was ten or fifteen.

Q. Was there any firing then from among the colored people?—A. No, sir; there was not.

Q. You say white people were coming out of the opera house, did they form a line over on the corner of Main and Market, across from the other firing?—A. Of course; they stood on the sidewalk on the north side of Main.

Q. Well, as I understand, the other firing was on the south side of Main.—A. No, sir; it was on the north side that the firing was.

Q. [Exhibiting map.] Here is the opera house, and here's where the firing first commenced.—A. No; you have got this a little wrong.

Q. Fix it, and satisfy yourself so that you will understand it. Here's where the firing first commenced, and here was the opera house?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, where was Captain Graves at the time you saw him.—A. When I first saw him he was right up in here, near where the people were firing.

Q. Where the next time? —A. The next time he run to this corner, to right here, where Charles stepped out of the door, and I was down right about there.

Q. Now, if Captain Graves was standing there chance shots from the white crowd would come right towards him, wouldn't they?—A. Yes; the white people were shooting right down this way, across this way, and up that way.

Q. Now these people that came out of the opera house, were they firing any?—A. I don't think they were all from this direction.

Q. Then the firing from that crowd would be about toward where Captain Graves was.—A. Yes, sir; the colored people were here; there was a ball right in this door here, coming from that way.

Q. Diagonally?—A. Yes, sir; it struck Nicholas's door and is there now.

Q. I will ask you if there was any expectation on the part of the colored people of any fight that day, so far as you know.—A. No, sir; the colored people—on Friday there was some threats made by the white people the time that Mr. Sims was speaking, and it was thought that the white people were going to tackle Mr. Sims, not the colored people, and in the morning of course everybody thought Mr. Sims was going to be tackled before he left town. Then of course after he left they was not thinking about any attack upon any one else.

Q. There was no expectation of this fight so far as you know?—A. No. The colored people knew they hadn't said nothing and it was because of what Mr. Sims said that the white people was mad.

Q. And no preparations were made?—A. No; the colored people didn't make any.

Q. You were engaged in performing your ordinary duty as a policeman at the time this occurred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you as a policeman whether the white people were in any danger from this crowd of colored people before they commenced firing.—A. No, sir; because the colored people would never have thought of attacking the white people.

Q. The white people were armed, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were not?—A. No, sir. About two months before the election they held court in Danville and the grand jury indicted the old police force and everybody they knew for carrying pistols, for carrying concealed weapons, and you know of course the colored people being poor they couldn't pay for carrying a pistol 15, 18, or 20 dollars when they didn't have the money, and of course that scared them, and those that had been carrying pistols stopped, and I don't believe there was five pistols in the whole crowd of colored people if they had been searched.

Q. About two months before this time the policemen were indicted for carrying concealed weapons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were other people indicted for carrying concealed weapons?—A. Some.

Q. And white people?—A. Yes, sir; some white people.

Q. And that prevented them from carrying concealed weapons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it prevent the white people?—A. Of course not; they were able to pay the fine. At the time I don't suppose there was a white man went on the streets without a pistol.

Q. Did you vote at the election?—A. I did.

Q. You voted at the election in Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the colored people generally vote?—A. No, sir. On Monday, the day before the election, the mayor issued a proclamation.

Q. I didn't know anything about that.—A. I was going to tell you what the colored people had said about voting.

Q. All right—A. The proclamation was issued, and I had them carrying round. I carried them to the people; some of them say, "Do you think we be safe on the day of election?" I say, "Probably you may." They say that that proclamation was only written up to get them to come out that day, and the most of them said they wouldn't vote; the most of the colored people round there thought it was a sham to get them killed. I felt of course myself that as I was on the street near the crowds through the whole riot probably I might stand it, and I went up and voted.

Q. What proportion of the colored people voted on that day, as near as you can tell?—A. I don't think there was more than half a dozen or a dozen.

Q. How many colored voters are there in Danville?—A. I think, if I am not mistaken—I have forgotten—but I think the Readjuster party at that time was 300 majority.

Q. How many votes altogether could they poll?—A. About 900, I think. About 300 majority.

Q. About 600 of the Democrats then?—A. Yes, sir. Of course I am not positive about how many votes there are.

Q. Did you see any persons armed on the day of election?—A. Yes, I saw white people were walking about, some of them with arms.

Q. With pistols or with muskets—guns?—A. Some of them pistols and some muskets.

Q. Were they at the polls, did you see?—A. No, sir; I didn't see them at the polls.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You say that the colored people ran at the first fire of Lea's pistol?—A. They did.

Q. Was there after that some considerable effort made by you all to get the black people to disperse?—A. There was.

Q. Why did you try to get people to disperse that had already run?—A. I told you the first fire the people scattered, but at the fire of the pistol other people come.

Q. I understood you to say to Mr. Sherman that the crowd dispersed and run on the first fire of Lea's pistol?—A. So it did.

Q. And then they came back?—A. They came back.

Q. When they came back was the time the efforts were made to keep the peace?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Freeman try and help you keep the peace that day?—A. Mr. Freeman stood by in the crowd and Mr. Hatcher spoke to him and told him to make them damn niggers get back. Mr. Freeman said they wasn't doing anything, and Mr. Hatcher said if you don't make them get back I will kill them and all their backers. Then Mr. Freeman moved on out of the crowd.

Q. Didn't Freeman try to get them to disperse?—A. He spoke to white and black people both.

Q. That is what I wanted you to say.—A. Yes, he did.

Q. And when he saw they wouldn't he got back?—A. He got back.

Q. Did Mr. Peter Booth try to get the people to disperse, too?—A. I don't recollect whether he did or not.

Q. Didn't you see him in the crowd of colored people talking to the crowd personally?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see Mr. Corbin?—A. Yes; he did all he could to try and keep the peace.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said tell the colored people to go away; if they didn't go away they would get hurt.

Q. What did the colored people say?—A. They said they wasn't doing anything, just standing about to see what was going to happen.

Q. Did you hear Captain Oliver make any remarks to the crowd and propose that the white folks would go away if the colored would?—A. I didn't hear that. He told me I must go away, but whether he said that or not I don't know, I didn't hear; I don't say he didn't say it.

Q. He came up from the opera house, didn't he?—A. No, sir; he came from the court-house.

Q. There had been a trial up there about carrying concealed weapons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he first came up was his talk and attitude hostile, or did he try and stop it?—A. He come mad, cursing, and saying get back.

Q. At that time I understood you to tell Mr. Sherman there was only two or three white men there?—A. Only two or three white men.

Q. And a large number of colored people?—A. Yes, sir; there were two or three white men and four or five colored men when Mr. Oliver got there.

Q. Well, before the firing became general, how many colored people, and how many whites, in your best judgment?—A. I thought there was about twenty-five white people and forty or fifty colored people; both women and children was in the crowd of colored people.

Q. They were in the rear of the crowd; they were not standing up next to where the quarrel was going on?—A. All right long there together; all mixed up.

Q. Were they in front taking part in the row, or standing back on the outskirts of the crowd?—A. Standing right there in the street, between one side of the street and the other. Of course they was not right jam up in the crowd.

Q. You don't understand my question. Was there anybody but men in the front part of the crowd that was talking to the white people?—A. There were boys all in the crowd.

Q. Were there any women?—A. The women were standing sort of on the outside. Of course they wasn't in front.

Q. That is the very question; that is the way they were standing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you think there was more than forty or fifty when the firing began?—A. I don't think so. My testimony before the grand jury was that I didn't think there was over forty or fifty.

Q. That is your best judgment?—A. That is my judgment, of course.

Q. Did you see the scuffle between Adams and Lea? I think you testified to that.—A. I saw Adams when he snatched Lea out in the gutter.

Q. They came down on the ground, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With Adams on top of Lea?—A. No, I think Lea was on top; neither one didn't fall.

Q. Did the pistol fire before Lea got up?—A. He fired the pistol as he was raising.

Q. Was Adams up then, or was he down on the ground?—A. Adams was up and going.

Q. Did Lea take after him and pursue him?—A. No; not at that time.

Q. Well, when did he?—A. I don't know, but if he run after him at all it was after the firing commenced. That was when Adams came up and said, "I want to show you the man that shot at me." If he run after him at all it was at that time.

Q. You didn't see that, though?—A. No, sir; I didn't see him run after him.

Q. When the general firing began Lea was present, wasn't he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And one of the chief men that did the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, where your brother was shot was down the street after the firing was over?—A. After the firing was over there might have been some stray shots after that, but after the volley was over then occurred that shot.

Q. Were you near your brother when he was shot?—A. I guess I was beyond him about as far as from here to the door.

Q. You say you thought he was shooting at you?—A. That is what I thought; yes, sir.

Q. And he called out "Look out; I am going to shoot?"—A. That's what he said.

Q. Well, why would a man warn a man that he was going to kill?—A. That's what I don't know.

Q. You didn't hear him call out for your brother to go into the house?—A. I heard him call out; I didn't hear him call out any names.

Q. You didn't hear anybody say, "Go in the house; go in the house" twice?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear that.

Q. Was there anybody near Captain Graves at that time?—A. I don't think there was; I didn't see any one else.

Q. Did you hear any other pistols but his at that time?—A. Two fires were made down there, and I thought both were his.

Q. Did you turn around to see who it was?—A. Of course I looked back to see what it was, but kept running; of course, I had to get out of the way.

Q. What I want to know is, did you look back to see if there was any one else but Captain Graves there?—A. I didn't see any one else.

Q. He was by himself?—A. Yes, sir; all the shooting was over, and I guess he had about a couple of balls in his pistol and wanted to get them out, too. I reckon I told some of the gentlemen there that I thought he shot at me, but he said he didn't; he said nobody pointed at me. I told him I didn't think they ought to shoot at me because I was trying to keep the peace as much as anybody that was there.

Q. What's the name of that other man that dropped his pistol?—A. His name was Howson Keene, I think.

Q. Where is he now?—A. In Danville.

Q. Has he been summoned here as you know?—A. I don't know.

Q. You saw no other man with a pistol?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see Davis Lewellyn have one?—A. I did not; I saw him, but didn't see him have a pistol.

Q. Did you see any marks of bullets on the houses after the fight was over?—A. I did.

Q. What houses?—A. There was some on Nicholas's and some on the opposite side of the street.

Q. What others on the same side of the street with Nicholas's?—A.

I don't think I saw any on that side except Nicholas's—yes; there was one there on the barber-shop.

Q. Is Nicholas's a wooden house?—A. Yes, sir; no, sir; a brick house, but a wooden frame, the front made of wood.

Q. Did you see any on Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. I don't recollect seeing any. I never noticed; I don't think any one was looking toward Woolfolk & Blair's, and I never noticed.

Q. Did you hear any of the colored people say when the crowd was first told to disperse, "We are going to have it out right here?"—A. No, sir; I didn't hear them.

Q. Why didn't they go away when so many were urging them and counseling them to go away, including yourself and Freeman, both officers of the law?—A. I don't know.

Q. About these indictments, you don't mean to say that only colored people were indicted for carrying weapons?—A. I didn't say that. The police force was not composed of colored people, you know.

Q. Well, the police force were not fined, were they, for having pistols?—A. No, sir; they wasn't fined; for you see we were indicted, and it went on for about a couple of months; but since then they got out of it somehow; I don't know.

Q. I will ask you if there wasn't a nol. pros. entered as to all the policemen?—A. Yes, sir; they wasn't fined.

Q. And numbers of the white people were indicted at the same time?—A. Yes, sir; and found for it, I think.

Q. As a general rule, didn't you find that the colored people had arms as well as the white people?—A. No, sir.

Q. In your dealings with them there didn't you find a great many of them with pistols?—A. No, sir; very seldom ever saw a colored man with a pistol about him.

Q. Didn't you know a great many of them had them, although they didn't show them?—A. I know some of the boys had pistols which they kept at home, sometimes in their breast-pockets.

Q. Didn't a great many of them have guns at home?—A. Yes; some had guns.

Q. In proportion to the numbers, didn't as many colored people have guns as white people?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't more of the colored people spend their time hunting than white people?—A. There may be more hunt than white people, but don't more of them have guns than white people.

Q. You mean that they didn't hunt with guns?—A. Oh, yes; when they hunt they hunt with guns; but you see all the white people had guns in town.

Q. I am talking now about the habit of buying guns; the hardware stores would sell them to colored people?—A. Of course; but that day they wouldn't let them have them. They can buy them now as quick as any other man.

Q. And could before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That day they shut down on them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't see any white men armed that day of the election at the polls?—A. No, sir; I was off duty that day, and went home and went to bed after I voted.

Q. You say when you carried around the mayor's proclamation, when the colored people asked you if you thought they would be safe, you thought they might be?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't assure them they would be?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, was not that calculated to scare them, although the mayor assured the people that they would be safe?—A. He didn't say so in his circular.

Q. Then he was in doubt himself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was very doubtful about it?—A. I don't know; I won't say as to that.

Q. You did say he was.—A. Well, I take that back; of course I can't know his thoughts; I only say what I know is true.

Q. Do you think any colored man would have been hindered if he had voted that day?—A. No, sir; the majority of colored people had left there; wasn't anybody left to vote.

Q. Where had they gone?—A. Oh, they commenced leaving Saturday night.

Q. Went away off in the country, had they?—A. Yes; left Danville.

Q. Couldn't they get back?—A. They couldn't get back at election.

Q. How far had they gone?—A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know how far any of them went, do you?—A. Yes, I know.

Q. Did you go with them?—A. Only as I heard from them.

Q. But that is hearsay; you don't know anything about it but what you heard of it?—A. That's all.

Q. Did you see that one woman that was shot?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you know of any woman that was shot?—A. I did not know of any woman that was shot. Of course there was some several wounded that I didn't find out; little flesh wounds; I saw one man that said he was shot in the pants, or something of that kind. There was only four men that died from their wounds that I know about; three killed on the ground, and one died afterwards.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Do you know who made the complaint against the policemen for bearing arms?—A. I think it was the magistrate was the first man. They taken him in there on his oath.

Q. You mean he was the first called before the grand jury?—A. Yes; he was called before the grand jury.

Q. Do you know who started it?—A. I don't.

Q. You say they were never prosecuted?—A. No, the policemen were not.

Q. When were they discontinued, before or after the election?—A. Since the election.

Q. Those indictments were kept over the police from the time they were found until the election?—A. Yes, sir.

R. E. BISHOP sworn and examined:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. A little north of North Danville; just out of the line of the corporation of North Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. At that place?

Q. Yes; or about there.—A. There and about there two years and a little upwards.

Q. What is your business?—A. Painter.

Q. House or portrait painter?—A. House and sign painter.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November last?—A. I was in Mr. William Grassfoot's shoe-making establishment, on the north side of Main street, above H. D. Garrant's grocery store.

Q. How far is that from the junction of Main and Market streets?—A. It is about—well, I cannot come at it exactly—possibly 150 feet may be.

Q. On which side of Main street?—A. The north side of Main street.

Q. Were you engaged at work there?—A. No, sir; I was there in conversation with a gentleman.

Q. At what time?—A. I cannot state exactly; it was possibly between 2 and 3.

Q. Well, you were there before the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All you observed was from a window of the room in which you were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any one there with you?—A. Mr. Grassfoot; no one except him and me.

Q. Did you have the window open?—A. The window was not open at the time; I don't think it was raised at the time.

Q. Were you where you could see the scene of this disturbance plainly?—A. We could not see all of it with the window down.

Q. State, if you please, to the committee, what you did see from the time your attention was first directed to it until its close.—A. We heard the cry of murder.

Q. That is what first attracted your attention?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Grassfoot thought it was fire, but it was murder. It continued I don't know how often, and we threw up the sash to see what was going on. He was beneath me. He was a shoemaker, and I got on his bench to look over. There was an awning that cut off part of the observation, a little of it coming this way, in this direction. [Illustrating.] I saw a white man—I knew none of the parties then, and, in fact, not now—who was beating a negro over the head, appeared to have him by the collar at least, and he appeared to be helpless. He was crying out murder. Another party standing with a pistol in his hand, I could see his shoulders down to about there—[indicating]—the awning cut off part of the observation in that direction, he had a pistol motioning in this way. There were not many whites, I cannot say how many, at that time, not more than three or four or five, possibly not that; some negroes in the street, maybe twice as many or three times as many. One of the colored policeman came up. Both of them are very dark; I don't know what their names were, and he gesticulated, raised his hands as if trying to stop the disturbance. I was too far to understand what he said, and just then, as near as I can come at it, another negro from the crowd or with the crowd came in. I could not hear what was said; I could not understand a word that was said. He came in and appeared to grab for the pistol, or with the man that had the pistol, and how that went on I cannot say, but the negro got loose and attempted to run, break off, and stooped at the time, and a hand was raised and fired without effect, I suppose; I could not see.

Q. Well, fired in the direction he was running?—A. Yes, sir. After the firing of the pistol the crowd appeared to close in a little; both were gaining accessions. The negroes came up from the market and the whites from a little below, down the street. I cannot say to what number; have no idea. I closed the sash down, and in a very short time, I cannot say how long, possibly not more than two minutes, or maybe not more than three—I have no idea of the time—we heard the volley. I then looked through the glass without raising the sash; stood somewhat in the middle of the room, and I raised and looked in the glass and saw them fleeing in all directions. The streets were cleared very soon.

Q. Who were fleeing?—A. The negroes. The crowd was then pretty well mixed up on the pavement. Some ran in the street and pointed their pistols. I do not recollect of seeing a shot fired after I raised. I noticed them pointed in different directions.

Q. Were there any colored people around at that time, after you raised the window the second time?—A. They were fleeing as I raised. Then we pushed the sash up. It was too much of a melée below us, and we were looking down on the tops of their heads, so that I couldn't tell; and parties went up the street with pistols in their hands, the whites.

Q. Did you hear anything said?—A. No, sir; that is, whatever was said I could not understand it.

Q. Now, from whom did these shots come; you said there was a volley fired?—A. Of course that would be very difficult for me to say. I did not see it. I was not looking down at them when they fired.

Q. You noticed that the colored people disbanded, dispersed immediately on the firing?—A. Immediately.

Q. Did they reappear at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. But the whites did remain there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see them with pistols after the colored people had fled?—A. Yes sir.

Q. Did you see any arms in the hands of the colored people?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the character of the gathering there of colored people; you said they seemed to gather in when this disturbance began?—

A. I suppose the cry of murder brought them to the scene.

Q. Yes, but what description of people gathered together there; were they of different ages and sexes?—A. I don't know as to the sexes; different ages, of course. In that part of the country an excitement of that kind, any kind of a fight—a dog fight, gathers them right off, each one looking over the others shoulders to see what was going on, I suppose.

Q. The question is whether there were men, women, and children there?—A. I didn't see any women there; they were out of my observation; they might have been in the crowd.

Q. You could not see over the outskirts of the crowd then?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see pistols in the hands of anybody except the white men?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know where the white men stood in line formed on the street?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Did you hear any threats on the part of the colored people towards the whites?—A. At the time?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You say you were at Garrant's, in the second story?—A. Yes, sir; in the second story above Garrant's.

Q. That is on the same side of the street as Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the awnings were, of course, over the sidewalk between you and Woolfolk & Blair's, were they not?—A. There was one awning that cut off a little of my observation.

Q. Was there only one awning up at that time?—A. I don't know, but I am speaking of the one that was nearest the action.

Q. Were there any other awnings between you?—A. Possibly there may have been, but I am not sure of it.

Q. Was there any awning right over Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. No, sir.

Q. In front of their store, where the crowd was?—A. No, sir.

Q. The colored people were then mostly between you and the white people, were they not?—A. No, sir; the colored people were in the street.

Q. Were not some of them on the sidewalk?—A. I cannot tell that. There was one awning that cut off part of that. I cannot tell.

Q. You say you knew none of the parties then?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say a colored man run up and got hold of a pistol in the hand of a white man?—A. I don't know that he took hold of the pistol; he came up and attempted it; there was a scuffle.

Q. Came up to him, and either took hold of him or a pistol; at any rate there was a scuffle?—A. There was a scuffle.

Q. Did they get down in the scuffle?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Do you know when the pistol fired whether the party that fired it was down or standing up?—A. Standing.

Q. Do you know whether he directed that pistol at anybody or whether it went off in the scuffle?—A. My impression was that this pistol was fired at this very party.

Q. At this man that tried to take it from the man?—A. Yes, sir; the pistol was almost on a line with my eye from the window.

Q. How far was the colored man from the white man when the pistol fired?—A. He had hardly moved three steps, in a stooping position; very much so [Indicating.]

Q. How long was it after that pistol fired until the general volley was fired?—A. It would be hard to say. It was possibly three minutes, may be more.

Q. During that interval the crowd closed up?—A. I noticed that the crowd was closing a little from both directions.

Q. Drawing together?—A. Coming on the scene, at least. I know nothing about the separation. They came up. I took my seat then beyond observation.

Q. You saw no women in the crowd at all?—A. No, sir; I am satisfied of that. Well, it would be hard to tell, but I saw none. That is, my observation extended mostly in the street.

Q. You say that you had retired from the window after the first row was apparently over, and then when the firing began again you hoisted the window again and looked out?—A. I raised and looked through the glass.

Q. Then the colored people were retreating?—A. They were retreating when I raised. The volleys followed in quick succession. I raised then and looked through the glass, and they were fleeing in every direction.

Q. Did you hear after the main bulk of the firing was over any single shots by themselves?—A. There were some scattering shots.

Q. Some scattering shots?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, excluding the first discharge of the single pistol, from the first of the general firing to the last shot, how long would you take it to be, to your best judgment?—A. To the last shot?

Q. Yes.—A. Altogether it would not have been more than five minutes, I suppose, as near as I can say.

Q. Was it so long as the pause between the first firing and the general firing?—A. The pause between the first firing and the general firing?

Q. Yes, between the single pistol shot and the general firing.—A. No, sir, it didn't last as long as that.

Q. Were you at the polls on election day to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any colored people there voting?—A. Not that I know of. I was at the polls only about two minutes, just time to cast my vote.

Q. You voted and immediately retired?—A. Yes, sir; I know nothing of what occurred there.

Q. Where did you vote?—A. New Design.

Q. I thought you lived in North Danville.—A. No, sir; a little outside.

Q. You were not at the polls in Danville then at all?—A. No, sir; I was not there that day.

Q. From what you saw at New Design, could the colored people have voted there without molestation if they wanted to?—A. I passed the polls early in the morning, and didn't go back until late in the evening, when I voted, and was there possibly only two minutes then; deposited my ballot, and everything appeared to be quiet, as far as I could see.

PETER SMITH sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Ten years.

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty-five.

Q. Are you a married or single man?—A. A single man.

Q. What is your business?—A. I work in the tobacco factory.

Q. In Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November last?—A. I was about ten steps of where the riot commenced.

Q. You were not at work that day then?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which side of the street were you on?—A. On the right-hand side.

Q. Is that the north or the south side?—A. The north.

Q. You saw this fight commence, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, go on and give your account of it just as you witnessed it.—
A. I came on down the street, and this fellow, Lawson, came right along behind me. Me and him had been talking up on the corner, and he came along down behind me, and I was walking, and I got about ten steps below Mr. Woolfolk and Blair's office, and I heard somebody holler murder, and I turned around to look and seed Mr. Noel whaling him; knocking him over the head with his hand; I think he was knocking him with his hand; there was two or three men between him and me, and after that the pistol fired, and then I turned my back and walked on down towards the corner; then, if I make no mistake, Mr. Hatcher says, "If you are not all cowards, you will come out."

Q. Who said that?—A. Mr. Hatcher says, "If you are not all cowards you will come out," and they got out and formed a little line, I reckon in the ranks of about twelve men, and he said, "Ready," and I saw the men, two of them, draw their pistols, and when they drawed their pistols out I turned my back to them and walked off down the street.

Q. Did he say anything else?—A. Then he gave the word "Fire;" and then I walked on down to the corner and staid there.

Q. At the first firing how many pistols fired?—A. About twenty-five or thirty.

Q. Were they fired into the crowd of colored people?—A. I had my back to them; I could not say.

Q. You could not tell which way they fired then?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any one attempt to separate Noel and Lawson?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. Do you know Charles Adams?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After this firing did you see Charles Adams there?—A. I saw Charles Adams when he came out of the door to catch his horses.

Q. When was that; was it after the firing?—A. It was directly after the general firing, and Mr. Graves was coming on down the street towards me. I was standing on the corner, and just before he got to the corner I moved off down a little further on the next corner, and when he got around the corner he says, "Look out, I am going to shoot" And Charles Adams says, "Don't shoot me; I just run out to catch my horses;" and he fired and shot Charles in the arm, and then I turned in and run up a pair of steps into a room.

Q. Who was it that fired at Charles Adams?—A. Mr. Graves.

Q. Colonel Graves, you mean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same gentleman who was a witness here this morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw him shoot at Adams, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him shoot towards Adams; don't know whether he was shooting at Adams or not; but he hit Adams.

Q. What do you say Adams said at the same time?—A. Adams said, "Mr. Graves, don't shoot me; I just came out to catch my horses."

Q. Where did Adams go?—A. He went back into the bar-room. He was going backwards when he got shot.

Q. Backing into the door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did Graves go?—A. Mr. Graves, after he shot the last time, turned and went back up on Main street, and when he turned and got two steps, I was up in my safety—I was in a window then.

Q. He didn't go to the assistance of Adams at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. He turned and went back up the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know Colonel Graves well before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you known him?—A. I have been knowing him ever since the first year after the surrender.

Q. Since 1865. This was in the day-time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew it was he, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear him say anything?—A. I only know that he shot the last time down that alley, and Mr. Adams was running—Charles's brother; he says, "Leave here," that is all he says.

Q. Is that the policeman?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard him say that to the policeman?—A. He said, "Leave here." Adams was running then, and then Jeff. Hubbard, who is here now, he was running down the street.

Q. When the order to "fire" was given what did the colored people do?—A. The colored people run.

Q. All in one direction or in different directions?—A. No, sir; in two directions; they could not run but in two directions.

Q. Which way did they run?—A. They run down Main street and through the market and up Main street.

Q. Well, they ran in all directions they could run?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They scattered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What description of crowd was there of colored people?—A. I reckon a hundred or more colored people in the street.

Q. Were they all men, or men, women, and children?—A. Men, women, and children, all mixed up together.

Q. Such as would naturally gather when there was a disturbance?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You happened to be there on the walk when this thing commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no expectation of any such thing, had you?—A. No, sir; was not thinking of such a thing.

Q. You didn't know that there was any such thing to take place?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had no arms?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any colored men with arms?—A. Not a one.

Q. Did you hear any shooting from the colored people?—A. Not a shot.

Q. As soon as the word "fire" was given and the volley was fired they scattered and fled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the white people continue firing at them as they ran away?—A. No, sir; they held up then for a few moments, and I was upstairs in a room. I heard some shots, but I don't know where they were at; they were out of my sight.

Q. Do you know whether Charles Adams had a pair of horses there?—A. Yes, sir; I knew he had a pair of horses, because I looked out of the window at them as they were going down the street.

Q. He was a beer peddler, wasn't he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had gone in there on that business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He took no part in this affray, did he?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. And was not present at it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't go out of the shop until after it was over, did he?—A. Didn't go out until, I think it was, Mr. Nicholas told him his horses had started.

Q. Well, not until after the colored people had fled?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anybody else there who could have shot Charles Adams except Colonel Graves?—A. No, sir. A man on the corner had a pistol, but had it in his bosom; didn't have his hand on it at all.

Q. But you saw Graves point his pistol in the direction of Adams and fire?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As he was backing in the door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear what Adams said as he was backing in the door?—A. He says, "Captain, don't shoot me, I just came out to catch my horses."

Q. Do you know whether he repeated that?—A. I never heard him repeat it at all.

Q. Did you vote?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. Where was your polling place?—A. At Mr. Graves' warehouse.

Q. At one of the precincts of the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You intended to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you vote?—A. I was afeared.

Q. Well, that was the case with the colored people generally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Very few voted, didn't they?—A. If any voted I didn't see them.

Q. You heard of or saw the mayor's proclamation, didn't you?—A. The which?

Q. The proclamation of the mayor. You heard of that didn't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any one direct or instruct you not to vote?—A. No, sir; no one at all.

Q. You refrained from going to the election because you were afraid to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for no other reason?—A. For no other reason at all.

Q. There was no understanding that the colored people should not vote that you knew of?—A. I didn't know what the understanding was; but this I knew, that after this shooting scrape I didn't know what would take place at the polls.

Q. Well, it was because of this riot on Saturday that you staid away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many years had you voted?—A. I have been voting ever since the surrender.

Q. Ever since you were twenty-one?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Where were you born and raised?—A. Up on Horse Pasture, in Virginia.

Q. What county?—A. Henry.

Q. When did you come to Danville to live?—A. I came to Danville to live about ten years ago; ten years ago this last gone August.

Q. How far is it from your home, where you were born and raised, to Danville?—A. Fifty-one miles.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Graves before you came to Danville to live?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabouts?—A. I seen him up to Mr. Wilson's plantation and up at Patrick.

Q. How often?—A. I seen him three or four times come up to hunt with Mr. Wilson.

Q. Is that since the war?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew him very well, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where had you been working in Danville at that time?—A. At Mr. Fuller's factory.

Q. Were you not at work that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why?—A. The factories had closed on that day.

Q. All of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They had all closed that day and there were none of them at work?—A. No, sir.

Q. How close were you to the parties when the fist fight began between Lawson and Noel?—A. About 10 yards.

Q. Ten yards away; how many white men were there then?—A. I don't know; I couldn't say.

Q. Well, give us an idea.—A. There was a hundred or more there.

Q. A hundred or more white men there then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the fist fight first began?—A. When the fist fight first began there was not more than fifty there.

Q. When did the other fifty come up?—A. They come up shortly after that, just before they fired.

Q. How many colored people were present when the fist fight began?—A. How many was present? There was not very many then; there was not very many colored people around at that first shot.

Q. Well, how many? You have told us there were fifty white people present, now you can give us an idea how many colored people.—A. About the same number of colored people.

Q. About the same?—A. Yes, sir; children and men.

Q. Any women?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the women were foremost in the fight, were they?—A. No, sir; they were not foremost; they were standing sort of back of the men.

Q. Well, what part in the fight did they take?—A. Not any at all.

Q. What part did the children take?—A. Not any at all.

Q. Were they in the front, too?—A. Yes, sir; they were all standing there looking.

Q. The children were in the front?—A. No, sir; they were not in the front; they were all mixed up together.

Q. Was there any rear to the crowd at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was in the rear, the men, the women, or the children?—A. The women, as I before stated it.

Q. The children were there, too, in the front?—A. The children all amongst the men, between the men and the women.

Q. The women brought up the rear, and then the children were mixed in with the men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there were not more than fifty?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, by the time the general firing began, how many colored people had come up?—A. Two hundred, I reckon, or one hundred and fifty.

Q. How many whites do you think were there?—A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. Well, a hundred?—A. Yes, sir; over a hundred.

Q. Over a hundred; where did they come from?—A. They come out of the opera house.

Q. They all came out of the opera house, and came up before any firing took place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they all have weapons?—A. I don't know whether they had or not. I didn't see them. When they passed by me, coming up the street, I didn't see them.

Q. Were you between the crowd and the opera house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you didn't see them when they passed by you, coming up the street?—A. I saw them when they passed by me, but I didn't see any arms till they got there. After they got there I saw them.

Q. How many of them displayed arms after they got up where the fuss was?—A. About twelve men. Them that was in that line was the only ones I saw with arms.

Q. What was it that Mr. Hatcher said?—A. He said, "If you all are not common cowards, you will come out."

Q. Who came out?—A. I don't know who they was.

Q. Was he talking to the white or black?—A. He was talking to the white people.

Q. To come out of where?—A. To come out of the office of Blair & Woolfolk's.

Q. And they did come out and form a little line?—A. Yes, sir; about twelve men.

Q. Was it up and down the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Facing the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They had their pistols out?—A. When he said "Ready" they drew their pistols out.

Q. Didn't they draw them before?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, before this, did you see anybody in there trying to make peace and get the crowd to disperse?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't see Mr. Freeman?—A. No, sir; didn't see Mr. Freeman. Couldn't see Mr. Freeman at all; too big a crowd.

Q. Did you see Robert Withers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Adams?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Peter Booth or Jeff. Corbin?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't see any of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you see any of them trying to make peace and get the crowd to disperse?—A. No, sir.

Q. You saw Mr. Hatcher and heard all he said?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far were you from him when he spoke?—A. About 10 yards.
Q. Were you in the crowd or on the sidewalk?—A. On the sidewalk.
Q. You were on the sidewalk among the white folks. You didn't feel in much danger, did you?—A. No, sir; I was not scared.

Q. Did you have any weapons?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any of the colored people have any weapons?—A. If they had I don't know anything about it.

Q. Well, you saw how Mr. Holland was shot, didn't you?—A. No, sir; I didn't see him shot at all.

Q. Didn't see that at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see that butcher, Mr. Seward, shot?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't see how he was shot?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long after the general firing took place over there before the colored people ran?—A. They ran right away when they drew their pistols out and the men was getting ready; they commenced running then.

Q. They didn't wait for the pistols to fire?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were they all gone by the time the pistols fired?—A. No, sir; they all could not get gone, there was too big a crowd.

Q. They all tried to go?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after that until you saw Mr. Graves run his muck down the street?—A. About three minutes.

Q. Where was he when the first firing took place?—A. He was between me and where the men was. He was about five steps between me and them.

Q. What store were you opposite?—A. Mr. Vass's hardware store.

Q. Is that nearer the corner than Mr. Hesseberg's store?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is it from Hesseberg's?—A. It is above.

Q. Two doors above, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next after Hesseberg's is who?—A. There is a door that goes upstairs.

Q. And barber-shop?—A. Yes, sir; then the barber-shop. First Hesseberg's and then the barber shop.

Q. And then Vass's, &c.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were standing at Vass's and he was standing about five steps from you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the first time you saw Captain Graves?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you see him do? Go over that again.—A. I never saw him do anything right then.

Q. Did he have pistols?—A. I never saw his pistol then.

Q. Did you see him shoot at anybody?—A. I didn't see him shoot until he shot at Charles Adams.

Q. Well, that is what I am after; which way did Charles Adams come from?—A. He came out of the side door of Mr. Nicholas's bar-room.

Q. And went out in the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Graves turned and called to him to look out, he was going to shoot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say to Captain Graves?—A. He says, "Captain, don't shoot me; I just came out to catch my horses." The captain says, "Get back in the house;" and he started to get back and held up his hand, and he fired on him.

Q. Fired on him when he was obeying his orders?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, in your first story you left that out; you did not tell that Captain Graves first told him to get back in the house.—A. If I am not mistaken I did.

Q. No, you did not. You say now, do you, that he did tell him to get back in the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That he first called to "Lookout, I am going to shoot?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anybody near Captain Graves at the same time that had a pistol?—A. Mr. Blunt was near and had a pistol, but it was in his bosom.

Q. How do you know that?—A. I saw it.

Q. He didn't have it out?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you say anything to Mr. Conrad?—A. No, sir.

Q. On the sidewalk?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any other man near Charles Adams, running?—A. No, sir. His brother was below him, and Jeff. Hubbard was below him, running.

Q. You turned your back on the crowd as soon as the firing began and walked off?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you stop or walk straight off?—A. I walked down to the corner beyond where Mr. Graves came and stopped.

Q. Where is that?—A. That is on the corner of Mr. White & Averett's shoe store.

Q. That is across Market street, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then how did you get back up the street?—A. I didn't go back up the street at all in an hour.

Q. Were not you back up there when you saw Mr. Graves?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why, you said Mr. Graves was about 5 feet from you when he shot?—A. Well, that was before he came down to that corner.

Q. When was that that you saw Mr. Graves?—A. Before the general shooting taken place.

Q. And after the fighting began you walked off below the corner and never came back at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Until after it was all over?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did you see Mr. Graves shoot from; where were you when you saw him shoot?—A. Standing on the corner.

Q. On the corner of Averett's shoe store?—A. Yes, sir; and after he shot the first time I turned and run up the steps, and when he shot again I was looking out of the window.

Q. Where was Mr. Graves standing when he did that shooting?—A. He was standing about two steps from the corner of the store, sort of in the street.

Q. What store?—A. Hesseberg's bar-room.

Q. There is where he was standing and you were standing on the other corner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, where was Charles Adams when he was shot?—A. He was backing back into the door.

Q. What door?—A. Hesseberg & Nicholas's door.

Q. Then he was backing right towards the man that shot him?—A. No, sir; he was not; he backing inside the door and Mr. Graves was standing up on the corner.

Q. You said Mr. Graves was two steps from the door?—A. He was two steps from the corner of the store I said.

Q. How far was he from the door; he was very close to him, was he not?—A. He was a little further than from here to you.

Q. And he was backing in when he shot him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far below at that time was Bob Adams?—A. He was about 25 yards, sir, I reckon.

Q. He was across Market, was he not?—A. No, sir; he was going from Market.

Q. Going up toward Woollfolk & Blair's?—A. No, sir; going from the market he was going from Main street.

Q. Into what street?—A. Into Spring street; he was going towards Spring street.

Q. He was going down Market street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Towards Spring street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far down Market was he?—A. About 25 yards.

Q. Twenty-five yards down Market?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, when the pistol fired at Charles?—A. No, sir; Charles had done gone back in the house then.

Q. Did Mr. Graves do any more firing after Charles got in the house?—A. He shot one time.

Q. What did he shoot at?—A. He shot right down that alley—right down Market street.

Q. Then he came to the corner, did not he?—A. He was already on the corner—about two steps from the corner when he shot Charles.

Q. You said the corner of the store, which corner do you mean; do you mean next to the market or up the other way?—A. Next to the market.

Q. Then, if Charles was back in the door, and he was standing passing across Main street, Charles was on his right hand and Bob was running down the alley on his left?—A. Bob was running right straight in front of him and Charles was right straight in front of him.

Q. Well, Bob was on Main street then?—A. Bob was on Market street.

Q. How could both men be in front of a man and one run down one street and the other down the other street?—A. Both of them were on the same street.

Q. How could Bob be backing into the store door?

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Not the store door, the side door; he was backing into the side door that opens on Market street?—A. Yes, sir; backing into the side door that opens on the side, and Bob, he was running down Market street.

Q. Well, the side door opens on Market street?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What door of the store was it that Charles was backing into?—A. In the side door of Mr. Hesseberg & Nicholas's bar-room.

Q. Not in the front door?—A. No, sir; the front door fronts Main street.

Q. Were you in Mr. Hesseberg's store that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not know who was in there at the time of the firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. At the time Charles Adams speaks of?—A. No, sir.

Q. You told us something about Nicholas telling Charles to come and take his horses. Did you hear that?—A. I could hear him but I could not see him.

Q. Where were you?—A. I was standing on the corner.

Q. On which corner?—A. On the corner of Mr. Everett & White's shoe store.

Q. That was the width of the street between your corner and his door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you could hear him in his store telling Charles to go and get his horses?—A. Yes, sir; the street is not more than 10 yards wide.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Were you called before the committee of forty that investigated this riot?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not a witness there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you before the grand jury?—A. No, sir.

WILLIAM E. GRAVES recalled.

By Mr. VANCE:

Question. Did you see this witness (Peter Smith) at any time in Patrick County?—Answer. I never was in Patrick County in my life, and I never have been at Mr. Wilson's plantation in Patrick County.

Q. You never were there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recollect the first time you ever saw this witness?—A. No, sir; I don't remember him.

Q. You do not know him?—A. No, sir; I have no doubt I have seen him, but I do not know him by name, and do not recognize him now.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You have no doubt he knew you, have you?—A. I do not know, as far as that is concerned. He certainly never saw me in the county of Patrick, for I never have been there.

JEFF. HUBBARD sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Ever since the surrender.

Q. By the surrender you mean the surrender of the Confederate armies to the Union armies?—A. Yes, sir; ever since the surrender of Lee.

Q. Where did you live before that?—A. Mr. Hubbard raised me, in Pittsylvania County, near the upper edge of the Franklin line.

Q. Were you a slave?—A. Yes, sir; all we were slaves.

Q. What is your business in Danville, and what has it been since that time?—A. Working in the factory.

Q. Tobacco factory?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November last?—A. Well, I was on Market street and on Main street part of the time; when the riot commenced I was on Market street.

Q. Were the hands at work that day?—A. Some of them was at work and some of them was not.

Q. How was it in the factory where you work?—A. The factory where I work was not working that day. I wasn't working that day, and had not been for some time.

Q. Where were you when the disturbance first began?—A. When the disturbance first commenced I was at the lower end of the market.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. Then I was around on the street they call Patten street, on the lower end of the market, and just as I came around the corner of the market square what struck my attention to the riot was a woman that came out, I think, the second door from the corner, and screamed out, and said "Lord a mercy! don't you hear the people shooting up yonder?" and I saw people rushing up towards Main street. I hurried on myself to see what was the matter. When I got there the people were coming from all directions; both white and black was gathered; women and children was gathered, and I walked up there, and there was such a crowd, and somebody was hallooing like somebody was choking; I got down and tried to peep at what they was doing, but could not understand what they was doing, and this time I saw Mr. Lea waving his pistol jus so [indicating] and say, "No man can touch," and I was astonished to see a man going on so. I didn't see Mr. Noel at all, but I saw Robert Adams and Robert Withers running around there. He was on police that day; Adams was on the police that day, but Withers wasn't, and one says, "Walter, why don't you try to stop these men;" he stopped and said, "I am not on to day, Robert; don't you go there, you will getshot just as sure you go there," and this time some of them parted them. I don't know who it was that parted them, and that sort of scattered the people then for ten or fifteen minutes, I will say ten minutes, and the people kept coming. This time the people from the opera house came up the street, and they appeared to get in a line on the sidewalk there from Mr. Woolfolk & Blair's office, and there was a white gentleman standing in the door with a double-barrel gun, and Mr. Hatcher; I saw him have a pistol in his pocket, and attempt to pull it out two or three times. He attempted to pull his pistol out, and put it back; presently he run his hand down in his coat pocket, and say, "God damn you, all go off." Nobody said nothing. He said, "You all better leave here;" and presently he stepped back on the sidewalk, and as he did so, somebody said "Fire," and I wont say certain who it was, but somebody said "Fire;" I think it was Lea, but I wont say certain, but somebody said "Fire," and they fired.

Q. How many pistols were fired at first?—A. At that shooting?

Q. No; at the first time when the command to "Fire" was given, how many pistols were fired at first?—A. As near as my recollection, from the county and all the people I saw there, I saw about three hundred people.

Q. You don't answer my question—A. I will if I understand it.

Q. You heard the order to "Fire" given?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many pistols were fired at once at first?—A. You mean at the first shot?

Q. Yes; how many pistols fired?—A. I say about three hundred pistols went off at once, just like taking three or four packs of squibs and throwing them out on the street.

Q. They kept firing in succession?—A. Yes, sir; I saw they was in earnest.

Q. Did you state whether they filled the air with smoke?—A. No, sir; I don't know which way they filled the air; I didn't take time to see which way they filled the air, but I didn't think they could get up nerve to shoot among people like that.

Q. Who was doing that shooting?—A. I saw Mr. George Lea shoot, I saw Mr. John Lea shoot, I saw Mr. Ned Hatcher shoot, and I saw Mr. Graves shoot, but I didn't see Mr. Graves there shoot.

Q. At whom did they shoot?—A. They shot right at the crowd; just shot right out in front at the crowd.

Q. The crowd of colored people?—A. Yes, sir; out in the street.

Q. What did the colored people do then?—A. They wheeled and ran just like I did; I was looking out for myself.

Q. Was the firing continued as they ran?—A. Yes; they commenced and hollered, "Heah! heah! heah! Kill'em! kill'em! kill'em!" That was the way they hollered all the time.

Q. Did you ever hear that yell during the war?—A. No, sir; I was not in the war, no more than at the breastworks.

Q. Do you know who it was yelling in that way?—A. No, sir; I don't know who it was; the whole crowd hollered.

Q. A good many of them?—A. Yes, sir; the whole crowd appeared to be hollering.

Q. In that way you describe?—A. Yes, sir; hollered "Kill 'em! kill 'em! kill 'em!" and I saw they meant business, and I believed they was going to shoot and aimed to kill, and I looked out for myself.

Q. Where did you go?—A. I ran by Mr. Nicholas & Hesseberg's bar-room, in the alley, betwixt Mr. Hesseberg's bar-room and the shoe store.

Q. On Market street?—A. No, sir; on the left-hand side. Well, it is Market street, too. The market is on the right-hand side, and I run down on the left-hand side of the street and run through that alley.

Q. That was an alley leading out of Market street?—A. Yes, sir; to old Mr. Holland's factory. I run out about Mr. Nicholas' bar-room, and the other crowd was pretty much before me; I was about the hindmost.

Q. Did the colored people go back at all?—A. No, sir; the colored people didn't go back there.

Q. In which direction did they run?—A. In every direction, men, women, and children—men, women, and children, and all just running over one another.

Q. Can you state whether the firing continued as they were running?—A. I don't know. When I run out there—as I started to tell you—when I run out to Mr. Nicholas' bar-house—I reckon it is about 50 yards——

Q. Did you see anything more of Colonel Graves?—A. Yes, sir. There is the first time I saw Mr. Graves. When I got out there Mr. Graves come right down by the corner of the bar-room and shot at me. He was shooting right at the crowd. I was the hindmost one, and I hadn't done nothing to nobody. I stopped to look around and see whether he was coming or not, and saw Mr. Graves standing right at the corner of the shoe store, and say, "Clare yourself! clare yourself! We'll kill the last one of you!" I stood there and heard the bullets whistle by my head, three or four. I stood there, and presently this alley was piled up with men; and this time I saw so many men that I ran out from there. I watched them and saw them all go way from there, and I thought the danger was through, and happened to think about my boy and Squire Taliaferro. I says, "I know if they see Squire Taliaferro this evening, they will kill him dead;" and I thought about my boy nearly grown. I goes across the market hunting for my boy. When I goes back on the street, across about the middle way—well, I didn't get middle way—I saw a man laying there dead on the street. While I was standing over that man looking at him, I saw Mr. Ned Hatcher, and Mr. Covington, and Mr. Cabell come along up the market, and they got Jack Redd down there some how or another; I don't know how they got him down; and this time the fire-bell rung, and the men just marched—it looked like they came from about every direction—with double-barrel shot-guns. I don't know where they did come from, they come so fast, with double-barrel shot-guns. Then I went on down through the market, and Mr. Woods, who was down there, advised all the colored people to go off the street; he said he couldn't do anything with them. I took him at his word and went on, and went to Mr. Swan's old factory, and I found my boy and staid there; and while I was over there I heard shots up about the Arlington, and heard hollering up there, the same way when they shot, up about the Arlington.

Q. Do you know Charles Adams?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him?—A. I don't recollect seeing Charles Adams.

Q. Where was this man shot? You stood over a man that was shot; how was he shot?—A. He was shot in the head.

Q. Whereabouts; in the face or back of the head?—A. He was shot in about here. [Indicating side of the head.]

Q. Was he dead?—A. Yes, sir; he was dead when I saw him; lying there dead.

Q. What was done with him?—A. I don't know; I left him lying there; I got on away from there as quick as I could.

Q. How old are you?—A. I am about fifty-two.

Q. You have a family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you before the committee of forty, or before the grand jury?—A. Yes; I was before the grand jury.

Q. Did you vote?—A. No, sir; I didn't vote.

Q. Why not?—A. Well, I was afeard to go to the polls.

Q. Had you registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you intended to vote?—A. I was intending to vote; that was my aim.

Q. How many years have you been accustomed to vote?—A. I have been ever since I had the privilege to vote, never missed an election, and wouldn't have missed that if I hadn't been afeard.

Q. Was there any understanding among the colored people that they should not vote?—A. No, sir; never heard a word of it at all.

Q. Was there any understanding among the colored people that there would be any violence there that day; any disturbance?—A. No, sir; not that I know.

Q. Did you see any colored man with arms?—A. Not a one. I never saw a colored man have a pistol.

Q. You were not armed?—A. No, sir; I had no pistol.

Q. Had you heard of indictments against the police for carrying arms?—A. Oh, yes; I heard that.

Q. You understood that anybody that carried arms would be liable to indictment, did you?—A. Yes, sir; and that morning before that row commenced I knew that row was going to be, but I didn't think it was going to be in that way; and the way I found it out I was standing on the street with two other colored men, and I saw a gentleman coming down the street with a pair of saddle-bags on his arm, and he says to Elijah Cousins, being he was a friend to him, he says—I didn't hear the man when he told him, he beckoned to him, and he stepped aside and spoke to him. When he turned back to us we asked him what he said, and I heard him say this—

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Give us what you heard the man say.—A. He says, "I am going out of town; I ain't going to have nothing at all to do with it," but this man says he told him to go and get—

Mr. VANCE and Mr. LAPHAM. Never mind that.

Mr. LAPHAM. Where was your wife living at the time of this occurrence?—A. Living at Mr. Holland's, she's living there now. Mr. Holland driv me away, though.

Q. When?—A. Last Wednesday night a fortnight ago.

Q. For what?—A. Just because I wouldn't sell my privilege to him.

Q. Did he say anything about your being a witness here?—A. Yes, he talked to me about my being a witness and said he saw my name in a letter where I had signed.

Q. He has discharged you, leaving your wife to live there?—A. He driv me away; told me I had better leave his house; it would be good for me to leave his house, and not only that, his advice was for me to leave the town. He said, Mr. Cabell had captured a letter and my name was in it, and if I didn't believe him he could prove it by Captain Clark and Mr. Conrad, and said not only my name but several other colored men's names was in that letter, and as soon as they determined what they would do about that letter my advice is for you to leave this town, and it makes no odds where you go for you to keep yourself close of nights, that's what he told me, and I tried to get him to tell me where he got that letter. He said never mind; Mr. Cabell had got it.

Q. Had you ever had anything to do with such a letter?—A. Never had since I was born; never had nothing to do with a letter.

Q. Do you write?—A. No, sir.

Q. You can't read?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor read writing?—A. No, sir.

Q. You know nothing about the letter except what he said?—A. No; he cussed me out and driv me off. My wife is now there; I told her she could stay as long as he wanted. Thereason I didn't take my wife away to work is because work is scarce in Danville, and I told her to stay a little while longer. As soon as I can make arrangements to take her away, I will take her away; I was anxious to come away, but I told her I thought it would be as well for her to stay there. He said I should not stay in town, let alone stay in his house.

Q. Did you see Captain Graves fire any shots?—A. I saw Captain Graves fire down an alley there.

Q. Around Market street?—A. No; round that alley where I run—that let out from the Market street; that's the first time I saw him.

Q. What did he have?—A. He had a pistol in his hand.

Q. How many white men did you see with pistols?—A. About three hundred, I reckon. There was more than that. It was an understood thing. I saw children have pistols.

Q. They gathered with pistols and guns both?—A. Yes, sir; I saw them toting guns up street. I was on the street all day that day, and some of them had two or three in their hands when I arrived that morning.

Q. Did you see pistols there that morning?—A. No, sir; if anybody had pistols they had them concealed.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. When was it you saw them carrying those pistols and shotguns up and down street?—A. Saturday morning.

Q. Who did you see carrying them up?—A. I saw several white men have them—one in each arm. I expected at the time that these people were going hunting.

Q. Where were they going?—A. They were going up street with them.

Q. Up the street which way?—A. Up the street above me where I was standing.

Q. Did you know any of the men?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect any of the men.

Q. You don't know where they live?—A. Oh, yes; they live there in town; they were citizens.

Q. Do you know whether they were going toward their homes or not?—A. They were going up street with them.

Q. That you said ; but where were they going ; to their homes ?—A. I don't know.

Q. Toward the opera house ?—A. They were going above the opera house.

Q. Toward the Arlington Hotel ?—A. Yes ; toward the Arlington.

Q. Did any of them live that way ?—A. I don't know whether they did or not.

Q. You saw some with two shot-guns, did you ?—A. I saw some with one in each hand.

Q. Were they going to kill negroes or going to hang them ?—A. I suppose they were going to kill negroes.

Q. It's a common thing among the people to kill negroes ?—A. Every time it is an election it's a common thing to kill negroes.

Q. Can you name any election where any of them have been killed ?—A. If they don't kill them they threatens them.

Q. It don't take much to scare you all to death ?—A. It takes a good deal to scare us if they come at us right.

Q. Were you afraid to go up and vote that day ?—A. Yes ; I was.

Q. Why were you afraid ? Did anybody threaten to hurt you if you went up to vote ?—A. That Saturday evening was enough to frighten anybody.

Q. Didn't the mayor issue his proclamation that you should all vote ?—A. The mayor himself was scared, let alone us.

Q. Didn't he issue a proclamation that you should all vote in safety ?—A. I was not paying attention to what the mayor said to them.

Q. Didn't he issue a proclamation that you should all vote in safety ?—A. I don't know whether he did or not.

Q. Didn't you hear he did ?—A. I saw some bills going around, but I couldn't read ; I don't know what they was.

Q. Some persons read them and told them what was in them ?—A. I heard some of them say what was in them, but I didn't know whether the mayor done it or not.

Q. And didn't all the leading citizens of all sorts assure the colored people that they could vote without molestation ?—A. I know all that was very true, but that action Saturday evening done for me.

Q. You thought they were going to kill the negroes. Now, did you really think so, or did you just put up that poor, pitiful pretense ?—A. The action showed it.

Q. Nobody threatened to shoot you on the day of election, did they ?—A. Yes, sir ; they said they were going to carry ; if they didn't carry it by ballots, by bullets.

Q. Who said that ?—A. That was the talk.

Q. Who talked it ?—A. There was several of them said it.

Q. Say one.—A. Well, I couldn't call any.

Q. No. I didn't expect you could call one.—A. But it was said.

Q. Did anybody say it of any reliability, any authority ?—A. Well, they said it ; I don't know whether reliability or not.

Q. Do you think you are fit for suffrage when you are so cowardly you won't go to the polls, and everybody begging you to go, and assuring you of safety ?—A. When a man is shot at like we were all shot at—

Q. The white people have been shot at time and again and yet they go and vote. Why can't you do it ?—A. I understand about it ; I aint a going there to be a target to be shot at.

Q. Did anybody threaten to shoot at you ?—A. Just what I said just now, that Saturday evening was enough.

Q. How long would it last you; will it keep you away from the next election?—A. I aint got over it yet.

Q. You are not going to vote next fall, are you?—A. I expect to yet, if I see some light; I have got to see some light though.

Q. What sort of light?—A. A better light than I have.

Q. You want United States troops, don't you?—A. I don't know nothing about that; I aint got nothing to do with that.

Q. Where were you when you first heard this firing on the street; when the woman first called your attention to it?—A. At the lower end of the market.

Q. How far from Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. I reckon it is about 100 yards clear through the market. I was at the lower end of the market.

Q. Well, you walked on up then after you heard the firing, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you first see when you got up there?—A. As I said a little bit ago I saw the people gathering there, and I walked up trying to see what was the excitement, and when I got up there I could hear, but somebody, it seemed, was choking that way [indicating] and I got down between the legs to see what was going on and see what was the matter; there was two men fighting, but I never did see. Presently the bulk of that crowd—before that though, Mr. Lea, I saw him have his pistol in his hand. That's the first pistol I saw. He says, "God damn, no man touch; no man touch." I staid there then. I never said a word more than I spoke to Robert Adams, "Robert, don't you go, you will get hurt;" and Robert's brother said, "Don't you go up, you will get shot," and I said, "Yes, you will get shot sure." I stepped back, then these men formed a line, looked like it was an understood thing; all got along the sidewalk.

Q. How many of them?—A. I say there was about three hundred people all gathered round there.

Q. How many white people?—A. That's what I'm talking about; it looked like three hundred.

Q. You saw three hundred whites?—A. Yes, sir; and they kept coming.

Q. Let us get it point by point; you say there were three hundred?—A. They kept coming, I say.

Q. How many were there when they didn't keep coming?—A. When I first got there I reckon there was some forty or fifty, when I first got there, but I say after that first scrimmage and the second act was about five or ten minutes before the shooting commenced and the people kept coming there.

Q. Now, hold on; how many white people were there in line?—A. I think about three hundred.

Q. About three hundred?—A. Yes, if not more than that.

Q. You think there were more than that?—A. Three hundred anyhow, or more.

Q. Yes, where did they come from?—A. All over the town everywhere.

Q. Any of them from the opera house?—A. Yes, sir; I saw them come from the opera house.

Q. How many?—A. A crowd; they were a whole meeting.

Q. The whole meeting came down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All had arms?—A. I saw them pull them out of their pockets.

Q. Did you see as many as three hundred with arms in their hands?—A. Yes, if you had been there and saw them you would have said there would have been more than that.

Q. May be I wouldn't have been as badly scared as you?—A. May be you wouldn't; we didn't have no arms; they had all the arms.

Q. Do you know the colored people had no arms?—A. I know I didn't have any.

Q. Well, suppose you speak for yourself; you don't know whether they had them.—A. I don't believe they had.

Q. Well, speak for yourself.—A. I didn't have any.

Q. You don't know the other colored people did not; you don't know whether they had any?—A. If they had them they didn't show them.

Q. Didn't show them to anybody?—A. Yes, sir; I swear that nobody didn't see any colored men with a pistol there that evening.

Q. Then you know more about it than men who have been there.—A. I will swear to what I saw and no more.

Q. Well, they were on oath, too?—A. I swear they didn't see them.

Q. You swear that they didn't; you swear no colored man was in that crowd there with a pistol?—A. I say I didn't see none.

Q. Well, when you get back there you are getting just reasonable. Did you see anybody trying to keep the peace?—A. I didn't see anybody trying to keep the peace, but, as I told you, Robert Adams was saying something about going up to stop the fight, and his brother told him he had better not go up there.

Q. You have told that.—A. I didn't see anybody else.

Q. You didn't see Mr. Freeman?—A. No, sir; it was such a crowd by that time you couldn't tell hardly who you did see.

Q. Well, you swore there was no arms in the hands of the colored people?—A. I didn't see no arms in the hands of the colored people. If the colored people had any arms they never would have run like they did. The colored people run, and they were running after them and shooting, and hollering.

Q. Answer another question now. You saw nobody, you say, trying to keep the peace; did you see Mr. Booth; do you know him?—A. I know him.

Q. Did you see him at all?—A. I don't recollect seeing him.

Q. Did you see Mr. Freeman?—A. I don't recollect seeing him.

Q. Did you see Mr. Corbin?—A. I don't recollect seeing him.

Q. Mr. Oliver?—A. I saw Mr. Oliver when I first got up there.

Q. What was he doing?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you hear him making any talk to the people, asking them to disperse?—A. No, sir; I saw Mr. Oliver when I first got to the crowd.

Q. Did you hear any colored man say anything?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear any colored man in the crowd say a word, except this man Adams, any more than his brother spoke to him and told him he had better not go up there.

Q. Which brother?—A. Henry.

Q. Now, that was all the word you heard spoken in the crowd by the colored people?—A. That was all I heard spoke.

Q. They just stood there without saying a word, and the white men on the street with their pistols threatened to kill them, and they did nothing and said nothing?—A. Why, they had nothing to do, nothing to say.

Q. Well, they did say nothing?—A. That's what I said.

Q. Now you stand to that?—A. That's what I said.

Q. And Hatcher pulled out his pistol and said, "Damn you people, what do you want; what are you doing here?"—A. Nobody ever answered him when he said that; no colored people ever answered him.

Q. And then the crowd commenced yelling, Heah, heah, heah; kill'em, kill'em, kill'em?—A. Yes.

Q. No colored people said a word?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you have told me how many white people there were on the sidewalk; how many colored people were there?—A. To tell you the truth, women and children—right to where that shooting commenced is generally where the women and children come down Saturday evening.

Q. I don't care what generally; what was there then?—A. That's what am telling you now. May be there may have been 200 of colored men, and women, and children, all in the street; and the white men generally had the possession of the sidewalk. I was out in the street myself.

Q. You say there were two hundred or more colored people?—A. Yes; but there was women and children.

Q. The biggest part of them were women, were they not? Was there more women than children and men?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. Well, there were more women and children than men, wasn't there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There wasn't more than twenty-five or thirty colored men there, was there?—A. I couldn't say that; I know there was more white people than there was colored men.

Q. The white people were in a large majority, and armed at that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you told Senator Lapham that you knew there was going to be a fight, but you didn't think it was going to come that way; what made you know there was going to be a fight, aside from this man that you met?—A. I started to tell you.

Q. Well, you said you heard a man there and he called for a man you were with, and had a talk with him; what was that man's name?—A. Mr. Wimbush Young.

Q. Where does he live?—A. Danville.

Q. How did you expect it to come?—A. I don't understand you; what to come?

Q. Oh, yes, you did. You understand, you know I asked how you expected it to come?—A. You asked how you expected to come. You mean me to come?

Q. You understood very well what my question was.—A. How did I expect the fight to come; I didn't know; I didn't know they was going to have any fighting at all.

Q. You told Senator Lapham you expected that fight to come, but not that way.—A. I said that morning, and you cut me off when I tried to tell it.

Q. You said you expected it to come.—A. I said that morning; I said I didn't expect it to come that way. Mr. Sims was that morning speaking at the court-house; that they was trying to raise a mob there at the court-house; they was expecting a fuss over there; that next morning; they were going to mob Mr. Sims when they come out that morning. Well, I was down town on the street Saturday morning, myself, Wilson, and a man by the name of "Lige" Cousins; we were standing on the street talking and this Wimbush Young beckoned to Lige to come up to him and he went to him and I reckon he stepped off about ten steps, and he said Lige—I didn't hear him tell Lige—

Q. That's what we want you to tell.—A. That's what I say; will you let me tell it now? It was so near—I didn't hear—but I heard him say to him going off, "I ain't going to have nothing to do with it."

Q. In consequence of what you heard there—A. I expected there was going to be a fuss among the white people, but I didn't believe that anybody could get up the nerve to go to shooting that way unless they done something to them, that's what I thought. I didn't think a man could go in cold blood and shoot at men that way; that's what I meant.

Q. You didn't expect it to come that way; did you expect it to come in some way, in an attack on Mr. Sims?—A. Yes; but then after Mr. Sims went out of town and didn't say nothing at all I felt the thing was over; I just thought it was done with.

Q. Was it generally understood among the colored people that Mr. Sims would be attacked?—A. I believe it was generally understood that there would be an attack when he came down that morning, and that's what I thought.

Q. Was that the reason so many colored people were on the street that day?—A. Well, the colored people wasn't doing anything.

Q. Now, you heard my question. I ask you if that was the reason so many colored people were on the street?—A. I don't know; there are colored people on the street every day. I don't say they were on the street with that intention, but they were on the street every day when they were not doing anything.

Q. I will ask you if it was not understood that Mr. Sims was to be attacked, and the colored people were on the watch out?—A. I didn't understand that.

Q. Didn't they intend to stand up for Mr. Sims if he was attacked?—A. I don't know. I just thought if Mr. Sims would be attacked it would be a white men's fight, and I had nothing to do with it.

Q. You didn't think Mr. Sims was going to fight the whole town of Danville?—A. I don't know anything about that; I know if the white men fought—Mr. Sims was attacked—it was none of my business.

Q. Why wouldn't it be, you a friend?—A. A friend, but I know one thing, a white man is a white man, and I wasn't going to have nothing at all to do with it.

Q. You say there was no understanding that colored people were on the watch to protect Mr. Sims?—A. No, sir; I don't know nothing about it.

Q. But you did hear it talked around that that was expected?—A. I heard it talked round that they would attack him. I was standing there, and Mr. Sims come down and went into the barber-shop and shaved and come out and got in his buggy.

Q. How do you know?—A. I was right there.

Q. You were in, then, all the morning, were you?—A. I was down on the street.

Q. Just looking around. How many colored people were standing around when Mr. Sims came out of the hotel?—A. Oh, there was a whole parcel of them; he wasn't in no hotel.

Q. From his room?—A. From his room.

*Q. Were there many others about?—A. A sight of them, colored and white people, too, on the street.

Q. You saw Mr. Graves shoot, did you?—A. Yes, sir; he shot at me.

Q. And you say you heard three or four bullets pass over your head?—A. I did.

Q. From Mr. Graves's pistol?—A. Yes; Mr. Graves's pistol; Mr. Graves shot, and I heard the bullets whistle by my head.

Q. Well, he shot Charles Adams?—A. I didn't see him shoot Charles Adams.

Q. But he shot twice at Robert Adams and four times at you?—A. I don't know how many times he shot at Robert Adams or Charles Adams, but I know he shot a great long while.

Q. Where were you?—A. I was standing at Mr. Nicholas's bar-house.

Q. Where was he standing?—A. He was standing right against the corner; the corner of Mr. Nicholas's bar-room.

Q. On Main street or Market street?—A. He was standing on Main street.

Q. And where were you standing?—A. I was standing out near the bar-house.

Q. Isn't that the same place?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is the bar-house?—A. Back of the bar-room.

Q. On Market street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he stood on Main street?—A. He stood on Main street.

Q. And fired down Market street?—A. No, sir; the alley that leads out of Market street.

Q. It is a continuation of Market street, isn't it?—A. It leads into Market street.

Q. How far were you from him when he fired the pistol?—A. I reckon I was about 50 yards.

Q. Was Robert Adams between you and him?—A. I didn't see him.

Q. Was Charles Adams between you and him?—A. I didn't see Charles Adams at all.

Q. How long after the firing up there on Main street, until he fired, had you been here in Market street?—A. How long?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, it was about two or three minutes.

Q. Two or three minutes?—A. Yes, sir; when I run the people all stood there. When they commenced shooting the people commenced running, and then they commenced running after the people and shooting at them, and I run down to the alley there and run round the bar-room up towards that bar-house. I looked back and thought I was out of the way, and I saw Captain Graves with his pistol. He says, "Clear yourself! I kill the last one of you! Leave this town!" He shot three or four times.

Q. Who was with you?—A. There was lots of people the other side of me, but I was the nearest one to Graves.

Q. No more on the same street?—A. Plenty of them, women and children.

Q. He shot four times at you?—A. I won't say positively, I say three or four times. This time, in two or three minutes, men rushed in that alley, and he hollered, "Heah! heah! heah! Kill 'em! kill 'em! kill 'em!"

Q. Did you hear anything about Charles Adams getting shot?—A. No, sir; I don't know anything at all about Charles Adams.

Q. You don't know whether he was shot before or after?—A. No, sir; I didn't know anything at all about it, until that night, when I heard some one say Charles Adams was shot. I didn't know anything at all about it.

Q. Where did you go from there? Speaking about your son, you went over to the factory, didn't you?—A. I went down to the lower end of the market, and just as I got down to the lower end of the market the fire-bell commenced to ring. When the fire-bell commenced ringing the men then coming run with their shot-guns in every direction, and I staid there two or three minutes, and Mr. Woods was talking to some gents. He said, "You must stop it; go put these guns down."

Q. Where was Mr. Woods then?—A. He was at the lower end of market. And Mr. Woods says to the colored people, "You all better come on off the street." "Yes," I says, "I will go off the street." He says, "I can't do nothing with them; you all better come off the street."

Q. Where did you go then?—A. I went over to the factory which they call Mr. Sutherland's factory.

Q. Where is that?—A. I forget the name of the street, but at any rate it goes right south from the market.

Q. Is it not Union street?—A. No, sir; it leads towards Wilson street.

Q. How far was that from the scene of the firing on Main street?—A. You couldn't see Main street.

Q. How far was it from where the firing had taken place?—A. On Main street? Well, it was 150 yards, I reckon.

Q. Who works in that factory?—A. Mr. Debber.

Q. Now, that is more than 150 yards, is it not?—A. It may be.

Q. Isn't it a quarter of a mile—Woolfolk & Blair's office on Main street?—A. No, sir; it may be 150 or 200 yards, something like that. It aint no quarter of a mile. There is where I found my boy anyhow, and there I staid.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. Until dark.

Q. How long after you got there until you heard this firing down on Main street?—A. Two or three minutes I heard something firing up at the Arlington and some hollering.

Q. You heard shooting and hollering at the Arlington—many shots?—A. I didn't hear them shoot but twice.

Q. The streets lead off at right angles in the city of Danville, don't they—some this way and some that way [indicating]. Now, coming up from Main street to the lower end of the market, how many cross-streets did you cross going up to that factory?—A. Why, I crossed the street they call Patten street, going up to that factory, where I went to hunt my boy.

Q. Did you cross any other street?—A. I crossed Patten street, and that is the only street I crossed.

Q. The factory is on the next street after you cross Patten?—A. The factory is on the corner. I don't know what the name of that street is.

Q. Didn't you cross a street called Loyal?—A. Maybe that is the name of the street; I don't know the name of the street.

Q. Is the factory close there?—A. Yes; right in the corner of that street. It leads out from the market as you go up from Patten street, going towards Wilson street. I don't know what the name of the street is, though; I can't recollect.

Q. Mr. Holland discharged you, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When?—A. Last Wednesday night was a fortnight ago.

Q. By fortnight you mean two weeks; last Wednesday night was two weeks ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say he discharged you for?—A. He got to cussing of me; said I was attending the meetings last fall, and speaking one thing and another, a whole parcel; he was cussing me.

Q. Was part of it about your being a witness here?—A. He cussed me about running to the custom-house, toting news there; said I was toting news to the custom-house; tattler; I told him I hadn't been to no custom-house.

Q. Was anything said about your being a witness here?—A. No; he didn't know I was going to be a witness then, I guess; I don't know.

Q. You said something in your other examination about being a witness here. Senator Lapham asked you if he said anything about your being a witness here, and you said yes, according to my recollection of the testimony.—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Mr. LAPHAM. I think you are mistaken, Senator; it was in regard to his discharge and the reason for it.

Mr. VANCE. Was there nothing said about his being a witness?

Mr. LAPHAM. No, sir; he said Mr. Cabell had captured a letter, and and saw his name on it with several other colored men.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What was in the letter?—A. I don't know; he wouldn't tell; I asked him five or six times, and he said they hadn't determined yet what they were going to do about that letter. He says, "As soon as we determine about what to do with that letter my advice to you is to leave this town; you and all others whose names is on that letter, and it makes no odds where you get at, you better keep yourself close at nights."

Q. That is what he told you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he cursed you?—A. Yes, sir; told me I could stay there that night, but he didn't want to see me no more in my life.

Q. Mr. Holland's son was shot down that night, wasn't he?—A. That wasn't his son, that was Kit Holland's son.

Q. His nephew?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAPHAM (to Mr. Vance.) The day of the riot I suppose you meant. The day as you say, would mean the day he was dismissed.

Mr. VANCE. Well, I didn't mean that. I meant the day of the riot.

Q. Where do you live now?—A. With Mr. Robinson, in Danville.

Q. When were you first summoned to come here?—A. Last Saturday evening.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. When did you first hear that this riot was to be investigated here; that it was to be a subject of inquiry here by a committee of Congress?—A. I believe it was about a fortnight ago Friday.

Q. Was it before or after Mr. Holland had this talk with you?—A. It was after it.

Q. You had not heard of this, then?—A. I hadn't heard a word of it.

Q. You don't know what the letter he mentioned referred to?—A. No, sir; he wouldn't tell me what it referred to.

Q. You don't know whether it was before or after the resolution was offered in Congress?—A. No, sir; I don't know nothing at all about it; I told him I had never authorized nobody to sign my name to any letter.

WILLIAM POWELL sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. About 2½ miles from Danville, I think.

Q. Where were you on the afternoon of this disturbance?—A. I was over this end of the bridge. I didn't know anything about it.

Q. By "this end of the bridge," you mean which side of the river?—A. The North Danville side.

Q. You were on the north side of the river?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is Sophia Powell, who was a witness here, your wife?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was she in the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first see her after the disturbance, or where?—A.

When I first saw her after the disturbance I came across this side of the river; I heard popping across the street, and I made the remark it was mighty soon in the year to be firing squibs, and I stood talking to a gentleman and after awhile I saw the people running down the street, and asked a gentleman what was the matter; they said they were fighting there, and I went up there to see where she was.

Q. Who did you see running down the street?—A. White and colored.

Q. What description of people?—A. Men, women, and children were coming down the street.

Q. And you went to see where your wife was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you find her?—A. I found her coming down the street near Mr. Tyack's shoe store, I think.

Q. Did you hear the guns?—A. I heard the pistols; I understood them to be pistols. I thought they were firing crackers at first, and that is the reason I said it was mighty soon to be firing crackers.

Q. It sounded like fire-crackers, did it; the shots were so frequent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many should you judge?—A. I was at the lower end of the the bridge.

Q. Where did you and your wife go from there?—A. I went and got my wife to carry her home—out of town.

Q. Where was your home?—A. About 2½ miles from Danville.

Q. Did you stay there?—A. No, sir; I didn't stay there that night.

Q. Why not?—A. Well, I was afraid to stay at home.

Q. Why?—A. After they had been shooting and killing the folks over in town.

Q. Was there any disturbance over on your side of the river?—A. There was no disturbance over on my side of the river; none at all.

Q. No firing of pistols or guns there?—A. I didn't hear any only in the night; way in the night. I had left home; could hear shooting; looked like through the country and around about, but didn't know where they were.

Q. How far did you go from your residence to stay that night?—A. I went about three-quarters of a mile, I reckon.

Q. To whose house?—A. To Edmund Keeling's house.

Q. You heard guns from there, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time in the night?—A. All along through the night; could hear shooting in some direction all along through the night. I didn't sleep but very little that night.

Q. You went there to stay because you were afraid to stay at your own house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did your wife go with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go to election?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. Had you registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You intended to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you vote?—A. Why, I was afeard to vote.

Q. Where was your voting place?—A. New Design precinct.

Q. If it hadn't been for this disturbance you would have voted, wouldn't you?—A. If it hadn't been for the disturbance, and I thought there was some danger of being killed, I would have voted. I always did vote there.

Q. How many years since you first voted?—A. When I first voted it was directly after the surrender.

Q. How old are you?—A. I think I am going on forty years old.

Q. Did you hear anything more of this affair between that night and the election?—A. Well, sir; it was a continual thing through the neighborhood all around. You could hear firing all around the neighborhood.

Q. Up to the day of the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any of it after the election?—A. No, sir; don't hear no reports now like you did before that.

Q. Did it stop after the election?—A. After the election was over you couldn't hear that report every night.

Q. When did you go back home?—A. I went back the next morning.

Q. Sunday morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And remained at home?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You got a good scare, Powell, didn't you?—A. A right good one.

Q. Although you were not at the fight?—A. No, sir; I wasn't at the fight.

Q. Just heard the guns?—A. Heard the guns.

Q. And you took to your heels and went home, two miles and a half from town, across the river?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was afraid to sleep in your own house that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went three-quarters of a mile further on to stay with a neighbor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard guns all night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard them plumb up to the day of election?—A. Off and on.

Q. Do you know who fired those guns that Saturday night?—A. I don't know.

Q. What direction were they fired?—A. They were firing all around. I thought, "good gracious alive, hear the firing of the guns; I reckon they have gone to fighting again."

Q. You couldn't hear guns two miles and a half from you?—A. Oh, yes, you can.

Q. Hear a common pistol two miles and a half?—A. No, but you can hear a gun. I can stand at my place and hear them driving nails in timber.

Q. You don't know whether this firing was by colored people or not?—A. I don't know.

Q. You didn't inquire?—A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't take trouble to inform yourself, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What kind of a place do you live at in the country, a farm or little town?—A. Farms all around us, but then there is little villages. Colored people live there on their own places.

Q. Whose land?—A. On their own, most of them.

Q. Did you live on yours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabouts is it; what is the name of it?—A. It is out there in front of J. D. Marland's.

Q. How many colored people are there in the little village?—A. I don't know.

Q. What is the name of the man whose house you went to?—A. Edmund Keeling.

Q. Whereabouts is that?—A. That's down the road towards Keen's mills.

Q. Is that nearer the town than where you live?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So you went nearer the town?—A. Yes, sir; because I went in the house with somebody else.

Q. Whose land does he live on?—A. James Marland's.

Q. Was that a farm house or little village?—A. Some five or six houses.

Q. The firing kept on way to the election, you say?—A. It was a general thing.

Q. Sunday night?—A. It was a general thing.

Q. Didn't you try to find out who was doing all this firing?—A. I didn't have no finding out to do; I didn't know who was doing the firing. You wouldn't have me give my opinion, would you?

Q. I ask you if you tried to inform yourself.—A. I was pretty certain in my own opinion; I may be wrong; I was pretty certain it was the white people.

Q. You think it was this Danville crowd of ruffians?—A. I don't know about their being ruffians.

Q. Well, these same people that were in the riot?—A. It was all through the country; the Danville party done their part, and the country people done their part.

Q. Were there a good many white people around there?—A. There is several; all around through the neighborhood there were white people.

Q. What white people live around there?—A. There is Mr. Coleman I know; he lives on a little further from me, and very close to the town North Danville; white people all around there, and on the turnpike there is white people living there.

Q. How close was Mr. Coleman's to the house you staid at all night?—A. Mr. Coleman's is about a mile from where I staid all night. Mr. Lambert is right there in front of the place that I live at.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. No one advised you not to go and vote, did they?—A. No, sir.

Q. You staid away because you were afraid to vote?—A. I staid away because I was afeared.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 20, 1884.

Mr. VANCE. Before we proceed I would like to ask a question of Captain Graves. He was asked yesterday if he ever bought and sold negroes, and he said he had; and it seems to be stated in the papers that he is a regular old-fashioned negro trader.

W. P. GRAVES recalled.

By Mr. VANCE:

Question. Will you state if you were what was known as a slave-dealer?—Answer. I was not.

Q. You owned slaves, and sometimes bought and sometimes sold one?—A. I owned some, and if I found one that didn't suit me I sometimes sold him. I sold a few, and I bought a few others to supply their places.

Q. Did you ever buy and sell for profit, as they say?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never did?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. How many did you ever buy and sell?—A. I think I sold some three or four, perhaps, and I bought, perhaps, three or four.

Q. How many did you ever own?—A. About twenty. I mean I owned about twenty at one time.

Q. In all how many different persons did you own?—A. I suppose some twenty-four or twenty five.

Q. Were they males or females?—A. Both sexes.

Q. Married or unmarried?—A. Both.

Q. Did you know of these indictments against the police and others for carrying arms?—A. I have frequently heard of indictments.

Q. Any of these indictments found in October, a month or so before the election?—A. I don't remember particularly about that, but there is very seldom a grand jury without some indictments being found for carrying concealed weapons.

Q. Have you any doubt that you knew of those indictments?—A. I think probably I knew it.

Q. And still you carried arms?—A. Yes, sir.

W. H. BARKSDALE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Where do you live?—A. Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Thirty-three years.

Q. You are a clergyman, are you not—a preacher?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you on the streets of Danville on the 3d of November last, when what is called the riot occurred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state in your own way what you saw and heard from the beginning to the end of that matter.—A. I was on the corner of Mr. P. R. Jones' drug-store.

Q. Where is that?—A. That is in Danville, on Market street. I was right on the corner of the store that fronts Market street.

Q. Market and Main?—A. I will tell you about Main, that fronts Market street, and I know some one said, "Murder," and I stepped around the corner on Main street, right at his door, and I looked towards Mr. Woolfolk & Blair's office and I saw a great many folks gathering there, both men, women, and children, and the white people were standing on the sidewalk; and I saw Bob Adams, a police, rushing up in the crowd to try to separate some one that was fighting. I didn't go up in the crowd, but staid right opposite them in the door, looking. I asked who was that that was fighting, and they said it was Mr. Noel and Hense Lawson. I saw some men flourishing pistols and saying, "Stand back! no one touch."

Q. What kind of men?—A. White men on the sidewalk.

Q. How many men?—A. Well, it seemed to be three or four pistols that I saw.

Q. Can you name them?—A. No, sir; I cannot name them. I didn't go up in the crowd; I didn't want fighting, and I never get struck if I stand off and look; and shortly after I saw Bob Adams trying to separate them. Walter Withers came up and the pistol went off; I don't know who fired the pistol, but I think about three minutes—probably two minutes, as near as I can come at it—some one say, "Shoot! shoot!" distinctly twice. That was on the right hand of the colored folks, on the sidewalk, between J. A. Nicolas' bar-room and Mr. Woolfolk & Blair's door on Main street.

Q. Did that cry come from the whites or blacks?—A. It seemed that it come from the whites.

Q. You don't know who spoke it?—A. No; I don't know what man. There was right smart noise, and I couldn't catch his voice. And from that they sort of struck a bias line across the street, and commenced shooting the first volley of pistols; I don't know how many there were, but they seemed to be across the street. I opened the door of Mr. Jones' drug store and stepped inside, and looked out the window to look, and presently they got down to the corner of the market. Then I fell back in the rear of the store from the window.

Q. Did the whites advance then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were advancing toward the market?—A. Yes, sir. When they fired the first volley of pistols the men, women, and boys commenced running, and they were following them up, shooting as they run. Well, they got down to the market square, to the corner of where you turn down to the market on your right, and I fell back in the rear and staid there until the shooting was over.

Q. You saw the whites advance. Was there any resistance on the part of the colored people?—A. There was not. I stood and looked across and I saw them gathering, and saw the pistols flourishing. I didn't know what was the result of it at all. I found that it was Hense Lawson and Mr. Noel that was fighting.

Q. What kind of a crowd was this that they fired into?—A. They were women, boys, and men.

Q. Were any of them armed?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any of them armed.

Q. Were you where you could see if they were armed?—A. I was.

Q. Did you see anybody among the colored people holding up or pointing a pistol?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Did you see any sticks or staves or weapons of any kind?—A. I didn't see any of them pointing a pistol—pointing a pistol, gun, knife, stick, nor nothing.

Q. What kind of a crowd was it? Were the people apparently collected for a purpose, or gathering just by the excitement of the moment to see a fight?—A. On a Saturday, in Danville, after 12 o'clock, the people is gathered from the country and everywhere, trading until about 6 o'clock in the afternoon, and when there is a fight or any music, or anything occurring on the street, boys and women and all gather up, stand and look at the fight, or anything of the sort. That was why, I suppose; they heard the cry of "murder." Most everybody runs when they hear the cry of "murder," to see.

Q. Was there anything in the crowd to indicate a purpose to resist, or to have a fight, or anything of that kind?—A. I didn't see any.

Q. Were there noises? Did you hear any cries?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any conversation—loud talk—among the colored people?—A. No, sir; I didn't. They seemed to be standing, looking on. I didn't hear them making any threats or any loud noise.

Q. You are a man of peace, a clergyman, as you tell us. Was there any danger to the white people there, around as they were, from that crowd of colored people?—A. I don't think there was, sir—honest.

Q. You don't think there was any?—A. No, sir; we had no idea; I was among them, and know white and colored, and I never heard any threats from the colored or any disposition made to attack the white folks on any account.

Q. You would certainly have known if there was any such purpose?—A. I would. If I hear any one talking that way I just tell them peace—for the Scripture say let us have harmony.

Q. You said nothing that was inconsistent with that idea of yours?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see Mr. Holland shot?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you called before the grand jury?—A. I was.

Q. Were you examined there?—A. Before the grand jury; yes, sir.

Q. Were you called before the committee of forty?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Boulden?—A. I did.

Q. About this matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that conversation?—A. I think that was just before the committee of forty met.

Q. Was Mr. Boulden a member of the committee of forty?—A. I don't remember. He sent for me to come to his office. I went up and saw him to have a talk about this.

Q. Was you sent for, or inquired of, in regard to what testimony you would give before the committee of forty?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Were you inquired of by Mr. Boulden as to what your testimony would be?—A. No. He knew me; sent for me; knew I was a man that would tell the truth, and he sent for me, and was talking about the shooting; just what I knew about it, and I have told him all.

Q. Was that before the committee met?—A. I think it was.

Q. What did he say then?—A. Well, he didn't say anything; stopped talking and gave me one of his papers, and I came out of the office.

Q. Did he say anything that he did not want your testimony or that you were all on one side, or something of that kind?—A. He said, "Well, you have it all on your side, and none on no one else's." I told him no; I was only speaking what I saw and knew; not what some one told me or I heard some one say. I told Mr. Boulden I saw it.

Q. Did he say anything about Colonel Sims in this connection?—A. No, sir; I remarked to him that "Mr. Boulden, if you all were mad with Colonel Sims for the speech that he made, you ought to have taken it out of him and not shot the colored folks, because they went to hear him."

Q. What did he say to that?—A. I don't remember what he said.

Q. He didn't say anything you remember?—A. Yes; I told him that we had no idea of attacking the white folks, and we had no such disposition, and there was no such proposition, nor plot, nor conspiracy among none of them; and I had noticed meetings and one thing and another very carefully, and if I saw any one was trying to make a plot for a fuss or riot or anything, I didn't care who he was, I would report him to the law and stop it; that I was a law-abiding citizen, and would do it, let him be white or black.

Q. Did you vote at the election?—A. I did not.

Q. Why didn't you vote?—A. Well, sir, on the day of the election I felt more like that the city (the colored) should be in sack-cloth and ashes, praying, than going to the polls, and when I went on the street and saw the blood of those men, my heart was in grief. I knew them all; raised among them from boys.

Q. You would not vote on account of the events of the Saturday before?—A. No, sir. Then I saw men that was armed, and I didn't know what might be the result. I had many thoughts about it; consequently I did not go to the polls.

Q. Did you know the men who were killed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would give their names.—A. Ed. Davis was one. I know all three of them. Jerry Smith was one.

Q. Who was Davis?—A. He was a colored man, son of Wallace Davis that used to live in Lynchburg, and he was cooking at the Arlington House.

Q. Who was the next one?—A. The next one was Jerry Smith, who lived on Jackson Branch, just outside of the corporation.

Q. Who was the next?—A. The next was Peter Walters. He died in two weeks from effects of the wound; and the other young man that was killed was from Greensborough, and he staid at the Arlington House too.

Q. Greensborough, N. C.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they peaceable?—A. Peaceable; fine a boy as ever was raised in the town of Danville.

Q. How about them all?—A. Jerry was the same. He used to work for me, and he had had a long spell of sickness and just got out and could walk about. He was a member of the church, was one good thing.

Q. Give us the names of those who were wounded and did not die.—A. Reuben Owen, who lived at Clarksville, was one.

Q. Who was the other?—A. I don't know the others.

Q. Do you know the name of the woman that was shot that day?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know how many were wounded that day besides those who were killed?—A. No, sir; I do not. After the first volley of pistols I got out of the way.

Q. What is the size of your congregation?—A. My congregation is very small where I preach.

Q. What denomination are you?—A. I am a missionary Baptist. I haven't any church in Danville. I live in Danville. My church is in Rockingham, North Carolina.

Q. Do you know the men of your congregation, of the region there, pretty well?—A. In Danville?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether there is any bitterness in your congregation against the whites?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any disposition to violence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard any threats among them?—A. I have not. If I had I would speak it.

Q. As far as you know, do the colored people about Danville generally go armed?—A. No, sir; the grand jury before this last, I was a member of the grand jury, and I think we brought in some ninety-five indictments for selling minors whisky and carrying concealed weapons, and I think there were two colored men outside of the police who were indicted for carrying arms; and I have not seen any of them carry arms.

Q. Only two out of that ninety-five were indicted for carrying arms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were those indictments found; how long before the riot?—A. I think those indictments were found the first Monday of October, 1883.

Q. About a month before the riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What effect had that to prevent the carrying of arms upon the colored folks?—A. I heard them talking very often and say, "I ain't going to carry any arms; haven't got no $15 or $30 to pay fine." Some say, "No, I don't want none; its no use to have none." That was the general talk among the younger men, but the older men, I don't suppose, thought any more about carrying arms than I did.

Q. I want to get a little more fully from you the condition of mind of the colored people as to voting. Why didn't they vote? We have been told they would not vote on the Tuesday following. Why was it they did not vote?—A. Well, sir, I heard a good many of them say that they were not going to the polls; and I think on two occasions I heard them, standing—I didn't make any stop on the streets at all, passing by—say, one in reply to another, "If I can't vote unless I vote under lead and powder I won't go to the polls." At that time there was a crowd of three or four men standing together, so I didn't get in the crowd ; just passed right on and never stopped in the street.

Q. The general effect was to keep them from voting then ?—A. It seems so.

Q. Do you know whether there was any combination or agreement among them not to vote ?—A. I do not. There was a bill that was printed and sent out first on Sunday morning by the authorities of the town certifying the desire to preserve the harmony and peace of the town ; that they could come up and vote, and on Monday, the 5th of November, there was another circular come out saying that they had prepared to protect every one at the polls that wanted to vote.

Q. That was the proclamation of Mr. Johnston, was it ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the colored people felt that if they were to be met with pistols they would not vote ; that was the feeling ?—A. Yes, sir ; they said they wouldn't trust no one, because they were shot down and killed on the 3d of November for nothing. They didn't listen. They said the men would pull out pistols and shoot them down, and after they were all that wouldn't bring them back. That was the talk among some of them.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. When this first began I understood you to say you were at Jones's drug-store ?—A. Yes, sir ; on the corner that fronts Market street.

Q. Did you get any closer up than that at any time ?—A. When they cried "murder" I stepped around on Main street right at the drug-store door.

Q. Then Jones's drug store opens into Market and Main streets ?—A. It has got a side door going out on Market street in the rear of the store, but his front door is on Market street.

Q. Now, where were you standing ?—A. Right at his door, on Main street.

Q. And when you heard the cry of murder, you stepped where ?—A. I stepped from around the backdoor, on Market street, to the front, on Main street.

Q. When you first heard it you were standing on Market street, and stepped around to Main ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You got no closer up than that ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, from there to Woolfolk & Blair's, where people were standing, is diagonally across Main ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far do you think it is from the front door of the drugstore to the door of Woolfolk & Blair's ?—A. I guess about sixty-five feet, running bias.

Q. Sixty-five feet ?—A. Yes, I guess it is about that.

Q. Let me see if you are not mistaken. Main street is sixty feet wide, isn't it ?—A. I don't know ; it may be sixty feet along there.

Q. Then Woolfolk & Blair's is right smartly up the street ?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Let me ask you now, right opposite Jones's drugstore is Hessberg's saloon, isn't it ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then next to Hessberg's saloon is a barber shop ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Next to the barber is Vass & Company ?—A. It is.

Q. Then comes Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair's office ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, it is four doors above the corner ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Jones' is right opposite the corner, on the other side of the street ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if the street is sixty feet wide it would make it further than sixty-five feet up to Blair's, wouldn't it?—A. Well, you take those three stores, from the center of that hall [indicating] back to here would contain the three stores.

Q. Do you mean the length of this room?—A. Yes, sir; from the center of the hall out there.

Q. You mean just outside the door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that is about sixty feet itself.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were the stores about the usual width?—A. Yes, sir; the barber shop is very narrow; I reckon that is as near as you can get at it unless you go and measure.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. That would make it about sixty feet across the front of those stores, from the corner of Hessberg's saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then add sixty feet to the width of the street—that would make something in the neighborhood of 100 feet, allowing for the diagonal line?—A. Well, it might be.

Q. Well, as near as you can come at it?—A. Yes; I said it was about 60 feet; it may be more than that; I don't say positively that it was that.

Q. You could hear what they were saying, could you?—A. Yes; could hear them talking; couldn't understand it.

Q. You heard a man crying murder, and heard a man trying to separate them?—A. I saw that; didn't hear it.

Q. You heard some man calling out shoot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any warning given before that command to shoot?—A. I did not.

Q. Didn't you hear some man say, "Get away! get away! get away?"—A. I did not, there was such a combustle right at that time. It might have been said; I didn't hear it.

Q. Didn't you swear before the grand jury you heard a voice say, "Get away! get away! or we will shoot?"—A. No, sir; I don't think I made that speech.

Q. Nothing like that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you did not appear before the committee of forty?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you made an affidavit at any time or anywhere about this matter before?—A. Mr. Boulden sent for me, and I had a talk with him, and made an affidavit before him.

Q. In what proceeding was that?—A. Well, it was stated as I have explained it.

Q. Well, explain it to me, please.—A. Mr. Boulden sent for me and was talking, and I told Mr. Boulden the shooting was done.

Q. I know; but what proceeding was that affidavit to be used in?—A. I don't know; it was not before the committee of forty.

Q. What was he going to do it?—A. I don't know; he didn't say.

Q. Did he swear you to it?—A. No, sir; we were just sitting down in his office talking.

Q. I understood you to say you made an affidavit—

The CHAIRMAN. I think he said Mr. Boulden was acting for the committee of forty, or arranging for it.

A. I think I had the conversation before the committee of forty met. I think it was; I am not certain.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. He wanted to ascertain what you would swear to, I suppose. He didn't take your affidavit?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many white people, as near as you could judge, were present when the fight was going on between Noel and Lawson?—A. It seemed to me at the time I saw them, probably there was gathered about twenty or thirty white people, and they were still coming.

Q. While the fist fight was still going on, before they were separated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many colored people were there then?—A. I suppose there was about not less than seventy-five or eighty boys and women and men standing in the gutter in front of them.

Q. The boys were in front, were they, and the women next to them, and the men in the rear?—A. It was just a general mix up amongst them.

Q. Well, you mentioned boys, women, and men, as though the men were in the rear. Were the boys and women taking part in the fight or separating them?—A. They were standing, so far as I know, looking on.

Q. Where were they standing, in the front part of the crowd or in the rear?—A. They were standing in the street, all mixed up together.

Q. Were there any women mixed up in the fight?—A. They were all mixed up in the crowd.

Q. Boys there, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How big were the boys?—A. Different sizes.

Q. Any women there with sucking babies in their arms?—A. Oh, no, sir; I didn't see any with sucking babies in their arms.

Q. You didn't?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many men do you think there were?—A. I don't know. In a case of that kind it would be hard to say how many there was.

Q. It would be about as easy to say as it would be to judge of the numbers altogether, and your eyes flashed over them, I suppose, and you saw who they were, and the character of the men, size, and so on?—A. I could not say how many men there were.

Q. Could you give us any impression—the best of your knowledge? Was half of the crowd men?—A. No, sir; I don't think half of the crowd was men at that time, but they kept coming, and probably before the crowd dispersed there might have been half of the crowd men.

Q. There might have been half of the crowd men?—A. Yes, sir; or more, I don't know.

Q. When the firing took place, I mean the general firing, did you notice how many colored men were present then?—A. There was a great many colored men, women, and children. They kept gathering until they commenced shooting.

Q. You will bring in the women and children.—A. Yes; both the white and colored.

Q. Can you tell us all the colored women's names who were there?—A. No, sir; I cannot.

Q. You cannot mention a single woman. You knew a great many in town, didn't you?—A. I did not.

Q. Can you tell us of any little children who were there?—A. There was so many, you know, in the excitement that I couldn't name no one in particular now.

Q. That's just what I supposed. But you are very particular and positive on some things and very vague on the balance.—A. I am only positive on what I saw, and that's all—not adding nor taking away.

Q. Not adding to nor taking from it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, you cannot give us any idea how many men there were when this firing commenced?—A. No, sir; I cannot.

Q. Nor whether the men were in front, or whether the women or children were in front?—A. There was a general mixture among all. They all gathered.

Q. It is natural, is it not, when there is a fuss of that sort, when there is any danger apprehended that women and children stay in the rear?—

A. I would suppose so, but it didn't seem they thought that it would be any fuss. The women pushed up to see. Anything like that raises any one's curiosity, and the children pushed to see.

Q. They knew that there was a fight going on, didn't they?—A. Of course they knew it was a fight when they heard the cry.

Q. And they saw pistols as well as anybody else?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw a pistol, but you were rather down street. Now did the women and children press up where they saw those pistols displayed?—A. Yes, sir; they went up there.

Q. Rushed right up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The men did, too, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you heard nobody give any warning?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear any one give any warning.

Q. Did you see some men though trying to appease the crowd—to get them to disperse?—A. I saw Bob Adams and after a while Walter Withers come up—two colored policemen.

Q. Did you see Mr. Freeman, a white policeman?—A. No, sir; I didn't see him.

Q. Did you see Mr. Corbin?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor Mr. Peter Booth?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor Captain Oliver?—A. I did not.

Q. Nor Mr. Robinson, nor any white man trying to make peace—you didn't see that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, when the firing commenced I understand you to say you stepped back around into Market street?—A. No, sir; I didn't say that.

Q. What did you say?—A. I say I heard firing; I was standing right at the door or just below, and I opened the door and stepped inside and stood at a window and looked out until they got down to the corner of the market.

Q. How long did the firing last?—A. I suppose about three minutes.

Q. About three minutes?—A. I reckon that.

Q. Did you go out on the street after it was all over?—A. I went out through the door in the rear part of the store and made straight for home; never looked back.

Q. You struck right for the old fire-place, did you?—A. I did, and staid there.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live on Franklin street, just above the depot, down towards the fair-grounds.

Q. On the south side of the river?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say the black people made no resistance at all?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any make any resistance at all.

Q. Did you see any with weapons?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you hear any pistol firing from among the colored people?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see any bullet marks on the walls of the houses in the rear of where the white people stood?—A. I saw some afterwards.

Q. Whereabouts did you see them?—A. I saw, I think, two bullet holes on the walls of Mr. Averitt and White's store, on North Market street, right at the corner of Mr. J. A. Nicholas'.

Q. Did you see any on Hessberg's?—A. I did not.

Q. Nor on the barber shop?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor on Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. I didn't see these until the other day, and they were shooting immediately where the bullet holes were.

Q. You saw some bullet holes then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Mr. Holland when he was shot?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see Mr. Seward when he was shot?—A. No, sir.

Q. The butcher—you know him, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go about the polls the day of the election, Tuesday afterwards?—A. I did not. Didn't go up to see or anything.

Q. From what you heard about the preparations made by the mayor and other citizens who joined with him, don't you think you could have voted if you wanted to?—A. Well, probably I might, but I didn't have any mind to, my heart was full of sorrow, and I didn't feel like talking.

Q. Yes; but you must remember that your country might need your vote for the preservation of your liberties, didn't you feel that?—A. Yes; I had always got out up to that day.

Q. Well, why couldn't you get out that day—the time of trouble is the time when protection is most needed?—A. In time of peace a man should prepare for war.

Q. Yes.—A. But in time of batt'e is no time to prepare.

Q. But when the war is over a man ought to go to works of peace, hadn't he?—A. That is so.

Q. Well, the war ended Saturday, didn't it?—A. I don't know; it might.

Q. There had been nobody killed since that, had there?—A. Men were armed Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday.

Q. They were keeping the peace in the street, were they not?—A. They say they were.

Q. Don't you know they were there by the authority of the mayor?—A. By the authority of the mayor?

Q. Yes; and the sergeant of the city?—A. I don't know; they might.

Q. Did you see any men parading the streets on Sunday, except those who had been assigned to keep order in the town?—A. I didn't go on the streets on Sunday. I didn't leave my house until Monday.

Q. You said you saw men armed on Sunday. Where did you see them?—A. No, I saw them Monday.

Q. Where did you see them Monday?—A. On Main street.

Q. Were there any except those who had been assigned to keep the peace?—A. I don't know who was assigned.

Q. Tell us who you saw with guns, and then we can tell whether they were assigned or not.—A. It may be those that had been assigned to keep order with arms.

Q. Did they say anything to interrupt anybody?—A. I don't know; they didn't interrupt me; I didn't stay on the street long enough for them.

Q. Didn't you know the gentlemen who had arms?—A. I knew some of them that were armed to keep the peace.

Q. How did it come that there was such a general and unanimous understanding among the colored people that they were not to vote?—A. I am not able to answer that.

Q. Did you get orders from somewhere not to vote?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Didn't word come down from among your leaders not to vote?—A. No, sir; if it had I would say it. It did not reach my ears.

Q. But every one you saw, with whom you talked, said he was not going to vote.—A? Yes, sir.

Q. Now, it is a little strange they should have been so unanimous about it, isn't it?—A. I don't know sir. When anything happened as certain as that did, and two or three deaths in the midst of it, why it shock anybody, and make them come very quick to the conclusion not to go in the crowd. That's the only account I can give of it. After the killing of these men on Saturday they thought they would be in danger, probably, to go to the polls. I could not construe it for anything else, though I don't know it—can't say it was so.

Q. Well, the people you voted with, the colored people and Readjusters, and Republicans and so on, were in a large majority in the town, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, don't you think if you had had the proper manhood, you could have gone up and voted and the majority could have protected themselves?—A. I will tell you this, if there hadn't been any shooting done we would have went to the polls as usual and cast our ballot, perhaps one and all, and not do it in a boasting way either.

Q. Of course.—A. But after that occurred, it is just like you killed a leader of wild geese, then the army is demoralized. If you kill your general or cut down your flag the company is demoralized. I have been in the army waiting on my young masters.

Q. Were these men who were killed leaders or generals of the party?—A. No, sir. They didn't kill the leaders; they killed those that was innocent.

Q. Don't you think, Mr. Barksdale, that a proper manhood and a proper appreciation of that great right of suffrage would have made you all go up and put in your votes that day, if your people had been capable of appreciating that privilege?—A. I will answer your question in this way—probably it may meet the question that you ask me. I believe that all of them that had been voting thought conscientiously what they were voting for, and felt it was their right and privilege to do so, but I don't believe—I don't know, sir; I aint speaking for a possible thing; I heard it a comment among them—I don't believe if they had sent an army down there to command them up they would more than got them to go to the polls and vote.

Q. You don't believe they could have got them up with an army?—A. I don't believe they could have more than got them.

Q. That don't answer my question.—A. Well.

Q. Do you believe it is right to give the people the right of suffrage who don't appreciate it more than that?—A. Yes, sir; I believe it is right to give them the right and protect them in doing so.

Q. And have a standing army?—A. No, sir.

Q. How protect them?—A. Peace and harmony.

Q. Well, if any fight occurs before the election they get scared and keep from going up on the day of election. Do you think that is proper appreciation? Now, there was every effort with the white people to have them vote on the day of the election, wasn't there?—A. Yes, sir; I looked upon that offer just in this way. I may be wrong. You are more able to judge it, probably, than I am. It is too late for you to offer me a compromise after you have wounded me or killed me.

Q. Compromise would do no good?—A. No, sir; in that respect. Now, that seemed to be the general feeling among them—that they would not listen to any one—was not going up there.

Q. Now, let us look at it a little. The row occurred on Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. It was stopped in a few moments after it begun. There was no more firing nor any more violence. The city authorities all belonged to your party, and the leading citizens among the Democrats united with them?—A. They didn't all belong to the Readjusters.

Q. Well, the bulk of them did. The mayor, who had control of the peace of your city, was your man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The sergeant of the town was your man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The majority of the police were your men, and the leading Democratic citizens united with the mayor and the sergeant and the other authorities of the town to assure you that you should be protected?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The governor of your State, who is of your party, sent a military company to see that you were protected, didn't he?—A. Yes, sir. They sent a company there. I don't know whether they were sent to protect.

Q. Well, he certainly didn't send it there to assail his own party, did he?—A. If you were right he sent them there to assail any that would violate the law.

Q. Well, that was in your behalf, but with all that, with both parties, the Democrats, the town authorities, and troops there, you would not go to vote because you were afraid?—A. Well, that was so.

Q. Now the question comes back ought a man who is afraid to vote under those circumstances to have the right of suffrage?—A. If this proclamation had been by the mayor, governor, and sheriff, and all the leading Democrats saying before the election, we shall have peace and we shall see if there is any conspiracy here and no shooting done, we could have had general harmony and peace as it has always been, but all this took place after the killing was done.

Q. Well, it couldn't take place before the killing.—A. It would not amount to anything after they killed.

Q. The election was still to come, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say these men who were shot were all peaceable men?—A. They were.

Q. Do you know them all?—A. Yes, sir; I know three of them.

Q. You don't know what part they took in the fight that day?—A. I don't think they took any part; I don't know.

Q. A peaceable man may sometimes violate the peace as well as others, may he not?—A. A peaceable man sometimes standing in a crowd may get hit.

Q. You have heard the story of Tray, haven't you? He was a very good dog, but he got into bad company. These men were in the midst of that disturbance, weren't they, whether they were doing anything or not?—A. They were in the midst of the colored people, standing there.

Q. Did you see Jerry Smith after he was dead?—A. I did; I didn't go to him, though.

Q. Did you see him shot?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know who shot him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you were very near. If you were standing on the corner there of Jones's drug store you were very near to where Jerry Smith was shot, wasn't you?—A. I was in the store, and after the shooting was over I came out the back door in the rear part of the store, and he was lying on the corner on his face, and men were gathered around, and I didn't go near him; I went right straight home.

Q. You were looking out of the window right across towards Hessberg's?—A. Yes, sir; was looking out of the window. After the first volley of pistols I opened the door and stood inside looking out of the window; looking at them shooting, until they got to the corner of Market.

Q. One minute. How far up on the other side could you see from the window?—A. I could see up above Woolfcock & Blair's.

Q. Could you see the men shooting who shot about the time you suppose Jerry was killed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you see any men on the sidewalk opposite you shooting towards where Jerry was found?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Captain Graves kill anybody that day?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see Mr. Cabell rescuing some colored man there in front of you?—A. No, sir; I didn't see Colonel Cabell but once during the shooting; after the shooting I saw him go around the market square; I thought he was trying to preserve peace; that was what I thought. I was inside the door. As soon as they passed the door going down Main street I slipped out and went on home; that's all I saw of him.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I will ask you if some of the colored people did not go away for good after this shooting?—A. From Danville?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did they stay away? Have they come back yet?—A. I don't know. Some of them have not come back.

Q. Has Adams, who testified here, gone away to stay? Has he left the town, or Hense Lawson?—A. Hense Lawson; no, sir; he has not gone; nor neither has Davis Lewellyn.

Q. When this colored crowd of men, women, and children were there did they have any defense whatever, any mode of protecting themselves?—A. I did not see any.

Q. Senator Vance seemed to think they did not show spirit. Suppose they had had pistols and killed the three men who made the attack, would you think they were justified in that?—A. I would not, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not that would have been the legal right of that crowd to have prevented the men who had been the assailants? Do you know that?—A. I don't exactly understand it, but if you will let me answer I will give probably what may be an answer to your question.

Q. Well.—A. I think all good citizens, law-abiding men, when they see any two men fighting not to encourage it, but to disperse it and to arrest them; and I asked Mr. Boulden if there was not white men and colored in Danville to arrest Hense Lawson and Noel and help carry them before the justice of the peace.

Q. But suppose three armed men come up to an unarmed black man, and the others standing by tried first peaceably to separate them, but finding that they could not do that, and the only way they could go about to put a stop to this attack upon Lawson was to kill these men who had arms in their hands, what would you say to that? Would that be right or wrong?—A. To my judgment, that would be wrong.

Q. That was your feeling?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you saw no effort of this kind except the effort of the policemen to separate the two that were fighting?—A. That's all I saw.

Q. Well, Senator Vance seems to inquire whether you had the spirit of freemen when you would not go up to vote on the day of election, three days afterwards. Was that because you believed your vote would be ineffective after your people had been frightened?—A. Yes, sir; it was.

Q. Had you registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had the colored people registered generally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They expected to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had a majority in that region, in Danville, of five hundred?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. But in consequence of the killing of these men and the excitement you say you did not vote; you just felt it was no use to vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you had gone there armed, as you ought to have been armed—as you say the white men were armed—armed to vote, to assert your right to vote as freemen, would it not, in your judgment, have created a riot?—A. Undoubtedly, I think it would.

Q. Yes, if the colored people had gone——

Mr. VANCE. Nobody said the white people went to the polls with arms.

Mr. LAPHAM. The only ones who have been examined said they were armed. Mr. Graves said he was armed, as I understood him.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You knew that these men were armed on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Now, I will ask you if the men who were called into the police force were not the men who were prominent in the shooting many of them?—A. Some of them were.

Q. Were any colored people mustered into that force for the protection of the town?—A. None but the two policemen, Adams and Withers.

Q. No additional colored people armed?—A. No, sir.

Q. The only people who were armed were the men who had been on the side of the people who shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the people who were called in to protect you were the men that shot you; was not that the point?—A. Yes, sir; that's the point we looked at.

Q. Then, suppose you had gone there with arms in your hands to assert your right as freemen, as you had a right to do, would not that have precipitated a fight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in that fight the colored people would have been at a great disadvantage, would they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why would they have been at a disadvantage?—A. First, because the colored folks had no arms; and if they had attempted such a thing, I believe, before we could have got any protection whatever, the white folks could have killed the last one. That's my conviction about it.

Q. Is there a colored military company in Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that called out?—A. No, sir.

Q. But the Danville Grays, a white company, was called out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the colored people there skilled in the use of arms, pistols, &c.?—A. Some of them are; those that hunt a good deal in the winter.

Q. They hunt with muskets, but how is it with pistols; are they accustomed to the use of them?—A. I don't know; I never saw any using pistols.

Q. The white people generally are accustomed to the use of arms, are they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suppose most of the white people thirty or forty years old served as soldiers, did they not, in the Confederate army?—A. I guess they did.

Q. Were you living there at the time of the war?—A. I was sent there in 1850.

Q. Did the white people go away pretty much in Danville into the war?—A. Yes, sir; pretty much all of them went to the war.

Q. Where were you during that time?—A. I was living at Danville, at the hotel.

Q. During the war were not the larger majority of the men of Danville colored people?—A. Yes, sir; there was a majority, I think, then probably colored; not much. Danville was very small then and the inhabitants was very small.

Q. Well, take the county. The white men went into the army and the colored people were left at home, was not that the general way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The majority of the people in the county in which you lived, Pittsylvania County, are black people, are they not, and always have been?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during the war the black men remained there at home and the white people had gone into the army?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any disturbances, or riots, or murders, or crimes of that kind committed during the war, that you know of, by black people?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Any white women outraged or any houses burned?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any insurrection or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir; we remained quiet and peaceful at home and served our masters and mistresses.

Q. Were you a slave then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You served your masters and mistresses until the war was over?—A. Even as the freedom came to our mouths saying you are free; didn't make no resistance then.

Q. And then you voted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has there been any turbulence or riots among the colored people since that time? I don't mean any individual murder or wrong, but any riots or insurrections or violence.—A. I remember, I think it was in 1866 or 1870, that there was a disturbance amongst some of them; a fire broke out there, and there was sixty colored men had charge of the engine there—worked with a lever pump—and one of the members, I think, had been working all night trying to put the fire out, and some of the people in moving goods dropped a pair of shoes, and this man going on picked them up, and the policeman then arrested him, and he sent word around to the company that they had put him in jail for picking up a pair of shoes out of the street; and at that time the company was working all night; and they gave them whisky to drink, and they went up to the jail to see about it, and Mr. Henry Wooding, dead and gone, was mayor of the city then, and he sent word down for them all to disperse, and he would look after the matter. He did so after breakfast, I think, and turned the man out; at that time some of them had been drinking whisky.

Q. Some of the colored people?—A. Yes, sir; and the white folks together, and they got mad, and it seemed like they were about to get up a row, but it didn't result in anything.

Q. That's the only case you recollect of a threatened riot?—A. I think once since that; I don't know how it came about; I had to go away the very Saturday to North Carolina to ordain a young man for a minister, and there was some little row got up then, and the company of Danville Grays—I believe Captain Robinson was captain of them then—was called out to stop the fuss, but he can tell more about that than I can. I got back Sunday evening and heard there had been a disturbance, and one of the young men got bayoneted, but he got over it and got well. That is the only disturbance, and I think that was about ten years ago.

Q. That was in 1871, was it?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. That was not a contest between blacks and whites that grew out of the picking up of that shoe, was it?—A. Yes, sir; the first one I remember very well.

Q. I will ask you whether the colored people in your region are not a peaceable, law-abiding, quiet set of people?—A. They are so far as I know; of course, you know among all classes there is some few ruffians; some that don't care what they do, and get into trouble. But take it as a general thing among the general class of the colored folks who know what is right, everything is peaceable, quiet, and respectable.

Q. What kind of a man is Lawson? Do you know him personally?—A. Yes; I know him when I see him. He always staid at Mr. Jerry Nicholas' bar-room—tended bar there.

Q. Was he a turbulent man, a violent man?—A. Not that I know of; I have never seen it.

Q. Did you ever hear of him seeking quarrels and bullying, being insolent?—A. No, sir. I think he had a fight there once with a gentleman on the street.

Q. Was that with Noel?—A. No, sir. I believe the year before last; I don't know.

Q. You don't know whether he is a man of turbulent and violent manner?—A. No, sir; I don't.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. By what authority do you tell Senator Sherman that the colored folks had no arms?—A. I told him that if they had them I didn't see any.

Q. I don't mean in the fight, but generally?—A. I didn't tell him they didn't have any arms. I said I saw them with guns a hunting; some of these old muskets. I never saw them practicing with pistols. [To the Chairman.] I think that was the substance of your question.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, you said you never saw them with pistols, but you saw them with guns.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Now, you seem to be a just man. I want to ask you if there is not a great difference in behavior between the older black people, who were slaves, and the new generation?—A. Well, sir, there is among some of them. It seems that this day and time, as this nineteenth century draw nigh, that even the rising generation, both white and colored, they seem to be rather disposed to have a row sometimes.

Q. I will ask you directly if the older colored people that were slaves are not more industrious and more orderly than the new generation of the colored people?—A. I will answer that to the best of my ability. I don't know for certain, but I find all the old colored folks that were slaves they seem to try to attend to their business, and make an honest living as near as they can.

Q. They don't idle on the streets so much, do they?—A. No, sir.

Q. They don't dress so much and smoke as many cigars and put on airs so much as the new generation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, as a general rule, I will ask you if the disposition of the white people, especially those that used to be your masters, is not kindly toward the colored people?—A. Kindly towards them?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes; some of them is.

Q. Isn't it the general rule that you receive more kindness from that class than you do from those who didn't own you or have anything to do with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is true, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you find that among the old slave-owners there is rather an affection for their old slaves?—A. Well, some of them have and some have not.

Q. What is the general rule, do you think?—A. I don't know. I couldn't answer for the general rule of the county nor the State.

Q. Well, your observation?—A. Around about Danville we sees that they are rather respectful to their old slaves, and treat them with respect.

Q. Now, up to this time you had never been interrupted in your right to vote in Danville, had you?—A. No, sir.

Q. And your people had voted freely up to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I will ask you, in all the time since you have had the right to vote, if the administration of the State and of the city of Danville was not Democratic?—A. The State has always, I think, gone Democratic, but Danville had always gone Republican or Coalitionist, whatever it was called.

Q. That is of late years, isn't it?—A. That has been for the last fourteen years.

Q. For the last fourteen years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not the mayor you spoke of, Mr. Woodin, a Democrat?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Wasn't Mayor Cole a Democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wasn't Mayor Luck a Democrat?—A. Yes, sir; I think he was. He accepted of the nomination for the Coalition party, or Republican party.

Q. Wasn't Mayor Ayres a Democrat?—A. He was.

Q. Now, that's four Democratic mayors you have counted back?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during all their administration no effort was made to keep you from voting as you pleased, was there?—A. No, sir; there wasn't.

Q. Then, as a general thing, you would not charge that the Democratic party has tried to interfere with the right of suffrage in Danville?—A. I couldn't charge the mayor with that at all.

Q. I mean you could not charge the authorities, those in power, with interfering with your right of suffrage?—A. Well, sir, that's a question I should not like to answer unless it was necessary for me to do so, for there is two sides to the question.

Q. It is a plain question. I will ask you if before this time you had any reason to believe that the Democratic authorities wanted to keep you all from voting freely in Virginia and in the city of Danville?—A. Well, you name the mayors of the city that were Democrats.

Q. I mean those who were in authority in the State and in the city government?—A. Well, there was no disposition by them, but when a riot like that got up the mayor is powerless; he couldn't do any more than any one else. They took possession of the city.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have said to Senator Vance that among some of the old masters and their former slaves the feeling was yet respectful and kindly. I will ask you now whether there is not among the young white men, who have grown up since the war, a feeling of great bitterness against the colored people; a disposition to insult them whenever they can, call them "niggers," and say offensive phrases, terms of reproach?—A. Yes, sir; that has been pretty much so.

Q. What is the common way of addressing your people; how do they call them?—A. Well, sir; they call us “niggers;” very seldom they say colored men, though all the white people there treat me with respect.

Q. They treat you respectfully because you are a clergyman?—A. I don’t know that they do for that.

Q. How do the young men—we have had several of them examined as witnesses—how do they generally speak of the colored people?—A. What, the witnesses you have had here?

Q. No, I speak of the young men generally; don’t they call them “damn niggers”?—A. If they get mad with them they call them “damn niggers” directly, don’t hesitate about that.

Q. And constant insulting expressions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there not a feeling of repugnance among the whites of Virginia against the colored people voting?—A. I only judge from this last disturbance in the election that it were. That is, that is my opinion, not that I know any personally.

Q. Have there been any colored people killed since the 3d of November last in Danville; and, if so, who are they?—A. There was one killed since that by a policeman.

Q. A white policeman?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, don’t go into particulars, but have there been any others?—A. There was one killed just the other side of Fall Creek, up there, by some man who brought tobacco there.

Q. Have there been any other cases of homicide of colored people, either by colored people or by white people? Don’t go into particulars.

(Mr. Vance objected, unless he had a right to cross-examine.)

The CHAIRMAN. I will not press it.

Q. How long since was the poll-tax in Virginia repealed; November, 1882?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then before that time you had to pay a poll-tax before you voted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What party passed that bill?—A. They say the Democratic party passed that bill.

Q. Repealing the poll-tax?—A. No, sir; the Readjusters passed that bill.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You say when the young white boys get mad, they speak of the colored people as “dam niggers”?—A. Yes, sir; some of them do.

Q. I will ask you whether, when the colored men get mad at each other, they don’t call one another “dam niggers”?—A. I guess they do. They never use the expression, though, where I am.

ALBERT CALLOWAY sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Between nine and ten years.

Q. Are you a married or a single man?—A. I am married.

Q. How much family have you?—A. Nothing but a wife.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November?—A. I was on Main street, right in front of Woolfolk & Blair’s office.

Q. Tell the committee what you heard and saw, in your own way.—A. I was near about the middle-way of Main street, starting home, and I heard this fellow, Nat Lawson, hollering murder, and it called my attention, and I run up to see what was the matter, and I came upon Mr. Noel and Hense Lawson, who was in a fight. I goes up as close to them as I could get without touching them, and when I got up there Mr. Lea was there, and I forget the other gentleman’s name, but he and Mr. Lea was standing there with pistols in their hands, and says, "No man touch." I run up and spoke the very same words; says, "No, don't nobody touch. There aint but two men fighting, and let them fight." He says, "Stand back, stand back," and I spoke the same words. I says, "Yes, everybody stand back, and let them have a fair fight." I says, "Mr. Noel will whip him anyway. It is a fair fight and he is whipping him, too." At that time Bob Adams came down, the policeman, and he says "Peace here, gentlemen; this won't do, this won't do." Some person spoke to him. I don't know whether it was Mr. Lea or not; he says, "Go away, you aint going to rule this town; you niggers can't rule this town;" and he says, "Well, gentlemen, I can't help it, you must stop it." Bob runs up and collars them both; jerks them apart. While he was parting them there was a colored fellow run up—I think his name was Adams, I don't know—he runs up and grabs Mr. Lea's wrist, so fashion [indicating].

Q. What did Lea have in his hand?—A. He had a pistol, and in pulling Mr. Lea, him and Mr. Lea both fell on their hands, and this fellow Adams jumps up and run. He run in the straight direction that the man was found dead. He run straight in that direction for about 20 feet, and then as he went in that direction about 20 feet he made a short turn and went right straight back to the same side of the street, right front of Mr. Averett's shoe store. I says to myself, "Yes, you are certainly shot, because Mr. Lea couldn't have missed you."

Q. Did Lea shoot?—A. Oh, he shot right at him. Yes, he will own that himself, I reckon. He shot right at him. I says to myself, "You are certainly shot in the back." Presently I saw Adams in the crowd again coming back, and to tell some colored people, "Yonder is the man that shot at me," and at that time Mr. Booth (I think Mr. Booth) come, and Mr. Jeff. Corbin come right to me and says, "You all get off the street; get off the street; don't be raising all this disturbance here." I says, "All right." I says, "In the first place there aint no person doing anything." I says, "There wasn't no use of all this trouble; there was nobody fighting but two men, one colored and one white, and the white man whipped him." He says, "But you all make such a fuss here, and furthermore," he says, "I am a friend to you and you don't know what you are doing."

Q. Who said that?—A. Mr. Corbin. He says, "I am a friend to your color, and you all get off the street. You don't know what you are doing." And Mr. Freeman came to me and says, "You all get off the street." I says, "Why, Mr. Freeman, you aint fair." He says, "What's the matter?" I says, "The colored people standing on the middle of the street and the white people on the pavement, and you are all on one side and none on the other." I says, "You make everybody go away; clean off the sidewalk opposite;" and then he says, "I can't do it;" and I says, "That's so; I believe you are doing all you can." I says, "Well, I will go," and I started and met Mr. Booth. He says the same words "You all get off the street." I says, "All right; if that will do any good, I will leave;" and he says, "There's nothing but two men fighting, and one had whipped the other, and that is all there is about it." Then I goes on five or ten yards further. I came upon Mr. Holland, the man that got shot; I came upon him, and he asked me, "What's the matter down there—all that fuss?" I says, "Nothing in the world, but just two men fighting." He says, "Who are they?" I told him Hense Lawson and Mr. Noel, and Mr. Noel whipped him, and that is all about it. He says, "What in the world is that to make such a great excitement?" I says, "I can't give an account of it; that I was in it and I was one more, and now I am going away out of the thing." He says, "It's a pity all that fuss down there for nothing;" and the time he spoke that word the shooting commenced.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. From where?—A. Right from the very spot I left them at—right in front of Woolfolk & Blair's.

Q. From whom?—A. Oh, from the white people.

Q. Shooting into the crowd of black people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the time that Holland got shot?—A. Yes, sir; he got shot then. I am most willing to take my Bible oath that he was not in it, and I am most willing to take a Bible oath he didn't shoot, according to the appearance; the way he talked to me, I don't believe he had any idea of shooting at all.

Q. And he was shot?—A. Yes, sir; he was shot, but I don't believe he was in it, and I believe he was shot by the white people on the street, because me and him was talking together, and from his appearance I don't think he had any idea of shooting, and then when the firing commenced of course I done the best I could for myself. I run. I am a pretty swift runner, too.

Q. Didn't the colored people all run?—A. Oh, yes; of course they run; they run in every direction.

Q. Did you see any firing from the colored people at the whites?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. Did you see any colored people with arms?—A. Yes, sir; a young man who was here yesterday, by the name of Davis Lewellyn.

Q. The one that had the white-handled pistol?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was one that had a white-handled pistol. I think he had it in his pocket.

Q. Is that the only instance?—A. That is the only one, and I don't believe I would be swearing to anything wrong if I was to swear there was not more than six pistols in the crowd. I don't believe there was that.

Q. Did he use that pistol, so far as you saw?—A. Not to my knowing. Of course, when I left him he didn't seem to have any idea of using it.

Q. Where were the white people who fired?—A. At the time they fired I reckon most of them were off the pavement, standing on the edge of the gutter.

Q. Were they in a line?—A. Yes, sir; in a line.

Q. How many of them?—A. How many when they shot?

Q. How many when they first fired?—A. After they first shot, you understand?

Q. Yes; after Lea shot; I don't mean that. When the general firing first commenced.—A. Oh, well, I couldn't tell that.

Q. You can tell something about it. How many men were in line when they fired the first volley from their pistols?—A. How many were there?

Q. Yes. I mean the white people who had pistols.—A. I reckon there was one hundred or so. There might be more, but, of course, I am satisfied of that.

Q. How did they hold their pistols; did you notice that?—A. I reckon there was some forty or fifty pistols were up in their hands, and some had their pistols in their hands and swinging down, and a great portion didn't have them in sight if they had them.

Q. Those holding their pistols up, were they supporting their right hand with their left? Did you see them in that position?—A. I was not noticing. The fact of the business, if I was to tell the truth——

Q. Did they fire at the colored people as they ran?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did they follow them?—A. Well, they went across Main street to the corner of Market.

Q. They took possession of the street?—A. Oh, the colored people got out of the way.

Q. Did the colored people return at all?—A. I don't know; from the appearance I don't think they did.

Q. You didn't return?—A. Oh, myself? No; bless you; I didn't.

Q. Which way did you go?—A. I went up Main street to the corner of Mr. Wiseman's, and went around the next street, which is called Patton street.

Q. You ran to get out of the way of the firing?—A. Yes, sir; I didn't do anything else.

Q. Did you have any arms?—A. No, sir; I haven't had one for fifteen years, and I lost that possum hunting, and I didn't have any use for that when I was hunting; haven't had another to this day.

Q. Well, you didn't have any this day?—A. No, sir; no use for a pistol at all.

Q. Mr. Taylor says before there was any firing there he had a talk with you, and that his advice to you was to leave and advise your friends to leave, and that you turned to a young negro that was with you, and you and he turned and went up street.—A. Mr. Taylor?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, that is the man. I knew Mr. Taylor.

Q. Did you see the man who was standing there with Lea when Noel and Lawson were fighting?—A. Yes; of course.

Q. Had he a pistol?—A. Yes, sir; I said that both of them had.

Q. That is the man I referred to.—A. Oh, well, then, that makes the first time that ever I had any talk with him in my life. I think it was on Monday afterwards.

Q. Did you have any talk with him that day?—A. No, sir; he met me on the street afterwards Monday. He called my name, and he says——

Q. I don't ask for that now. You had no talk with him there on the ground?—A. No, sir; I spoke to Mr. Corbin and Mr. Booth; that is what I said; I said to them about leaving. That is all.

Q. Did you say to Taylor, "I have done all I could to get those negroes to go away and I can't do it?"—A. I didn't speak to him that day.

Q. Then you didn't say that to him, did you?—A. I didn't speak to him that day.

Q. Now, when those men were separated—the men who were fighting—was there any occasion, so far as you saw, for any further violence there?—A. Not a bit.

Q. Was the attitude of the colored people threatening at all?—A. Oh, no, sir. I say I never got excited myself.

Q. Were the colored people generally excited; were they not there for curiosity, merely to see the fight?—A. About the place where this fighting commenced, you can go there this coming Saturday and see this same crowd in less than 20 yards of the spot.

Q. What kind of people were they?—A. Well, it was a market place.

Q. Were they men, women, and children?—A. Oh, they was all together, men, women, and children.

Q. The whites were in no danger from them, were they?—A. I am satisfied they were not, although they might have been, but I am satisfied they were not.

Q. If they had intended anything wrong when they were fired on they would have fired back, wouldn't they?—A. If they had been like me they would, if they had anything to fire with.

Q. Instead of that they run?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The whole crowd run?—A. I think they did. I don't know. The last I saw of them I think the majority of them was doing the same thing I was, and I was stepping.

Q. You think you got ahead?—A. Oh, I run fast when I start, especially when I am frightened.

Q. Did you vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it your intention to vote?—A. That is what I registered for; yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you vote?—A. Well, I thought to myself I was not safe in doing so after the fuss got up.

Q. You felt that it was not safe for you to go to the polls and vote on election day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the reason you stayed away?—A. That is the only reason.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You say when the trouble begun you were about in the middle of the street, in front of Woolfolk & Blair's office.—A. When they commenced fighting?

Q. When the trouble begun, whatever it was.—A. I went there when they first commenced. I was about midway of the street, and went as close as I could get without touching them.

Q. How many white people were there then?—A. At the present time?

Q. Yes; before any lick was struck.—A. When I got to them I reckon there was between twenty-five and thirty, I reckon, that got there the time I did.

Q. Before any lick was struck?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. Well, that was my question.—A. Before any lick was struck, I don't know. I wasn't there myself.

Q. They were fighting then when you came up?—A. Yes, sir; my attention was called, as I said, by the men hollering murder.

Q. The white people were on the sidewalk, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; when I got there.

Q. And the colored people were in the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got up as close as you could?—A. Yes, sir; without putting my hands on them.

Q. Then there were a good many colored people in the street also, as you could not get further than the middle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many colored people should you think were there?—A. When I got up to them, I should reckon it was between thirty and forty when I got there.

Q. How many of them were women?—A. Oh, I couldn't tell that. I could guess at it.

Q. Well, the best that you can do.—A. I suppose women that was doing the same thing I was, that was looking—I reckon four or five.

Q. How many that were not doing the same thing you were?—A. I couldn't tell that.

Q. There were some there that were doing differently.—A. Were doing what differently?

Q. Were not doing just like you were?—A. Plenty of them; it was market; I couldn't tell what every man is looking at in Danville.

Q. How many children did you say there were there at that time?—A. I couldn't tell that either, because that is something I wasn't satisfied about. If I had known I was to be called up I would have counted everybody there.

Q. Well, you have told us how many men and how many women; now guess at the children.—A. I reckon about fifty of them.

Q. There was only about forty or fifty colored people altogether, and five of them were women and fifty children.—A. I didn't say that. I said I didn't know how many there was. I thought there was between forty and fifty.

Q. Now you say fifty children, boys.—A. I was speaking about men, and now I am speaking about children. Take the whole crowd, men, women, and children, all was between seventy-five or eighty, and about fifty children, I reckon. The street full of children and boys; they seemed to be anxious to see the fight.

Q. Well, it wasn't Hense Lawson that cried murder, was it?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was not?—A. No, sir, I don't think he did.

Q. Had anybody struck Nat?—A. I couldn't tell only when I saw him, he was going running hollering "murder."

Q. Was he a brother or any kin to Hense Lawson?—A. I will not swear whether he is his kin or not, he is not brother.

Q. Did you see any wounds on him?—A. On the one that was hollering murder?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I never noticed to see anything particular about him, and I only thought he was scared because the two men was fighting, scared more than anything else.

Q. Who was it you first heard say, "No man must touch"?—A. The first? I couldn't tell who the first was, but I know he did say so.

Q. Who did say so?—A. Mr. Lea and myself.

Q. And you united with him?—A. Yes, I spoke near the same words. I said, "No, don't nobody touch him. Let them have a fair fight;" and I would say so now if it was done over again. I wanted everything done right and done just and done fair.

Q. After it was over, you repeated the same thing, didn't you? You thought it was a fair fight?—A. I said it a dozen times, I believe. I told Mr. Hatcher so.

Q. Now, who did you see trying to keep the peace; Mr. Booth, I believe, you mentioned?—A. Yes, sir; he came and told me, met me as I was going away, he says, "You all get off the street; get off the street." I says, "Well, sir, I will do so." He spoke to me and I says, "I will go;" and I goes on and met Mr. Holland, the man that got shot. He asked me, "What in the world was the matter?" I says, "There aint nothing but only two men fighting, a colored man and a white man, and the white man whipped."

Q. They had been separated then, hadn't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now where was Mr. Holland standing when he was shot?—A. I couldn't tell that.

Q. Was he close by you?—A. From the time they say he was shot, I suppose he hadn't got but very few steps from where I left him.

Q. You didn't see him when he was shot?—A. No; I just turned my back on him. When I was talking with him he was as sound as you are.

Q. Where did you meet him?—A. May be 50 or 60 yards from the office.

Q. When you walked, did you go up or down street?—A. Up the street.

Q. And you met him coming down?—A. He was standing; I came right to him.

Q. When you and he separated, did you move off and leave him standing?—A. Yes, sir; I think I did.

Q. You left him standing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't see him any more?—A. No, sir.

Q. How far were you, if you can recollect? You met him near by Garrant's store?—A. Just about Mr. Garrant's.

Q. Now, did you see anybody else—did you hear the policeman trying to get the people to disperse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What policeman was it?—A. Walter Withers came down and spoke to me, Mr. Freeman spoke to me, and Bob Adams came down there. He didn't notice me particularly, but went on to part the men.

Q. Did you hear them speak to anybody else but you?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. What words did they use—about the same that they did to you?—A. They didn't use any words to me.

Q. You spoke of some man saying, "You had better get off the street; I am a friend to you."—A. And I say that was Mr. Corbin, who was not a policeman, though.

Q. I know, and if the colored people didn't get off the street there would be trouble, or something.—A. He told me, "You all get off the street; I am a friend to you, and you don't know it." He says, "There is no necessity for all this; get off." I says, "Well, I am going myself, if that will do any good."

Q. Now, you say you heard him or somebody else make the same remark to other colored men?—A. No, sir; I didn't say that.

Q. Did you hear other colored men addressed by anybody in the same way?—A. I think Mr. Corbin did.

Q. Did you hear any reply that the colored men made?—A. I don't think I did; I would hate to say and guess at it.

Q. What I want to know is why didn't the other colored men leave as you did. You listened to the policemen; why didn't they?—A. That is a question I can't answer.

Q. You can give any reason that occurs to you.—A. That's what I can do. They just thought that they wouldn't be hurt, I believe; it don't seem reasonable that a man would stay there if he thought he was going to be shot.

Q. Didn't they see the pistols you saw?—A. They ought to have done it.

Q. Don't you suppose they heard the threats you heard?—A. A portion of them certainly would, I guess.

Q. Then they had reason to think they would be hurt if they didn't leave, hadn't they?—A. When I first left the crowd I didn't leave for fear at all.

Q. You left because you were advised?—A. That's all. I thought such a crowd as that might bring on trouble, and I thought if my leaving would do any good I would leave.

Q. Didn't the colored people keep coming up instead of leaving?—A. Oh, all the time; the excitement, you know.

Q. Did you hear Captain Oliver say anything to the people there?—
A. Yes, I did.

Q. What did he say?—A. He comes up in front of this fellow Davis Lewellyn, and I think he says to Davy, "You are the son of a bitch that was down yonder last night." Davy say, "Why, no; I wasn't down there; wasn't out last night." He says, "Well, then, I ask your pardon." Davis says, "Well, you called me a son of a bitch," and I says, "Davis, my God! hush man; if a man asks your pardon, he can't do any more," and Davis says, "Well, he called me a son of a bitch for nothing," that is his reply, and I says, "Well, I don't care what a man says to me, if he asks my pardon I am done," and that's all the words that passed.

Q. The men had been separated when Adams came up and seized that pistol in Lea's hand, hadn't they?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had not an officer hold of them, trying to separate them, at that time?—A. I think he was; I think he was about taking hold of them.

Q. What officer took hold?—A. Bob Adams, the colored policeman.

Q. He took hold of Lawson, didn't he?—A. I think he took hold of both of them. He went up just like a man would like he would take hold of both.

Q. Wasn't there some white men that took hold of Mr. Noel?—A. I am not certain; I will not say; there was a good many up all round them you know as close as they could get.

Q. And they fell on the ground in the struggle over the pistol?—A. Yes, sir; they both fell; think they fell on their hands.

Q. When they were down on the ground, do you recollect whether the pistol was fired then or after they both got up?—A. I don't think any pistol fired down on the ground; although it might, but I don't think so.

Q. Do you think the pistol was fired directly at Adams?—A. I do; oh, yes; oh, bless you, yes.

Q. How far was Adams away when Lea fired?—A. By the time Mr. Lea got up; I suppose Adams was thirty or forty feet off.

Q. Thirty feet.—A. Fully; he was running.

Q. Apparently he didn't hit him?—A. What?

Q. You didn't see any sign that he was hit?—A. No, sir; I didn't; I only thought he struck him.

Q. In a few seconds Adams was back in the crowd?—A. Yes, sir; he came back up there looking like a man that was scared, and I heard him say, "Yonder is the man that shot at me;" I heard him say that.

Q. Didn't he use some violent language and say yonder is the damn scoundrel that shot at me?—A. No, sir; he might have done it, but I don't think he did; he might have done it though.

Q. Did you hear any of the colored people say that this thing had to come, and they might as well have it out right there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't hear anything of that sort said?—A. No, sir; it was all unexpected to me; if I had any idea of such things I could have seen no doubt and heard some, but I was not, but I wasn't studying after anything at all. I was not studying about anything only two men fighting.

Q. You say when the main firing had begun the whites had stepped off the pavement on the street?—A. A great many did.

Q. They were not all off the pavement though, were they?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. You think there were about one hundred whites present?—A. When the firing commenced I believe they came from every direction; the white people were as much excited as the colored.

Q. You think you saw about fifty pistols in the hands of the white people?—A. I think I did before the regular firing commenced; I think I did.

Q. How many pistols did you see before the firing?—A. I saw, well, before the regular firing I saw the men that drew the pistols; but when I first went there I saw three pistols only.

Q. Who had them?—A. Mr. Lea had one, and this other gentleman I can't remember.

Q. Taylor?—A. Yes, sir; and this colored man Davis Lewellyn had his pistol in his pocket; I saw this, because I went to speak to him, and his pistol was in his pocket. In a very few seconds afterwards of course a crowd gathered around, and I saw this number of pistols; I reckon there may be fifty; there may be more, or may be less; I don't know; didn't count.

Q. Don't you think you could have voted safely on the Tuesday following if you had wanted to?—A. I might have been safe; I couldn't tell; I don't know. It might have been ignorance on my part, I am sorry to say, but I was a little scared; I don't like to say I am scared.

Q. You have to own it up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now didn't the town authorities and the leading citizens of both parties assure you of protection, and the governor send troops there, and didn't that reassure you?—A. It seemed like that was plenty, but I thought I would rest off that day.

Q. But that was enough to reassure a reasonable man, wasn't it?—A. I think it ought to be to civilized people. I believe now, since that, I ought to have voted, because I believe it was enough to protect civilized people.

Q. How often had you voted in Danville?—A. I couldn't tell that.

Q. Ever since you have been allowed to vote?—A. I have been in Danville over nine years; may be not, may be more.

Q. Well, you voted every time at election?—A. Oh, yes; I voted every time on election days.

Q. Had there heretofore been any trouble about voting?—A. I don't think there was; no, no disturbance at all. I don't think; no more than this crowd at the polls at election.

Q. Oh, yes; people hanging around and getting all the votes and hurrahing, and so on; but there had been no disturbance of any colored man's right there to vote for many years before?—A. I don't think there has; not since I have been there; because I usually knock around the polls all day long.

Q. Do you still live in Danville?—A. Yes; oh, I likes it.

Q. Are you afraid to go back there?—A. No, sir.

Q. What employment do you follow?—A. I work in a tobacco factory.

Q. Did you see during the fist fight between Noel and Lawson any foul play used by anybody?—A. When I got there there wasn't but them two men fighting.

Q. I say did you see any foul play; did you see anybody take hold except those two?—A. I don't think I did.

Q. Did either of them use weapons?—A. If they did I didn't see it; I never noticed. I was as close to them as I could get without putting my hands on them.

Q. Did you see Lawson after the fight was over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he badly hurt?—A. Well, his face was bloody. I couldn't tell what color he was.

Q. His face was bloody?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Bruised up pretty much?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which was the longest-armed man?—A. Noel; Noel was up over him.

Q. Well, a long-armed man can get hold and pound him and hold him off and the short can't reach him?—A. They say they can't, but I don't like to state that, because I am a short-armed fellow and they might take hold of me.

Q. You don't want that fact known?—A. No, sir.

Q. One of the witnesses said Noel had a bowie-knife in one hand and was beating him with the other. Did you see a bowie-knife in his hand?—A. I don't believe that; he didn't have any bowie-knife in his hand when I got there.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. How were Taylor and Lea holding their pistols?—A. They were holding them up.

Q. Up by Noel's head?—A. They were holding them up so. [Indicating.]

Q. Did they stand by the side of Noel?—A. Right at him; me and them was close together.

Q. Did you hear what Lea or Taylor said as they held up their pistols?—A. They said, "Stand back; stand back; no man touch."

Q. Did you notice whether Noel had anything on his knuckles?—A. No, sir; I didn't think about it.

Q. You don't know whether he had or not?—A. No, sir; I didn't think about it.

Q. You saw that Lawson's face was cut, didn't you?—A. Oh, yes; badly.

Q. Badly cut?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know whether one of his eyes was closed up?—A. I don't know particularly, but I think it was, because the way it was it seemed like it was all over. I don't think he could see very good; I don't think I could if the blood was all over my face that way; but I can't say.

Q. How long is it since the poll-tax was imposed upon voters there; how many years since that became a law?—A. I am sorry to say I don't remember; it hasn't been long though; it isn't a year or two may be.

Q. No; when the law was first passed requiring a poll-tax to entitle them to vote?—A. Well, that has not been very long; but I am sorry to say I don't know.

Q. How long since that ceased to be a law; have you had any election since the poll-tax was taken off the people?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. How many?—A. May be one or two.

Q. Do you remember but one; had there been but one election after the removal of that before last fall?—A. I don't think there had.

Q. That enabled the colored people to vote freely, didn't it; the removal of that tax?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. How near was the scene of this fight to the market?—A. It is near the market; it is off on the opposite side of Main street; I reckon about may be 50 yards from the corner.

Q. Is it in Market street?—A. Not exactly.

Q. I mean is the market in Market street?—A. Yes, sir; of course.

Q. And this was a little out of Market street; a little way up Main street from the junction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now it was the custom of the colored people Saturday afternoon to come there for marketing, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir; you can hardly pass down the market Saturdays at 4 o'clock, on the streets; but they are very narrow you know.

Q. Crowds of people there?—A. Oh, yes; you can hardly pass for them.

Q. Mostly colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was well known, that Saturday afternoons colored people come there to get their supplies?—A. Yes, sir; if it had been any other day I believe you wouldn't have had one-third of them there; I don't think you would.

Q. Which direction did the white people come from chiefly? You say they kept running up there?—A. The vast majority of them come from the opera house.

Q. A politician's assembly, wasn't it?—A. I think they had a meeting there.

Q. They had a political meeting there?—A. I think it was; yes, sir.

Q. And it was that class of people that came from the opera house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Coming from the opera house they would come right to the sidewalk where this line was formed, wouldn't they?—A. Yes, sir; that was the way to go as they go up town.

Q. And there they kept gathering you say up to the time you left?—A. Yes, sir; they was coming from every direction for about three-quarters of an hour, I have no doubt.

Q. They kept increasing in numbers until you ran away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you able to say how many were there at the time you left?—A. No, sir; I couldn't tell at the time I left how many were there.

Q. Give your judgment about it.—A. When I left the place there was, I reckon, most all of them out of the opera house; I reckon most of them; there might have been two or three hundred got there before I left.

Q. White people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Grown people, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were not boys and they were not women?—A. Oh, no; there wasn't any ladies at all out there; I didn't see a one that afternoon.

GEORGE W. WEST sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Ten or twelve years.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am a huckster in the market.

Q. Where were you at the time of the commencement of this riot in Danville on the 3d of November?—A. On the market.

Q. How far from the place of the fist fight?—A. About the middle of the market; the market don't extend very far.

Q. About half way down the square?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many feet or yards?—A. It may be a hundred yards.

Q. Were there many people in the market at that time?—A. No, sir; not a great deal.

Q. About what time in the day was it?—A. About 3 o'clock.

Q. From the time you first heard the alarm tell what occurred; what you saw and heard?—A. I was there when the shooting commenced; some one said there was fighting.

Q. You were first in the market; what called you to go up?—A. Some one came down and said some one was fighting up there, and I had a curiosity to go up.

Q. And you went up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far up did you go?—A. Smack up to the crowd.

Q. How near were you to Lawson and Noel?—A. I didn't see them.

Q. You went up to the crowd of colored people in the street?—A. I did.

Q. Were they fighting when you got there?—A. No, sir.

Q. The fight was over?—A. The fighting was over.

Q. Had you any arms, pistols, or weapons of any kind?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Didn't carry your butcher knife along?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What did you see?—A. I saw somebody shooting down.

Q. How long after you arrived there?—A. Probably a minute or two.

Q. Who did you see shooting?—A. I can't hardly say particularly; I saw some gentlemen have pistols in their hands.

Q. Were they drawn up in line?—A. They was on the sidewalk, but I was in the rear at first, and then I walked round up on the sidewalk right behind them. I was standing at the time of the shooting right at Woolfolk & Blair's insurance office.

Q. Just in the back of the white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see the crowd of colored people in the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What caused the first firing? Did you hear any order given?—A. I heard some one say, "You all leave here; all get off." I don't know who that was.

Q. Who was that said to, the white people or the black people?—A. The white people seemed to say it.

Q. What then?—A. I couldn't hear what the blacks said, the crowd rushed right in front.

Q. Did the firing take place then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the order to fire given by any one?—A. I heard some one, appeared to be in the office, say, "Go ahead when you get ready."

Q. Then you say the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many fired?—A. I don't know; It looked like all fired they were firing so fast.

Q. Did they continue to fire one shot after another from their pistols?—A. All shooting.

Q. Right along?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many white people were there with pistols in their hands?—A. I really couldn't say; don't know whether they all had pistols or not, but it appeared to me a good many did; then the people commenced running up from down street, and running down from up street.

Q. The white people or the colored?—A. The white people.

Q. Where did they come from?—A. I don't know; it looked like they came out of stores.

Q. Came in and joined the white people in the crowd? When the white people commenced firing did you notice the black people? Could you see them plainly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had they any arms?—A. I didn't see any.

Q. Could you have seen them if they had arms?—A. Yes, sir; because I left them and went round on the other side.

Q. Were they excited?—A. It didn't seem that they were.

Q. Had they any sticks, any arms of any kind?—A. I don't think they had.

Q. Who composed the crowd? What kind of people?—A. White and colored.

Q. I mean there in the street.—A. The colored people in the street.

Q. Were there any white people among them?—A. Probably some might have run up like I did in the rear there.

Q. You didn't notice that they were white people?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were they men, women, and children?—A. Yes, sir; seemed a mixture of all kinds.

Q. Such people as gather there at the market place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they do as soon as they were fired upon?—A. They run.

Q. Which way?—A. Some run through the market; some went up Main; some went into stores, that could.

Q. How long before they were dispersed?—A. The time they commenced firing.

Q. They scattered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any return fire from the colored people?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could you have seen it if it had occurred; could you have heard it?—A. I couldn't tell, by there being so many shooting right there in front of me.

Q. Could you look over and see them?—A. No, sir; I was standing back against the house and they were all in front of me, and then as soon as the colored run the white people run after them.

Q. Followed them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far did they follow them?—A. I don't know. I didn't stir until they all went away; then I walked down.

Q. How far did they advance; to the corner of the market?—A. They got out of sight.

Q. Went down toward Market, did they?—A. Yes, sir; and some up.

Q. And then turned to the right and left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the white people call upon them to disperse?—A. They might have said that before I got there.

Q. You don't know?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any cry about "come on, boys," &c.?—A. I heard one man say, "Go ahead when you get ready;" I don't know who it was.

Q. How soon after that did the firing commence?—A. Right away.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. I stood there.

Q. After the colored people dispersed where did you go?—A. I went to my room.

Q. Went back to your room or to your place of business?—A. Went to my room.

Q. Is that the same as your place of business?—A. Right in front of it and across the street.

Q. When the white people were advancing toward the colored people and they ran, did they continue firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long, probably, did this occur from the first volley until the close of the firing?—A. I don't know; I couldn't say.

Q. You remained, however, at your place until the whites were following?—A. No, sir; I got there just before they commenced firing.

Q. I know; but you remained where you stood against the house until the firing had ceased and the whites had all gone and left the coast clear, and then you went to your room?—A. I went down street about three doors, I guess.

Q. Did the whites continue to fire until they all disappeared?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you register?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you vote on the day of election?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why didn't you vote?—A. The colored people generally said they wasn't going to vote; they were afraid to go to the polls.

Q. Was that fear in consequence of these events on Saturday?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Was there any other ground of fear that you know of?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is your market day? Is Saturday your market day in Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the time when the laboring population generally gather there for their marketing, is it?—A. Yes, sir. Well every day the market is open.

Q. Is Saturday more a market day than other days?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is a crowd there generally Saturday afternoon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When is the crowd generally the largest?—A. At 4 o'clock the crowd generally principally comes strolling through the market and buying goods.

Q. That is a well-known fact, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Who was it said back in the office, "Go ahead when you get ready"?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you see anybody in there at all?—A. I didn't pay much attention; I was watching; I didn't look back; I was standing with my head right to the side of the door.

Q. Didn't see anybody in there?—A. Yes; I saw one man that I know well, too.

Q. Who was that?—A. His name was Mr. Dance.

Q. Where was he?—A. He was standing in the door.

Q. What did he have in his hands?—A. He had a double-barrel shotgun.

Q. Was he the man that gave the order?—A. I don't know whether it was him or not.

Q. Did you see anybody else in there?—A. I don't know; I just saw him standing right at the door.

Q. Did the voice come from the inside or from the door?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. Are you right sure it came from anywhere?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard it?—A. I heard the voice.

Q. Yes; "Go ahead when you are ready."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see those boxes of pistols in there?—A. I didn't go in.

Q. Did you see people going in and helping themselves to pistols?—

A. I didn't have any idea any pistols was about there.

Q. Did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't see people step in, get pistols, and come out?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you were standing right jam at the door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not in front of it; to one side?—A. One side of the door.

Q. And you stood there during the whole fight?—A. Yes, sir; until everybody ran away; then I went down and went to my room.

Q. No white men offered to interrupt you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know the white men that were engaged in the fight?—A.

I knew a great many that was in the crowd; I don't know whether they were fighting or not.

Q. Were they on the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say the fist fight was over before you got up there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the crowd doing when you got up?—A. Just standing there.

Q. Were they saying anything?—A. I don't think I heard anything from the colored people.

Q. Of course not, they never do anything; but what was this crowd of miserable white wretches doing?—A. They were standing on the sidewalk.

Q. What were they saying?—A. I only heard them say, "You all better leave here."

Q. The colored people better leave?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why?—A. I don't know.

Q. Didn't they give any reason why they better leave?—A. I didn't hear it; I don't know whether they did or not.

Q. Did you hear any more than one man say you all better leave?—A. The crowd generally was; some saying one thing and some another; but I heard a voice say "You all better leave here."

Q. What did the others say?—A. Never said anything that I heard.

Q. You said, "Some said one thing and some another."—A. Well, I suppose talking about different things.

Q. Oh, tell it all to us. Did you see any man trying to make peace?—A. I saw Bob Adams was trying, and Withers telling them to stand back; get back and leave; trying to disperse the crowd.

Q. Which Adams was that?—A. Robert Adams.

Q. Who was the other man?—A. Withers.

Q. And they both said to get back?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did they give any reason to the crowd why they should get back? Did they say "you will get hurt," and "let's not get into this trouble?"—A. I was there such a little while I really didn't hear.

Q. You were there all the time?—A. The time I got there the firing had commenced.

Q. No it had not commenced when you got there.—A. I was there such a little while before it commenced.

Q. Did you see Captain Oliver?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear him say anything to the crowd?—A. I don't know that I did; he was standing right in front of me.

Q. Did you see Peter Booth, and did you hear him say anything to the crowd?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Did you see Mr. Corbin?—A. No, sir; I didn't see him.

Q. You didn't hear anybody, except this man you mentioned—this voice you mentioned—begging the people to go away, and perhaps the white folks would go away if the colored would?—A. I reckon that's what he meant by it.

Q. You didn't hear him say it?—A. No, sir; I don't think I did.

Q. Did you hear the colored people make any response at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. When they were appealed to to go away, they just stood their ground and didn't say one word why they wouldn't go away, nor anything?—A. Just stood there, so.

Q. Did they move about any?—A. No; the crowd continued to come up behind.

Q. And that pressed them forward toward the gutter, didn't it?—

A. They were a good distance from the gutter ; as far as from here to that desk.

Q. Well, they came closer and closer, didn't they ?—A. There was so many in front of me, I really couldn't say.

Q. Who was in front of you, white people or colored ?—A. White.

Q. They were between you, then, and the colored ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could not tell how close the front line of colored was to the white men, then ?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many women did you see there ?—A. I don't know.

Q. Give a guess.—A. It was a kind of mixed crowd of colored people.

Q. You know most of the people that were there, don't you ?—A. I didn't pay any attention to it.

Q. What did you pay attention to ?—A. I went up to see what kind of a row it was.

Q. Did you see any women there at all ?—A. I never noticed any.

Q. You told Senator Lapham you saw women and children there ?—A. I believe there was a mixture.

Q. Now, you say you didn't notice any women ?—A. I say I didn't notice particularly.

Q. Did you see any little children there ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were they ?—A. They were running at the time I run up.

Q. Did they press in the front between the white men and the black men, or did they go to the skirts of the crowd ?—A. I never noticed, but just walked round the crowd and got upon the sidewalk.

Q. And you don't know what became of the boys ?—A. No, sir.

Q. And didn't notice the women ?—A. Didn't notice particularly.

Q. How long after the firing began before the colored people ran ?—A. Commenced right away, I think.

Q. Commenced running right away ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long before they all got away ?—A. Oh, no time ; probably a minute.

Q. How long after they all got away before the firing stopped ?—A. I reckon the firing held a little over a minute, probably more ; not much over.

Q. What did they shoot at after everybody had gone ?—A. Well, they run too.

Q. They run too, did they ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did they go ?—A. Divided themselves up ; some went up and some went down.

Q. Some went up Main street and some went towards the market ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Firing as they went ?—A. Firing as they went.

Q. Did you see any one of them firing up in the air ?—A. It frightened me when they commenced ; I didn't pay much attention to them to see which way they were shooting.

Q. You were so badly scared you didn't see which way they shot ?—A. I wasn't scared.

Q. You were not scared but frightened ?—A. Yes ; I was kind of skittish, because I didn't have any idea that there was going to be anything of the kind.

Q. Did you see Mr. Holland ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't see him get shot ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any bullet marks on the wall behind where the white folks stood ?—A. Yes, sir : I saw one down at the "Border House ;" two right there.

Q. What do you call the "Border House;" is that Nicholas & Hess berg's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any at Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. Never noticed any there.

Q. Did you see any weapons in the hands of the colored people at all that day?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. When the firing began I suppose you didn't look to see who had weapons?—A. No, sir.

Q. You, being a dealer there in the market, have a pretty large acquaintance with the colored people, haven't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know any colored man that owns a pistol?—A. Oh, yes; I know a great many that owns a pistol; I have been to their rooms a great many times and saw some of them have pistols.

Q. You say you have been to their rooms and seen a great many own pistols, but don't know whether they had them out that day or not?—A. No, sir; I don't know.

Q. You saw a great many have guns, too?—A. Yes; some have guns that I know of.

Q. The colored people do a great deal of hunting, don't they?—A. Some of them do.

Q. There are more of them who hunt than there are of white folks, are there not?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. You think not?—A. I am satisfied not.

Q. Don't a great many hunt for a living, and bring game in to sell?—A. I have never seen any of them do that.

Q. You say there was no excitement in the crowd among the colored people?—A. Not that I noticed.

Q. Was there any excitement among the white people?—A. Enough to draw them together there, both white and colored, I reckon.

Q. Well, the same excitement drew both together, didn't it? Both colors.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any gesticulation among the colored; raising up of arms; moving around?—A. No, sir; I didn't see it.

Q. Hands going this way? [Indicating.]—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. All perfectly serene and lovely in the colored ranks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you vote Tuesday?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the matter with you?—A. Well, I heard a great many of them say they wasn't going to vote that day.

Q. And you concluded you would not vote that day?—A. And I staid at my place of business.

Q. Were you afraid to vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any understanding that it would be better for your party not to vote?—A. Well, I just heard—I suppose that was the feeling—sort of thinking it might occur again.

Q. Did you hear say that it was better for the party not to vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never heard anybody talk that way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never heard anybody talk of throwing out the election because of the riot and making that the excuse for not voting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never heard of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you think with all the preparations made there to keep peace that it would have been safe for you to vote if you wanted to?—A. Yes; I suppose there was enough there.

Q. Every assurance was given that could be given, wasn't it?—A. Yes, that day of the election.

Q. By both parties?—A. Yes, sir.

WILLIAM MIVINS sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Question. Where do you reside ?—Answer. Danville.

Q. How long have you been there ?—A. Seven years.

Q. What is your occupation ?—A. Barber.

Q. Were you following your vocation on the 3d of November, at the time of the riot ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far and in what position is your shop from the scene of this riot ?—A. About two squares.

Q. Did you see anybody loading pistols in the morning before the riot or the day before the riot ?—A. I saw a couple loaded during the day.

Q. Where ?—A. In the shop.

Q. Can you name the parties who were loading them ?—A. They didn't have anything to do with the riot ; I am satisfied of that.

Q. You can give their names ?—A. One of them was a gentleman by the name of Mr. Traver ; the other was a Mr. Jefferson.

Q. Did they tell you anything about keeping off the street that afternoon ?—A. Either one of them gentlemen ?

Q. Yes, or any one ?—A. No, sir ; neither one of them did.

Q. Did any one tell you that ; warn you ?—A. Oh, I believe there was some rough crowd in the morning talked to me, and they were telling me I had better not be out on the street that day.

Q. Who told you that ?—A. Some other crowd.

Q. White people or colored ?—A. White people.

Q. You are under oath now, and you ought to tell the truth, and you are bound to answer the questions truthfully. I ask you if Mr. Hatcher was one of those persons ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who were the persons who told you ?—A. I don't know their names ; I have so many people, I have a good many customers, and so many people coming in the shop, it is hard to tell their names.

Q. But some of the white people told you you had better keep off the street that afternoon ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you follow their advice ?—A. I did ; I staid in my shop and worked. It was Saturday ; I have a good trade on Saturday.

Q. How many men did you see in your shop that day with pistols ?—A. I saw several ; I don't know exactly how many.

Q. Were your customers generally armed that day ?—A. Yes, a great many of them.

Q. Are your customers white people ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Entirely ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you saw them load their pistols that day, did they tell you why they loaded them there ?—A. Mr. Traver told me the reason why he was loading his was, he didn't want to get hurt and didn't want to hurt anybody, but would like to have protection, provided if anything should happen. He lives in North Danville, and was going back home.

Q. He didn't want to hurt anybody, and didn't want to be hurt ?—A. He didn't want to hurt anybody, and didn't want to be hurt.

Q. How many persons told you to keep off the street that afternoon ?—A. I don't know ; there was some several. I run on with a great many gentlemen that come to the shop and talk.

Q. Was there much excitement in the street that day before the riot ?—A. Well, I am off from the main street about a square.

Q. I mean among the people that came in ; was there much talk about trouble that day ?—A. I didn't take much notice of them.

Q. Except what was said to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anything of the fight or riot?—A. No, sir, I didn't; I was at my work.

Q. How many did you see with arms that day in your shop; how many pistols?—A. I don't really know how many; I never took very particular notice of them, because in the morning Mr. Traver and Mr. Jefferson, very particular friends of mine—me and Mr. Traver just talking——

Q. How many persons did you see with pistols, though?—A. I say I saw several, but don't know how many.

Q. Could you see their pistols when they sat in your chair?—A. A great many gentlemen when they come in, you know, pull off their coat and go to the rack and hang it up, and you can see pistols. In fact I don't think many in Danville but what had pistols; most all of us carry pistols in Danville, white and black, little and big.

Q. What proportion of your customers carried pistols that day; I want you to name some of them?—A. I told you just now the only ones I took particular notice of was Traver and Jefferson, and the reason why I speak of them they were loading their pistols on the table, and were talking to me, and Mr. Traver said he didn't want to hurt anybody, and didn't want to get hurt.

Q. Did any person open their pistol box?—A. Mr. Traver's was in a box.

Q. Were there any pistol boxes left with you on that day?—A. Why, there was some one or two boxes left there. I just took them and put them away; thought I might have some use for them to put things in.

Q. Each pistol had a box, had it; were they paper boxes?—A. Little paper boxes.

Q. Did they leave them with you to be kept for them?—A. No, sir; they just left them on the table there.

Q. Were they new boxes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They didn't come for the boxes again, did they?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just paper boxes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many were left with you?—A. Some two or three. I believe I have a couple now; thought they might be useful to put little things in.

Q. They were left with you that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a usual circumstance for them to bring their pistols in there and leave the boxes with you?—A. No, sir; I don't know as it was. When the shooting took place I run down-stairs in the cellar to get out of the way.

Q. What was the language used by these persons in telling you you must not appear on the street that day? Did they tell you what was to occur?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. Did they say anything that indicated it?—A. That was not Mr. Traver.

Q. I don't speak of him, but those persons who told you.—A. No, sir; because I didn't take much notice of it; wasn't thinking much of it.

Q. What did they say; what language did they use?—A. They told me I had better stay in my shop and attend to my business and not be much on the street.

Q. Why not on the street?—A. I didn't ask them.

Q. Did not you have curiosity enough to ask that?—A. No; I just thought they were joking; something of that kind.

Q. Did Mr. Hatcher load his pistol in your shop?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you state to any one that Mr. Hatcher had loaded his pistol in your shop?—A. I don't know whether I did or not; if I did I made a mistake.

Q. Did you ever say you had six or seven boxes left with you that day?—A. I said there was several boxes left; I know I have a couple of them now.

Q. You don't now undertake to say how many?—A. I don't now, because I don't know; when the shooting took place I ran down-stairs.

Q. You are a barber, that is your business I suppose, and these are your customers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any one tell you that day that there was going to be trouble that day in Danville?—A. No, sir; not that I know of; I never took notice of it; it might have been; I won't say whether they did or not.

Q. Did you tell any one that they had told you so?—A. I don't know whether I did or not; I got very scared that day.

Q. What was your scare for?—A. When the row took place.

Q. But before, was there anything that scared you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anything said to you that made you anticipate that there was to be trouble that day?—A. No, sir; I never thought to be any firing.

Q. Were any of these pistol cases left with you before at any time?—A. No, sir; no pistol cases; there's mighty few men comes in the shop that aint got a pistol.

Q. I mean these boxes?—A. I say there never was any one left there before.

Q. Did not that excite your suspicion?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you ask them why they did this?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not when they told you you better stay in your shop that day and not appear on the street; you didn't ask them why?—A. They didn't tell me not to appear on the street; said I had better not be on the street much; some of them did.

Q. Did Frank Jefferson tell you you had better stay in the house?—A. He told me that while the shooting was going on, he was shaving.

Q. He was shaving while the row was going on. Did he tell you before that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he tell you the ball was then going on, or words to that effect?—A. I believe he said the ball was opened, or something like that.

Q. And you continued shaving while the firing was going on, or did you stop?—A. I stopped shaving because I was excited and scared, and I got nervous. I was not shaving him, I was shaving Mr. Traver, and he saw I was nervous, and told me I had better stop shaving him while I was so nervous.

Q. Where did they go?—A. They remained there until I finished shaving, and then got up and went away.

Q. Was that before or after firing?—A. They went out directly after; the firing had ceased, I think, just about the time I got through shaving.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Did you see any marks of pistol bullets on the side of your house?—A. No, sir; my house is two squares from where the shooting was going on.

Q. Wasn't you in the barber shop there by Nicholas & Hessberg's?—A. No, sir; I am on Raglan street.

Q. You say these young men, Traver and Jefferson, were getting shaved when the firing was going on?—A. Yes, sir; just sitting there.

Q. And they finished shaving before they got out?—A. I stopped shaving and run down cellar, and he knocks on the floor and I come back.

Q. They didn't rush up and take part in the fight then?—A. No, sir; I don't know whether they went up there when they went out of the shop or not, because I didn't look at them after they got out of the door.

Q. Before they got ready, the firing had ceased?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say nearly everybody carries a pistol in Danville, white and black?—A. Yes, sir; white and black.

Q. Well, these persons advised you to keep off the street that day; there was a good deal of excitement in town that day, wasn't there?—

A. Oh, yes; there was a mighty rough crowd in that part of the town, around in the bar-rooms.

Q. But wasn't there a good deal of excitement and talk about Mr. Sims's speech?—A. Yes, sir; there had been on Friday night; everybody that came in the shop was talking about it.

Q. They didn't give you any particular reason. Do you suppose it was because of the excitement between the races that they advised you not to go out on the street?—A. No, sir; because I didn't ask any. I never vote. I never ask anything about politics, or anything in any way.

Q. You don't vote?—A. Never voted in Danville in my life. I don't ask any questions at all.

Q. How long have you lived in Danville?—A. I have been there about seven years.

Q. Before this trouble, what has been the general disposition between whites and blacks; friendly or unfriendly?—A. Well, sir, I hardly ever have much to do with them, because I live about four miles in the country, and every Saturday night, when my business is over, I get on my horse and go home, and come back Monday morning and go back to my business and stay there.

Q. Has there been any trouble between the whites and blacks before this?—A. Not that I know of.

ADDISON COLES sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there ever since three years after the surrender.

Q. Do you mean the surrender of Lee to Grant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your business?—A. My regular business is working in a tobacco factory.

Q. Have you a family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you live in the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November last?—A. I was in Danville; in the street part of the time.

Q. Well, in the afternoon?—A. In the afternoon, about 4 o'clock, I came down street from my house.

Q. If you saw any of this contest go on and describe it without my asking you questions.—A. I came up Union street. Right on the corner of Union and Main street I stopped, right at Motley's office, I think book-store. I think it is Elison & Motley. I stopped on the corner of his book-store. I was starting down the street to get my rations, as people generally do on Saturday evening.

Q. Get what?—A. My marketing, as people generally go of Saturday evenings, and as I came out on the street I started across the street.

Q. Across which street?—A. Across Main street, from the corner of Union and Main; I started across the street.

Q. Going across to Market street?—A. I was going across Union street where it comes right across Main. I did start, and I happened to look down the street and I saw what looked like a great excitement of the people out on the street, and I stopped then at once. Seeing such excitement I stopped for a few minutes right by the side of a lamp-post to look down the street to see if I could gain any information of what was the excitement down the street. A short time after I stopped there I heard a pistol fired.

Q. A single pistol?—A. I didn't see.

Q. One pistol?—A. I didn't hear but one shot at that time, and seeing so many people on the street there, I stopped and didn't go any farther down that way; I stood right at that corner during the whole firing; after that I didn't go away from there at all at that time. As well as I could come at it, about ten or fifteen minutes after I heard that first shot I heard a great hurrahing down the street. It looked like you had taken a pack of squibs and thrown them into a flour-barrel. You know how squibs would pop if you throw them into a flour-barrel and throw fire amongst them.

Q. A rattling shot?—A. Yes, just like rattling shot; I saw a good deal of smoke going upwards; I didn't see any pistols, but I heard them that was right below me down there just opposite to Mr. Blair & Woolfolk's office and Mr. Jones's drug-store.

Q. How far from where you were standing?—A. I was up on the corner.

Q. How far was it from where you were standing down to where this smoke and firing was?—A. It probably may be 60 or 70 yards. Probably more than that. I won't be positive, but it is about that distance, I think, from the corner.

Q. Go on and state what farther you saw.—A. I staid there, as I told you, about ten minutes after that. I heard this great noise of shooting down there, and I saw the people commence to break and run. I still stood there.

Q. What people?—A. The colored people what was in the street. Probably there might have been some white people. The streets seemed to be crowded, all out in the middle of the street, just in front of Mr. Jones's drug-store and in front of Blair & Woolfolk's office. There's where the crowd was, and I was up at the corner and stood looking at it. When I see a crowd that way, I never rush up in it until I find out what it is about. I never like to be in a fuss. If I can stay out, I like to do it. I looked on and saw a good many people come running out of the street after that firing commenced down below. I saw a good many going down the street. I saw some run across to Market street. I saw some running at the other end, right opposite the market, and a lot of them came up the street by me. After that firing, while it was not over, as I told you, over ten or fifteen minutes, I still stood down there by that lamp-post; didn't go away from there at all. I saw Mr. Cabell come up the street, and went near the old post-office steps and got up on the steps and threw up his hands just so. [Indicating]. He said to them all, "You must keep still; this is a shame, the way you all are carrying on here," or something of that kind. At that time there was another white gentleman—I still stood there at that post; in the time of the firing there was a horse ran away down the street, run right up to that post where I was standing, and after that horse ran up to that post I had to get away from that post a little way to keep from being hurt by the wagon. The horse ran betwixt me and the corner of that store, and as he ran betwixt me and the corner he hung the wagon right against the post I was standing by, and that caused me to step off a piece, and I stepped off about as far as from me to that chair there and stopped again; didn't get no further yet. Directly after that I saw a man come out from on Union street on the other side of Main street, from right towards the telegraph office, and the tailor-shop was right there right opposite the telegraph office; I saw a man come right out from that way. He came right up Union street, on the corner of Main street, right by a little apple market that stays right there on the corner by the old post-office. I was still standing there. I was standing sort of in the middle of the street then, because that horse had run up there. I still stood there in the middle of the street. This time I saw two men on the other side of the street coming running up Main street. A good many people were running up street, and the time these people were running up the street, this man who came up Union street went up Main street. He went right to the corner at this little apple market I was telling you about, and when he ran up to the corner there he drew his pistol from behind, and he remarked to the people running up street, "Look out! look out!" and he fired just as that man turned the corner of Mr. Wiseman's drug-store; and he shot three times, and I saw two men fall; and I never saw anybody else shoot but that man.

Q. Who was that?—A. I didn't really know the man.

Q. Was he a white man?—A. He was a white man, and I will tell you what I understood his name was. I didn't know who it was myself.

Q. If you have learned since state it.—A. A man was standing by me of the name of A. M. Motley. Says I, "Motley, look at that man shooting both of them men down." Mr. Motley said to me, "That's Johnson; I know him well." And that time the fire bell commenced to ring, and I am a member of the fire company, and we are sworn when that bell rings and we hear any alarm at all to be there to it or give a strict account afterwards. And as soon as the fire alarm was made that taken my attention off of the man. I made way then to the truck-house, which was over at the court-house. I knew I was bound to be there, or I would have to give a strict account of it, which is our custom whenever we hear an alarm of fire.

Q. Well, you went to your duty as a fireman?—A. Yes, sir; I ran then to the truck-house and commenced to get my truck out as usual. I met some of the members there, and they said, "It is not worth while to pull the truck out; there is no fire." And I said, "What is the bell ringing for?" And he said to me, "They are fighting down street yonder." And me and him then pushed the truck back; we had pulled it about half way out of the door. I turned round then and comes back on the street, near about the place where I was first standing. I heard then when I got back that they had killed some two or three men. I saw two of them there; saw the man when he shot; looking right at him as I am looking at you now, and I never saw anybody fire a pistol but that man called Johnson, and when I run to the truck-house, taken my attention off the man, I lost sight of him.

Q. Who were the two men killed?—A. One Edward Davis, and I think the other was—he lived in Greensborough, I think—he was a Hall, though I disremember the initials of the name, but he was a Hall.

Q. Were they running away from where you first heard the firing?—

A. Yes, sir; I still stood there at that same place; and as soon as I went to the truck-house and found there was no fire, I went back to that place again.

Q. Did you see what weapons he had?—A. Who?

Q. Johnson.—A. I saw a pistol. When he first shot he drew his pistol from behind, and hollered "Look out! look out!" and shot three times. I saw no other man shoot about but him.

Q. Have you ever been examined before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you examined before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir; I was there on Sunday.

Q. No; before the grand jury at the court-house?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or before the committee of forty?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know where Johnson is now?—A. I do not; I would not know him if I were to see him.

Q. Do you know whether he lived at Danville at that time?—A. Mr. Motley said he lived in Mechanicsville, in a place called Cooley's Store, at that time. He said how he came to know him he had carried him home——

Q. No matter about that. You have stated now all you saw of the conflict, have you?—No, sir; not exactly. After I came back, as I told you, I came back near to the same place; there was some white gentlemen came on up the street and said to us, "Boys, you all better go away; you better go off the street; probably some of you might get shot." At that time I had sent two boys down the street to get some things which I had started down to get, and send them home by my chaps. I started there and thought probably, if they had not been shot I would see them and I would have gotten my things and sent them on home, as I usually do Saturday evening.

Q. When the bells rang did you see any white people with arms?—A. When the bells commenced to ring I made way to the truck-house——

Q. Yes, you have stated that, but answer my question; did you see any white people running with arms?—A. I saw some men coming down the street with guns.

Q. What kind of guns?—A. They seemed to me like shot-guns.

Q. Running?—A. Running right down the street.

Q. Did you see any with pistols?—A. I saw some men come up with pistols, too, from down Union street.

Q. In their hands?—A. In their hands.

Q. You didn't know Johnson yourself, then?—A. I didn't know him myself personally.

Q. How long had you known these two colored people who were shot?—A. I have seen them there quite a number of times; one of them was a cook at the Arlington House; I had seen him most every day, and one of the men, though, Mr. Hall, I didn't have any personal acquaintance with him; I had seen him.

Q. Was the man who was a cook a peaceable man?—A. As far as I know of he was a very sociable, peaceable man.

Q. Had he a family?—A. I don't think he did.

Q. Do you know whether the other one had a family?—A. I don't know; the other was Junius Hall.

Q. Did you see any other person who was shot?—A. Yes, sir; I saw that man Smith, I forget his name, that was shot after I came back; I went down and saw him near about night.

Q. Where was he shot?—A. I declare I am unable to say now; I disremember where he was shot.

Q. Did you know where these two men were shot whom you saw fall?—A. One of them was shot right over the eye; I disremember which eye it was and I disremember where the other was shot, to tell the truth.

Q. How long did the fire bell ring?—A. The fire bell rung the first time it commenced to ring, three or four minutes as well as I can recollect now; it rung twice; the first time it rung I made way to it.

A. Who composed your company at the fire department; how many members of the company were there?—A. There had been twenty-two or twenty-three of us.

Q. At that time?—A. At that time the company stood twenty-two or twenty-three members.

Q. All colored men?—A. The hook and ladder department.

Q. All colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the engine-house close by?—A. It was at the court-house over on the next square.

Q. In sight of where you went?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who composed the company that manned the engine; were they all colored men?—A. No, sir; that was the white department.

Q. Did you notice whether they went to their place?—A. Yes, sir; at that time they didn't have the fire engine that they have now, and the white department who use the hose, you know, throws the water; and there was a white company, they had control of the water power and the colored company the hook and ladder.

Q. Now, did they go there?—A. They were there; some of them were getting out their reels as we were getting out our truck. Finally some of them said there was no fire, and they put the reels back.

A. Do you remember who it was told you there was no fire?—A. I do.

Q. Who was it?—A. Morrison Dickson, a fellow that lives right on the market. He run right down from this fellow Smith that had been killed.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said to me it is not worth while to pull that truck out; there aint no fire. I asked him how do you know? What is the bell ringing for? He said the folks were fighting down on the street and I don't know what it is for—well, I disremember now what he said.

Q. Well, it is not very important. The idea was, it was to call the people together, was it not?—A. It seems that that was the intention.

Q. You saw more people running with guns after that than before, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir; I saw people coming from every direction—out of all the streets—every which way, you might say, you could see people come with guns.

Q. White people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You hadn't seen anything of that before the alarm, had you?—A. I had not.

Q. Are you a voter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you registered?—A. I had.

Q. Was it your intention to vote at that election?—A. It was.

Q. Did you vote?—A. I did not.

Q. Why?—A. Well, sir, from what had been done that Saturday I was somewhat out of fix. I had been very confused, and I saw from all appearance that there would be some danger in my voting.

Q. Well, that was the reason you didn't vote, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you afraid to do it?—A. Yes, sir; I was afraid.

Q. Had you always voted before?—A. I hadn't lost but one vote since I had been permitted to vote.

Q. How old are you?—A. I am going on thirty-eight years old this coming November.

Q. When was the poll-tax taken off and the colored people allowed to vote freely?—A. I think it was last year or the year before; I disremember which, when it was taken off.

Q. They never have voted but once since that, have they?—A. I don't think they have.

Q. And if they had voted last year it would have been the second time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not this the first time you were permitted to vote without paying the tax?—A. I think it was. As well as I recollect, I think it was.

Q. That was put on when the Democrats had control, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Readjusters had removed it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for the first time the colored people were going to vote freely?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Have you ever heard of any country up North where they make a man pay his tax before they allow him to vote?—A. I don't know that I have.

Q. Did you never hear of the State of Massachusetts?—A. I have heard some talk about it in my life-time.

Q. Have you ever heard of the State of Rhode Island?—A. I have heard the name called.

Q. Don't you know that they don't let a man vote up there unless he pays taxes and owns property?—A. No, sir; I didn't know that.

Q. Never heard that?—A. Never heard any person say that they did that up there.

Q. Well, you think it is a great thing where a man can live in the Government and vote and not pay taxes, don't you?—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. You don't think that is a good thing?—A. I think a man ought to pay his taxes.

Q. Well, you and I agree precisely. You are still required to pay the tax, are you not?—A. Of course I pay it.

Q. Now you don't have to pay it before you vote, but then—in old times—you had to pay it before you voted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the difference?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me see if I can understand where you were when this thing took place. If I understand you, you came up Union street to Main?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And stopped at the corner?—A. I did.

Q. Where did you come from; what side of the street?—A. The north side.

Q. Towards the river?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you came up by the Arlington Hotel, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when you were standing there and listening to the fuss down the street, as you describe it, you say you saw a man come down Union street from towards the court-house?—A. Yes, sir; after the fuss awhile.

Q. He came down Union from the opposite end to where you stood?—A. From towards the court-house.

Q. Then when did you see two men coming that came up the street?—A. They run right in front of Dr. Cole's and Mr. Wiseman's drug store.

Q. Where did they stop?—A. They run right around the corner of

Mr. Wiseman's drug store, and just as they turned the corner, going down Union street towards Baptist street, they call it, which goes up by the court-house.

Q. Did they turn off of Main street into Union?—A. They turned right around the corner.

Q. Corner of what?—A. Right around Wiseman's drug store.

Q. Well, that is right at the corner of Union and Main?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, they turned around the corner in the street.—A. One of them turned right on the sidewalk and I think the other was out in the street when he fell.

Q. Where was the man standing, that one man that came down Union, where was he standing when he shot?—A. Right off from the corner.

Q. Was he on Main or Union street?—A. He was right at the corner of Main and Union.

Q. The upper corner now from Wiseman's drug store?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a little shanty right there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was he with reference to the shanty?—A. He ran right up so (illustrating). Here's the shanty—here's Main street. He run right out—here's Main street and here's the shanty, and he run right out just opposite the shanty at the corner of Union and Main, and just as these men turned round Wiseman's corner this man said "look out" and drew his pistol from behind. He shot three times, and I saw these two men fall.

Q. Where did they fall?—A. One on the sidewalk and the other in the street.

Q. How far from the door of Wiseman's drug store did he fall? It was on the sidewalk now right at the corner?—A. It was right around the corner, but I could not say how far.

Q. Was he in Union or Main street when he shot?—A. There was two men got shot, right at the same place.

Q. You said one was on the sidewalk and the other in the street. Now, where was the one on the sidewalk. Had he turned into Union or was he in Main street?—A. He had done turned into Union, and he was on the sidewalk.

Q. On the sidewalk in Union street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he fell right there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the other was in Union street going towards the court-house? Then there was nothing but the width of Main street between you and them?—A. No, sir.

Q. And there was nothing but the width of Union street between the man and the one he shot?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, Union street is very narrow, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; it is not very wide.

Q. How wide do you think it is?—A. About seven stepping stones across there, I suppose it is.

Q. They are not more than three feet apart, are they?—A. They are about that, I reckon.

Q. That would be about 21 feet?—A. It is not over that I think. I think that about the distance.

Q. And this man was that close to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he called to them?—A. He didn't call to them. He said "look out" and these two men were running.

Q. He said it twice, did he?—A. He said, "look out, look out," and these men were running, and as this man said look out, they turned the corner and was still running.

Q. How close were they together when he shot; were they side by side?—A. One was a little ahead of the other.

Q. Which one did he shoot first?—A. I am not able to say which one he struck first. It seemed to me they were in just like one party might have been, right there about where you are, and the other one seemed to be about betwixt me and you, apart, something like that. One, though, on the street and the other on the sidewalk.

Q. Now, you never had seen that man before, had you?—A. Johnson?

Q. Yes, the one whose name you were told was Johnson.—A. I don't know whether I had or not.

Q. You didn't know him, did you?—A. I didn't know him personally myself.

Q. What sort of a man was he? Describe him.—A. He seemed to be sort of a low-built man. He was not very tall, nor not very large man.

Q. Not very tall nor very heavy?—A. No, sir; he was not.

Q. Did you notice what colored hair he had?—A. I didn't have time to notice his hair.

Q. Did you notice the color of his clothes?—A. I don't know as I did. I think he had on kind of white clothes, as well as I recollect now.

Q. Can you give any other marks that you recollect on him? You say he had on light clothes, was not a tall man, and was not a very large man—rather low and rather small, and light clothes. Now, can you tell anything else to identify him?—A. I don't know that I can.

Q. Did Motley tell you where he lived?—A. He did.

Q. Where did he say he lived?—A. He said he lived in Mechanicsville, in a place called Craley's Store.

Q. Did he say he knew where he worked?—A. Motley?

Q. Yes.—A. I think he remarked to me that he worked down there at that tailor shop.

Q. What tailor shop?—A. That tailor shop on Union street, right there by the telegram office.

Q. Do you recollect the name of the tailor who kept the shop?—A. I do not know his name; I have frequently seen the shop, but I did not know the man that worked in it at all.

Q. Is it not Jones and Lawler?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was that your regular way of passing?—A. I hardly ever went that way, except when I was going to the court-house, or to the reel-house.

Q. Did you not live down Union street?—A. I did. That was on the other side of that.

Q. Well, coming up to Main street, didn't you always pass that tailor shop?—A. No, sir; I pass by one that was Mr. Gibson's, but didn't pass that unless I had business out that way, and I hardly ever had passed by that shop.

Q. How long was this after you heard the squibs bursting down the street, that you described to us, until Johnson shot these men?—A. I said at first it was some ten or fifteen minutes before I heard that general firing like squibs down the street.

Q. Ten or fifteen minutes before this that you heard the firing, or was this before the firing took place; which was it?—A. These men were not shot until after that firing took place down the street.

Q. How long after?—A. I say it was some ten or fifteen minutes. I still stood there at that same place before even I went to the truck place.

Q. What makes you think it was so long; what did you see in the mean time?—A. After I had been to the truck-house?

Q. But you did not go to the truck-house until after these men were shot, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, between the time you heard this firing down the street and the time the men were shot by Johnson at the corner, what did you do?—A. I stood right there at the place a little ways from where the horse ran away looking for my boys, which was down the street.

Q. How long after the men were shot was it until Mr. Cabell came up and got on the steps and made the speech?—A. I had been, when Mr. Cabell came up there—I believe; I am satisfied—I had been to the court-house.

Q. I thought you went to the truck-house?—A. Well, that is the place where the truck is—the court-house.

Q. How far is the court-house from the corner where you were standing?—A. It is over at the next corner.

Q. Is it not 150 yards?—A. I don't know whether it is that far or not; it may be further.

Q. Which is the furthest? Now, you were standing on the north side of Main street at the mouth of Union—where Union comes in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And going to the court-house you had to cross Main street, go on Union until the next block, and then turn to the right?—A. A little ways.

Q. What street was that?—A. The street called Patton street, I think.

Q. Is not that further than it was from where you stood at the mouth of Union down to Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. I think it is a little.

Q. After Johnson had shot these men you had been up to the court-house and got your truck out?—A. I did not get it out; started to get it out.

Q. Well, some men told you there was no fire?—A. Just run it into the door; didn't even put the tongue inside the door.

Q. But you came down back to where you stood first?—A. Ran right back. We go full haste when we hear an alarm of fire.

Q. Yes, I know; but you did not run going back?—A. I ran just as fast going back as I did coming.

Q. And by the time you got back you saw Mr. Cabell come up?—A. I saw Mr. Cabell come up on the other side of the street, I think. I won't be positive, but I saw Mr. Cabell when he went up on the steps at the old post-office.

Q. When Johnson fired on these two men, what became of him?—A. What became of who?

Q. Johnson?—A. I don't know what became of him.

Q. Didn't you see whether he went down into the earth, or flew, or walked off?—A. When he shot these men, I remarked to Mr. Motley, a colored man who was standing over there where I was, "I say, look out there, that man over there done shot both of them men"; and Motley remarked to me, "That is Johnson. I know him"; and about that time the fire bell commenced to ring. I stood there for a moment or too with Motley, and the bell commenced to ring so rapidly I thought there was a fire. I made haste with all the speed I could make to the truck house.

Q. Now you ran right over to where Johnson was standing?—A. The man that done the shooting—

Q. I know; but Johnson was standing right over at the corner when he shot him, and you ran right over?—A. I don't know whether he was standing after he shot or no.

Q. But when he shot he was there. You ran right towards him?—

A. I know I saw him when he shot him. Now, what became of Johnson I don't know.

Q. When was the last time you saw him?—A. When he shot the men.

Q. You never saw him any more?—A. No, sir.

Q. He disappeared?—A. I don't know whether he did or not.

Q. Can't you tell us where he went?—A. I didn't know the man when he shot, and would not know him now.

Q. That is not an answer to my question.—A. If I saw him I am not aware of it after that.

Q. Well, he was standing then in the open street?—A. Right at the corner of the street when he shot these men. I saw that. I saw these men fall; and I remarked to Motley—

Q. Never mind about your remark to Motley. What became of Johnson?—A. I don't know.

Q. You do not know?—A. No, sir.

Q. How near together did the men fall?—A. I thought one was on the sidewalk and the other was in the street; probably it might have been as far as from you to me, and probably it might have been a little further.

Q. Did they both fall in Union street, or one on Main street and the other on Union street?—A. They both had turned around the corner of Mr. Weisman's, going towards the court-house.

Q. Which way could this man have gone from that corner without your seeing?—A. I didn't wait to see him. Probably if I had been looking for the man—when the bell commenced to ring I lost sight of the men. The bell took my attention off of everything.

Q. You never paid any attention to a man whom you had just seen shoot down two men?—A. Whenever I hear a fire alarm I run right for that bell; nothing won't stop me.

Q. Murder, nor nothing?—A. Nothing won't stop me when I hear that bell.

Q. Well, you saw the way to go there, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Couldn't you see a man that was standing in the way?—A. Probably I saw men standing all about there.

Q. What men?—A. I don't know. Men were drawing in from each way, and coming from each way.

Q. Was anybody else about with pistols?—A. I saw men about with pistols.

Q. Right about that time?—A. In that time I was going to the truck-house I saw one or two men. Being in haste, I didn't take time to see who it was.

Q. Were there any other pistols fired at that point during the affray?—A. I never saw but that one pistol, and I was looking at that just as I am looking at you.

Q. But you never saw what became of the man?—A. I never saw what became of him. My attention was called by the ringing of the bell.

Q. Did he not go back to the tailor shop?—A. I don't know.

Q. If he had been running up Union street right before you you would have seen him, would you not?—A. I don't know. There was other members going on to the truck-house, I suppose, as I was.

Q. Several others?—A. I don't know whether there was or not.

Q. Was there anybody at all running upon the street before you?—
A. Yes, sir; people who had been down the street were turning the corner and going the way I was.

Q. Many of them?—A. Some men, some women, and some children.

Q. Did you ever make any inquiries afterwards to find out who Johnson was?—A. I inquired of several people there what sort of looking man he was. Some people said they did not know him, some said they did know him.

Q. Did you not try to learn who it was that had shot down two men in your presence?—A. I did make inquiries, and tried to find out.

Q. Did you find out anything more than what Motley told you?—A. I don't think I gained any information that satisfied me but what Motley told me.

Q. Could you not have found out by asking somebody else if Motley's story was true?—A. If I had put myself to any trouble I might have probably.

Q. But you did not?—A. I did not, because I didn't expect to be called up to give any testimony or anything, and hence took no account of it at all.

Q. Did you tell anybody about this before?—A. I told a good many that asked if I saw who shot. I told them I saw a man that shot two men.

Q. Were they white or colored that you told?—A. I told white men that I work with every day.

Q. Who were they?—A. One, Mr. George Weifert, and other white men have asked me about that same time since that, and I have told them the very same thing.

Q. That you have told here to-day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did nobody have any curiosity to know who this man Johnson was; did nobody try to find out, to your knowledge?—A. Not as I know of. Mr. Weifert, when I made the remark to him, said he had to run like smoke to save himself that day. He said the balls were flying all around his head.

Q. Where was he?—A. Me and him worked together every day at Holland's factory; and I think Mr. Weifert said he was making down this alley by Mr. Nicholas & Hessberg's; leads right down by that store. I think he said he was coming out that alley.

Q. He was right close in the fight, then?—A. I don't know whether he was or not.

Q. Well, the fight was down near Woolfolk & Blair's; was it not right along the street there?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Did you see any colored people with arms?—A. I didn't.

Q. Neither before nor after this shooting commenced?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long was it after the firing you described on the street there (which seemed like squibs in a barrel) before this shooting took place that you have described, that killed the two men; how long did it seem to you?—A. Ten or fifteen minutes.

Q. But it was before the fire bells rang; and it was after the fire bells rang that you heard Colonel Cabell on the steps?—A. I think so.

Q. How long after? It was after you had gone to your truck house and came back that you heard Colonel Cabell say what you have stated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after you got back?—A. It was not very long; directly I got back.

Q. Did you hear any more shooting after you saw these two men killed?—A. I don't think I did.

Q. You think that finished the day's work, do you?—A. I think that decided it.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. In what part of the body were those men shot?—A. I don't recollect where they all were shot, but one of them was shot about the eye; somewhere right over the eye; and the other two I could not tell you.

Q. Shot in one part of the head and come out of the other?—A. I disremember whether they come out or not. I looked at them running out of the place, right over the street where the ball went, but whether it came out on the other side I can't say. That was Ed. Davis.

Q. Did you see how the other was wounded?—A. Yes; I saw, but I am unable to describe where.

Q. You cannot tell where he was hit?—A. I think he was hit about the head somewhere.

Q. Both of them were hit in the head?—A. I think he was.

W. P. AVERETT sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville, Virginia.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there now about sixteen or seventeen years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Shoe and hat business.

Q. Were you there on the 3d of November last?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you at the time this disturbance commenced?—A. During the first part of it I was at the store.

Q. Where is your store located?—A. Right below Nicholas & Hessburg's, on the corner of Spring and Main streets. I think they call it Spring street—Market street.

Q. When the disturbance began you were in your own store?—A. When the fight took place between the two men first I was in the store.

Q. What time did you go out?—A. I went out as soon as I heard of it.

Q. Where did you go?—A. I went up to the scene of action.

Q. At what particular point in the street did you go?—A. I went first to Messrs. Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair's office.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. I remained there about a minute or two.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. I went from there down towards the opera house. I went up to the opera house door.

Q. You went to call the people from the opera house, did you not?—A. Yes, sir; I went there for that purpose.

Q. You did call them?—A. Well, I attempted to.

Q. Had there been any general shooting when you did that?—A. No, sir; there hadn't been.

Q. It was before the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what you said?—A. No, sir; I don't now.

Q. Well, the import of it was that you wanted them to come to the street, was it not?—A. Yes, sir. I saw so few white men there that I thought it was necessary for more to be out.

Q. You did not remain there at the opera house?—A. No, sir; I only went to the door and came immediately back.

Q. Did you run?—A. No, sir; I walked pretty fast, though.

Q. What is the distance?—A. I suppose about fifty or seventy-five yards.

Q. Where did you go when you returned?—A. I went back to Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair's office.

Q. Where the line of white people was?—A. I did not know as there was any line of white people there.

Q. Where the gathering of white people was?—A. No particular gathering there then; the fight was over; just a few scattered around.

Q. When you returned the fight was over; the general fight?—A. No, sir; when I returned the fight had not commenced.

Q. Where did you take your stand?—A. I went to the office first, from the opera house.

Q. What office?—A. Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair's office.

Q. For what purpose?—A. I went there just to see what was going on from the opera house, and I inquired around there and looked about, and everything seemed to be sort of quiet then, and I just walked back, sort of sauntered down the street a little way, to about Vass's hardware store or Pierce's barber-shop; down there somewhere.

Q. You were not standing still at any point then?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Where were you when the first fire was given?—A. I was about at Tom Pierce's barber-shop, next door to Nicholas & Hesberg's bar-room.

Q. Were you armed?—A. Yes; I had my pistol with me.

Q. Where did you take it from?—A. I took it from my safe in the store.

Q. When you started out yourself? How long had you owned that particular pistol?—A. I had owned it about—I don't know—three or four weeks, I suppose.

Q. Do you remember where you purchased it?—A. Yes; I purchased it from Vass's hardware store.

Q. What was it?—A. It was a .38 caliber, Smith & Wesson.

Q. Did you fire it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you able to say how many pistols were fired?—A. No, sir; I am not. There seemed to be about 75 or 100; 50 to 100 somewhere.

Q. When the white people fired where were you?—A. I was right at Tom Pierce's barber-shop; at least I was not in the barber-shop, but standing there.

Q. How far from those who fired?—A. About 10 or 15 yards, I reckon.

Q. You were not among the persons who fired?—A. I was not immediately amongst them; no, sir.

Q. Where did you go after that?—A. As soon as the general firing was over the niggers pretty generally left the street and dispersed.

Q. They ran immediately when the firing commenced, didn't they?—A. Not exactly, immediately; they scampered off pretty quickly; didn't show any pluck, very much.

Q. Were there men, women, and children there?—A. No; I did not see any women and children; I don't remember any; I think they were pretty well grown men.

Q. Which way did they run?—A. They run in different directions; some run up, some run down, and some run across Market street.

Q. Were there shots fired after them as they ran?—A. Well, I reckon there were a few, probably. After all of them had dispersed there was no firing.

Q. Of course not. They would not fire into vacancy.—A. Well, I don't mean that; I suppose there was probably thirty or fifty men scattered down the street, and probably all of them had fired and were firing.

Q. What occasion had you to make this purchase of the pistol at that time?—A. I had one pistol at home and I preferred keeping that there, and I just felt like I needed one in the store. We had no fire weapons there at all, and I felt I needed one in the store.

Q. In your own store?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a store did you keep there?—A. A shoe and hat store.

Q. What is the size of the building or the room in which your store was?—A. I don't know the feet. It is a pretty large store. I suppose about 75 feet by 30, probably.

Q. Do you belong to a Democratic club?—A. Yes, sir; I belong to my ward club.

Q. Was there an executive committee of that club?—A. Yes, sir; I think there was. I did not take any very active part in it.

Q. Were you a member of that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Johnson, spoken of by the last witness?—A. I don't know which Johnson he is talking about.

Q. Well, he described where he worked.—A. He didn't describe the man that I know; the description of the man he gave I didn't know at all.

Q. The one that lived at Mechanicsville?—A. I don't know a man that lived at Mechanicsville; I know one Johnson, but don't know where he lives and don't know any man that answers the description he gives.

Q. You don't recognize from his description the man you know?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know any one of that name living at Mechanicsville?—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Where were you when the fire bell rang?—A. I declare I don't remember distinctly; when the fire bells rung it was all excitement; I was out on Main street, though I suppose somewhere.

Q. But you are unable to give the particulars?—A. Yes, sir; I am not able to do that; I don't remember; I was right smartly excited.

Q. As I understand you, you didn't fire your revolver at all?—A. I did not.

Q. You probably observed whether the people left the opera house when you made the call there, or didn't you wait for them?—A. In going I met some of them coming; probably they had been informed by somebody else.

By Mr. VANCE;

Q. How came you to leave that store in the first place; what attracted your attention?—A. My porter had been out with some bundles or was either returning from dinner, and had come in in a very excited way and said somebody was hollering murder out there, and they were killing people or something of that kind, some expression of that kind, and he said enough to make me believe there was some row up the street.

Q. Up to that time had you heard a pistol shot?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long after you got out on the street before you did hear a pistol shot?—A. I went to their office and the opera house, and waited around I suppose it was ten or fifteen minutes; I suppose it was ten minutes anyhow.

Q. Before you heard any pistol shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you heard a pistol shot was that the beginning of the general firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't hear that pistol, then, spoken of as being discharged by Lea at Adams when the fist fight was going on?—A. No, sir; I don't know that Lea discharged a pistol at Adams at all.

Q. Well, you have heard the witness speak of it here, have you not?—A. No, sir; I haven't heard that he fired at any particular man at all.

Q. It is sufficient for my purpose that you can say that the first shot you heard was the beginning of the general firing?—A. It was the general firing.

Q. But your porter told you that some men were crying murder?—A. Yes, sir; hollering murder and all sorts of things; he was nearly scared to death.

Q. Did you go right to Woolfolk & Blair's then?—A. Yes, sir; as soon as I could get my hat.

Q. What was going on when you got there?—A. The fight between Lawson and Noel seemed to be over and they had gone away. I didn't see either of them, and I saw, I suppose, four or five white men standing around the office.

Q. And now many colored men?—A. I suppose fifty.

Q. You say you saw no women and children in that crowd?—A. No, sir; I didn't notice any. There might have been some there.

Q. Was there anybody at the time in your vision mixing among the colored people and apparently trying to get them to disperse?—A. I saw one man in particular. I have reason to believe there were a good many others, but I saw one man in particular trying to get them to disperse.

Q. Who was that?—A. That was T. J. Corbin.

Q. Did you hear what he said?—A. No, I couldn't hear what he said, but he was waving his hand and was trying—came back and remarked to me—that he was trying to get them to disperse, and, to use his own language, he said he would be damned if he could get them to go away.

Q. Did you hear what they said?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear a word they said.

Q. How did they appear; was it an angry crowd?—A. That was my reason for going to the opera house. I saw so few white men there, and the crowd of negroes looked so threatening to me, that I said to some one "Why in gracious ain't those people out of the opera house," and I am going down to get them out.

Q. You said you just went to the door; didn't go in?—A. No, sir; the door seemed to be held by the sergeant-at-arms, and I had forced it enough to look in the door and hollered "Come out!"

Q. Did you tell them why?—A. I don't know whether I did. I probably said they were fighting, or something of that kind; I don't remember now.

Q. You then walked back to the office—you walked up the street as far as the barber shop?—A. No, sir. I went to Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair's office first; came back there.

Q. Now, how long after you gave the alarm was it until the people began to pour out of the opera house?—A. I heard a good many had already gone, and told them the same thing I had before, and I don't know whether my call made them come out or not.

Q. How long after your call before they did come?—A. I don't know hardly; they come out.

Mr. LAPHAM. He says he met them when he was going.

The WITNESS. I said I probably met a few.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. They did come out on the sidewalk, did they, a good many of them?—A. I don't think all of them come; there might some of them come. A good many of them might, but the opera house was very much crowded.

Q. They could not all get out at once, of course?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, how many people came out and went up as far as where these men were, in front of Blair's office, before the firing began?—A. I think it was a very few.

Q. You met some going up?—A. I probably met a few. I don't know whether they came out of the opera house or not. I met people passing up the street. I met people passing just, of course, as people are always passing up and down the street. I don't know whether they came out of the opera house or not.

Q. From what you saw, how many white people do you think were present when the firing began?—A. I suppose probably there were forty or fifty that were there immediately after the firing commenced or were there during the time of the firing.

Q. On the sidewalk between Woolfolk & Blair's and the opera house?—A. Yes, sir; between Woolfolk's and Nicholas' and Hessberg's corner.

Q. Did the colored people come up as rapidly as the white people?—A. I didn't notice them at all. There was such a big crowd there when I first went up that I didn't notice any accessions.

Q. Did you really think that these white men on the street were in any danger from that crowd of colored people?—A. That is the only reason in the world why I went to the opera house, because I was uneasy about it. I saw so few white men in such a big crowd of negroes that I was uneasy.

Q. And Mr. Corbin had told you they would not separate?—A. Yes, sir. He had just been amongst them and he said that they said, "damned if they would go," or something to that effect.

Q. You say the crowd appeared to be an angry and dangerous crowd?—A. It had that appearance to me.

Q. You say you could not hear what they said. Did you see any gesticulations like men talking?—A. Yes, that is one thing. I saw probably a few of them waving their hands around and shoving, or something of that kind, or loud talking, but I didn't hear what they said.

Q. Did you stand on the sidewalk until the firing was over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you did not discharge your pistol?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see any weapons in the hands of the colored men?—A. I don't know that I did; I didn't notice particularly.

Q. Could you see from where you stood whether there was any firing from the colored ranks or not?—A. I couldn't say that, either, sir; I couldn't say that they did.

Q. The white people were above you on the sidewalk, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; they were above me when they first commenced firing; not more than one or two white men I don't think were below me after the first volley came in.

Q. Only one or two white men below you?—A. I think so.

Q. Could you tell, from where you stood, if the colored people had fired pistols, could you have told one from the other, whether it came from the white ranks or the colored ranks?—A. I don't know whether I could or not.

Q. Were the whites between you and the colored, or were they both equally in your view and sight?—A. The colored people were out in, the middle of the street; there were a few colored people getting out of the way running across the sidewalk to get into the stores.

Q. Was that before or after the firing began?—A. That was while the firing was going on, or directly after the main volley fired.

Q. How long did the firing last?—A. That is hard to tell; I don't suppose, though, it lasted three minutes; two minutes, something of that kind.

Q. Two minutes?—A. I don't reckon it did last over two minutes.

Q. You were asked if the white people fired at the blacks after they had run; do you know whether that is so or not?—A. It is hard to express myself there; a good many of the negroes, I suppose, run as soon as they were fired at, and probably as soon as the pistols were presented, and as the white men, being strung out that way, they all had shots; probably some of them shot two or three times; then of course the negroes were running; I don't think there was any disposition of the white men to fire upon the fleeing crowd.

Q. Did you see or hear anything said that indicated a disposition to fire on the colored men after they had run?—A. Well, sir, probably; I don't remember now; I probably might have heard some drunken fellow say so, but I don't remember.

Q. Well, if you don't remember, you need not say it. It might likely have been, might it not, that a large portion of them were running and others standing there?—A. Yes, it might have been. Under the excitement of the moment I was not capable of judging.

Q. But they could not all have run at once if they had tried, could they, because some have got to make room for others in a close crowd?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think that these men, from what you saw, fired on those colored people after the apparent necessity for firing at all had passed away?—A. I don't think so; if they did I didn't see it.

Q. Could you see any men, to judge from the position of their pistols, who fired in the air?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. Were you looking on directly at the parties when the first pistols were fired?—A. No, sir; I don't know as I was.

Q. Did you hear any command given to fire?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any command given to form a line or anything of that sort?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any line formed?—A. No, sir; there was no line formed that I know of.

Q. How wide is the sidewalk?—A. It is about 5 or 6 feet.

Q. Well, a number of men standing on the sidewalk and facing the center of the street would necessarily get somewhat in line, would they not?—A. Yes, sir; but I don't think there was any formal line made.

Q. You didn't see anything that looked like a military formation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any men going in or coming out of Woolfolk's & Blair's office getting pistols?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you go in?—A. No, sir; I didn't go into the office at all.

Q. Did you see Mr. Dance standing in the door with a shotgun?—A. I did.

Q. Did he fire at anybody?—A. I don't think he did.

Q. You didn't see him?—A. I did not; I don't believe he did.

Q. Did you hear him call out to anybody?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You didn't hear him call out to somebody to go ahead as soon as they were ready?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear anything of that kind.

Q. Do you know Charles Adams?—A. I do.

Q. Did you see him in the street?—A. The first time when I left my store to go up I saw him coming out of the door. He lives at Nicholas's and Hessberg's, and he seemed to be very mad about something. He was using harsh language about a white man beating a negro up there to death, or something of that kind. I didn't notice him particularly. I passed him going up the street.

Q. Did you see Captain Graves?—A. Yes, sir; I think I saw Captain Graves.

Q. Where was he?—A. He was very near me, to my left; I think down near—right below—the barber shop.

Q. Did you see him shoot Charles Adams?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you see Charles Adams out in the street?—A. No, sir; I did not see Charles Adams out in the street after the firing occurred.

Q. Did you see Mr. Hatcher?—A. Yes; I saw Mr. Hatcher.

Q. Did he come up near where Mr. Graves was and fire at some running negroes?—A. No, sir; I don't think he had a pistol at all. I didn't see him with a pistol at all.

Q. Did you see Mr. Graves there on the sidewalk at all after the firing was all over?—A. No; I think the firing was going on when I saw him.

Q. After the main firing at Woolfolk's had ceased, and the darkies were fleeing in different directions, did you see Mr. Graves any more?—A. After all the firing was over, did I see him?

Q. Well, when that main part of the firing in front of Woolfolk's was over?—A. Yes; I think I saw him. I don't know. You asked me just now whether it was after or before. I don't know whether it was during the main volley or immediately after the main volley.

Q. Did you see him fire his pistol at all?—A. I don't think I did.

Q. You didn't see him at the corner right opposite to your corner—the corner of Nicholas & Hessberg's—firing up and down Market street?—A. No, sir; I didn't see him.

Q. Well, you were on the street; how long were you on the street after the firing was over?—A. I walked up the street to where the old post-office was, and the business was pretty much dispensed with for the balance of the evening, and I didn't return to the store at all.

Q. Didn't go down?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any firing after you started up the street?—A. No, sir.

Q. None at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. You stopped at the old post-office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from that time on you heard no firing?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear any firing on the street. I heard pistol shots around that night, but never heard anybody shooting at anybody or anything of that kind.

Q. Do you know Jack Redd?—A. No, sir, I don't. I have heard of him; don't know him, though.

Q. You didn't see him that evening?—A. No, sir; I don't know him. I might have seen him. I know the names of but very few negroes there.

Q. Do you know this colored man Hubbard?—A. What is the other name?

Q. Jefferson.—A. Yes; I know him.

Q. Did you see him?—A. I might have seen him that day; I don't know.

Q. Then you say that the description that Cole gave of Johnson, whom Motley said was a tailor, working up at that tailor shop on Union street, that Cole's description didn't suit that man?—A. No; it don't suit the description of any Johnson I know in Danville at all.

Q. Don't suit the description of any Johnson?—A. No, sir.

Q. What kind of a man is that tailor there?—A. The one I know?

Q. Yes.—A. He is a tall fellow, has, I think, black hair; sort of sway-back kind of a fellow; careless kind of a fellow.

Q. Slouchy?—A. Yes; a very manly form, but just walks carelessly.

Q. Loosely?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice after the firing was over any marks on the houses?—A. I noticed a pistol mark, I think, on Hamlin's frame window. I don't know just where it was.

Q. Where is that?—A. It is right across from Ruffin's and Woolfolk's, nearly directly opposite.

Q. That is opposite to where the white people stood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But did you see any marks or examine for any right along Woolfolk's or Hessberg's?—A. No, I didn't examine for any.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Where was it you saw Captain Graves first that evening?—A. I saw him in the street, I think it was below me.

Q. Didn't he pass down below you?—A. I didn't see him pass below me.

Q. But you saw him below you?—A. Yes, sir, I saw him.

Q. That was towards Market street from where you stood?—A. Yes, sir, towards Market street from where I stood.

Q. What time was that?—A. I don't know exactly.

Q. Was it after the general firing?—A. That's what I don't remember; I think it probably might have been directly after the main firing.

Q. Now, if he fired at men running into Market street after the general firing in Main street was all over, that was an unnecessary act, wasn't it?—A. After the general firing was over?

Q. Yes. If he went down and fired at people fleeing into Market street, that was an unnecessary act, wasn't it?—A. Well, I don't know the circumstances exactly but I should think it would be.

Q. How many shots do these revolvers fire generally?—A. You can get them to shoot five or six shots.

Q. Those that are used there?—A. About five, I think.

Q. They fire the five shots by pulling the trigger, don't they—that is, the trigger revolves the cylinder?—A. They are what they call self-acting, I believe.

Q. So that a man can fire five shots about as soon as he can manipulate and pull?—A. Yes; pretty much.

Q. How quick can he fire five shots?—A. I declare I don't know; I never fired one of the things in my life.

Q. How quick do you think he could?—A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you think he could do it inside of half a minute?—A. I think he could.

Q. Now, when this firing began, didn't it have that rattling sound as though the triggers were being pulled quick?—A. I didn't notice anything of that kind.

Q. Do you say it was only a single shot from a revolver?—A. I don't know; I didn't hear any rattling about it.

Q. I mean by rattling, shots in quick succession.—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You don't mean to say that all the pistols were discharged simultaneously?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were successive shots?—A. They could not fire all at once; I suppose they might have aimed to fire at once.

Q. Well, was it not the fact that there were successive shots—say that they were fired from the same or different revolvers—shots in succession, one after another?—A. Well, yes, sir; they did occur that way.

Q. Now, any one holding any one of these revolvers could fire five times before a minute easily, couldn't they?—A. I don't know whether they could do it in a minute or not.

Q. What! fiveshots—twelve seconds to a shot—why, he can fire about as quick as he can move his finger so [illustrating], couldn't he?—A. Why, you see the hammer has to go back.

Q. Why it is drawn back by the trigger?—A. Yes; when you pull the trigger the hammer falls back.

Q. Well, the moment the hammer falls back it goes off?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Cannot it be done as fast as a man pulls his finger so [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose so; I am not used to those things; never fired one in my life.

Q. You keep two and never fired one?—A. I have never fired one of those self-cocking revolvers, or whatever you call them.

Q. Was it before or after you went to the opera house that Colonel Corbin told you what you have stated? Was not that after you came back?—A. I don't know whether it was the first time I went up there. I went and came back and sort of sauntered down the street.

Q. Was it not after you came back from the opera house that Colonel Corbin stated to you what you said?—A. I think probably it was after I came back from the opera house.

Q. You got back from there before the general firing began?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long should you say it was after you returned before the firing?—A. About four or five minutes; I reckon from three to five minutes.

Q. How far where you from this office door where the man stood with the musket?—A. There is one big hardware store between that store and the barber shop, where I was standing.

Q. What distance?—A. About 30 or 40 feet.

Q. In the din there you would not have been apt to hear anything said, then, if anything had been said, would you; or, in other words, your attention was not attracted to the shop where the man was standing with the musket?—A. No, sir.

Q. There might have been anything said and you might not have heard?—A. No, sir. I said in my testimony I didn't hear anything that was said.

Q. No; you wouldn't have been likely to hear?—A. No, sir; I wouldn't have been likely to have heard anything said around that real-estate office.

Q. Nor from the white people who first fired; you were not near enough to hear what they said?—A. No, sir.

Q. If there had been an order to fire you would not have heard it, would you?—A. No, sir; I don't think I would.

Q. Whether from the office door or from the ranks?—A. No, sir.

NELSON SCOTT sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have been living in Danville, off and on, ever since the first year of the war.

Q. What is your age?—A. I am twenty-nine.

Q. You were a boy then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you a slave?—A. I was.

Q. Who was your master?—A. A gentleman named Frank Scott.

Q. Is he living yet?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a single man?—A. No, sir; I am married.

Q. Have you a family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November last?—A. I was at my business in the revenue office.

Q. What was your business there?—A. A messenger.

Q. You are a messenger in the revenue office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the first of this controversy you saw in the streets?—A. I heard there was going to be a speaking down to the opera house that evening, at 3 o'clock, I think.

Q. A meeting?—A. Yes, sir; denouncing Colonel Sims, I think. That was my understanding, and I started down there.

Q. You started to go to that meeting?—A. Yes, sir. I started to go down there, and I met a man running up before I got to the post-office, who said, "They are fighting down the street, and Hense Lawson was cut very bad;" and I hurried on down, and I saw a crowd standing around.

Q. When you first reached there how many people were there?—A. As near as I can recollect, there was about one hundred people.

Q. One hundred of each?—A. No; one hundred in all.

Q. How many of them were whites and how many colored?—A. I don't know as I could exactly divide them. It looked to me there was about the same number.

Q. What was the character of the crowd of colored people?—A. The colored people were standing mostly out in the street.

Q. Were they men, women, and children?—A. Yes, sir; they seemed to be men, women, and children.

Q. Gathered there from curiosity?—A. Yes, sir; it seems so.

Q. Did you see whether any of the whites had pistols?—A. Just as I got in the crowd the white people were standing on the sidewalk, and I would have had to go through them to get out where the colored people were. I staid on the sidewalk and saw Mr. Freeman, one of the police. He was the only policeman I saw, and he was advising them to "step."

Q. Did you see whether the white people had pistols?—A. They didn't have any pistols out then, but I saw a man standing in Mr. Ruffin & Woolfolk's office with a double barrel shot-gun, and two or three others standing down below. I saw them in front of the hardware store.

Q. With shot-guns?—A. Yes, sir. While I was standing there Mr. Freeman was telling them not to have a fuss.

Q. You saw four persons then with shotguns?—A. From four to six.

Q. With double-barrel shotguns?—A. Yes, sir; and Mr. Freeman seemed to be advising them not to have any fuss, and Mr. Hatcher, I know him very well, and I saw there was going to be a fuss, and while I was standing there on the outside of the crowd, Hatcher says, "Don't come after us; go on and make them negroes leave here."

Q. Who did he say that to?—A. To the police—Mr. Freeman.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Repeat that.—A. He says, "Don't come after us; now, make them damn niggers leave here," and Mr. Freeman said, "They ain't doing anything now;" but he says, "You all must get off the street," and Mr. Hatcher started out in the street. Mr. Hatcher made a bolt out from him and started out in the street and told the men to stand with him and "we would kill the last one of them."

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Who said that?—A. Mr. Hatcher. Then I got back. I started on up street and I met a good many colored people coming down and I advised them not to go down; several of them went on back up with me. When I got back—just about Paxton's jewelry store, I think—I heard a holloering and people were coming out of the opera house then.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. What were they doing when they came out of the opera house?—A. They came out hollering. It looked like every one wanted to get before each other.

Q. Running?—A. It looked like they wanted to get into the hardware store.

Q. And yelling as they came?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you hear anything they said?—A. No, sir; only just they were hollering; that was what called my attention, and I kept on walking up street and the firing commenced. I got up in front of the Arlington and the firing ceased then, but the smoke was so that I couldn't see any one at all.

Q. Where were you when the firing began?—A. I was at Mr. Paxton's jewelry store.

Q. How far from the people who fired?—A. I reckon about 25 or 30 yards.

Q. Could you see who fired?—A. No, sir; I could not.

Q. Could you see where the firing was from; from what point?—A. When the firing commenced I walked fast until I got out of reach of the pistols.

Q. Yes, but whether the firing was from the white people who were there or from the center of the street?—A. When the firing commenced the white people were standing both sides up from Ruffin & Woolfolk's office.

Q. But where was the firing from?—A. The firing was from the crowd. When Mr. Hatcher made those remarks I turned off, because I thought there was going to be trouble.

Q. What did they do when Mr. Hatcher said that?—A. The white people followed him out in the street; seemed to make a line.

Q. But that was before the firing began?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon did the trouble commence after he said that and they formed in line there?—A. It was as soon as I could walk 20 or 30 yards; may be more.

Q. How many guns or pistols should you say were fired?—A. If I judge right I should say not less than one hundred and fifty. It was like any one might light a package of squibs and throw them in a barrel.

Q. A rattling fire?—A. Yes, sir. A good many wagons were standing around and horses when the pistols commenced firing and the wagons ran above me and I stood there and looked.

Q. Where did the colored people go when the firing began?—A. When the smoke got away so I could see, there was no colored people on the street that I could see, but a good many run by me whilst I was going on up.

Q. Did you hear any shots after they were fleeing?—A. I heard shots.

Q. After they commenced to run away, I mean?—A. I can't tell exactly when they did commence to run. When they run by me they were running and they were shooting then. The smoke blinded me so I couldn't see any one in the street. When the smoke cleared away I thought there would be a heap more dead men than there were, from the fuss that the pistols made.

Q. Now, when the smoke cleared away did the white men remain in the street?—A. Yes, sir. And then I only saw Mr. George Lea, with a pistol. Then he walked out in the street with the crowd and seemed to point his pistol backward and forward across the street, but what he was pointing at I don't know.

Q. Did he fire?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Did you hear any shouts from the whites there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they say?—A. I couldn't say, to understand.

Q. Now, as near as you can remember, what was it?—A. Just hollering and hurrahing.

Q. Hurrahing for whom?—A. I don't know what it was for, but they were hollering and just as they got right in front of the Arlington they stopped.

Q. You don't remember what the shout was as they were going up the street except that they were hurrahing?—A. No; and I cleared then and got on the revenue steps.

Q. That's all you saw of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a voter?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you voted?—A. I have been voting ever since I was twenty-one years of age.

Q. Was last year the first year the colored people could vote without paying the poll-tax?—A. I think it was.

Q. Didn't you have to pay the tax as a condition of voting always before last year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you registered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You intended to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you?—A. The reason I didn't vote I was sent out in the country that day to hold tickets at Ringgold—to distribute tickets.

Q. Where is that?—A. That is about 5 miles from Danville.

Q. Did any colored people go there to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What proportion of the vote was out there?—A. I had never been to that precinct before, but they cast all the votes, I think, except about eighty.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You were sent out with tickets that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any of them voted?—A. Where, at Ringgold?

Q. Were any of those tickets voted by the colored men that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The scare didn't reach out that far?—A. I don't know that they knowed much of it. It is 5 or 6 miles.

Q. Well, they are right on the railroad, are they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The first station from town. Don't you reckon they had heard all about it?—A. Well, anybody that takes newspapers might heard about it.

Q. Don't the colored people have a sort of a grape-vine that communicates the news all around?—A. They used to say they did, but I don't think they use it now.

Q. You think they did vote out there because they hadn't heard of the trouble in town? Didn't you tell them about it?—A. I don't know whether they heard of it or not.

Q. Well, you just said you reckoned they hadn't heard of it; didn't you tell them all about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you tell them they had better not vote ; it was dangerous?—
A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't tell them that?—A. No, sir.

Q. You staid all day, did you?—A. I did.

Q. Didn't come in town in time to vote yourself at your own precinct?—A. No, sir ; I did not.

Q. Didn't the colored people or Coalitionists carry the box there at Ringgold?—A. They did.

Q. How large majority?—A. About 40 votes, I think. I think that's it. I am not certain.

Q. Well, it was a majority, at all events?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many did they cast that day there altogether, the Coalitionists?—A. I don't know how many.

Q. Was it not about 400?—A. I don't think that many.

Q. Come down to exact figures ; was it not 367 votes they cast that day?—A. I don't know exactly the number, but I think we had a majority of 40.

Q. You said you heard there was going to be speaking in the opera house to denounce Mr. Sims?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went down to hear it?—A. Started down.

Q. Who told you they were going to denounce Mr. Sims?—A. I heard it around town.

Q. That don't answer my question.—A. I couldn't recollect now who did say it.

Q. Did any other colored people go down that way for the same purpose?—A. Yes. I know one man who went down there, and he told me he was not admitted.

Q. Yes, he went down to see what they were going to do about—
Mr. LAPHAM. Went down to hear what they were going to say.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. Did you hear Sims speak the night before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it he said now that made the white people mad?—A. I don't know what made them mad. I know I was up there about the time. I heard some of the speech.

Q. What was it he said?—A. I don't know. I can't go and repeat the speech.

Q. I don't want you to do that ; God forbid ; but you can give us some of the salient points. What did he say about the men who signed that circular?—A. He said, I think he said, the men that signed that circular, living in town, knowing that it was a willful lie, were scoundrels, or something like that.

Q. Well, didn't he tell the colored men not to be afraid—that they might shoot them in the dark?—A. No, sir ; I didn't hear him say that.

Q. It was a bitter speech, wasn't it? Hot and bitter?—A. No more bitter than I have heard both parties abuse each other.

Q. That is not an answer to my question. Was it not a hot, bitter speech?—A. I am not a judge of politics and I can't say whether it was hot and bitter or not.

Q. Well, when a man is called an infernal liar and scoundrel, that is tolerably warm, isn't it?—A. That is something I would not like to take.

Q. Didn't you all apprehend that Mr. Sims was going to be assailed on the streets that day?—A. I did in the morning of that day.

Q. Didn't most all the colored people that you saw think the same thing?—A. I couldn't say that they did.

Q. Don't you think it was the general talk and understanding that he was in danger of being assailed?—A. I heard Colonel Sims tell about that night, if there was any one there that had to write him a challenge he would go to North Carolina right away with them.

Q. That he would go with them anywhere if they would send him an invitation?—A. He said he would go with them to North Carolina.

Q. Have you said, or do you decline to say, that it was the general understanding among the colored people, that Mr. Sims was in danger of being attacked?—A. No, sir; I don't say it was a general understanding among the colored people.

Q. But some of them did think so; you for one?—A. Yes, I thought probably he might be attacked.

Q. Do you know of any colored man going armed, keeping along on the streets on the watch out?—A. When, at night?

Q. During the day.—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Don't you know that a number of them were on the street armed, walking up and down to look out and see if anybody was going to jump on Mr. Sims?—A. You ask me don't I know it?

Q. Yes.—A. I do not.

Q. Didn't you hear it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Neither know nor heard it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You said when you got down to where the fuss was, you saw about a hundred people present, all told?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. And about an equal number of white and black?—A. I don't know exactly, but that is what I think.

Q. But the most of the blacks were women and children?—A. I didn't say that.

Q. What do you say now?—A. I said there was some women and children there.

Q. How many?—A. I don't know.

Q. I will put it this way. What proportion, a half, or a quarter, or a third, or a fifth, or a tenth, of the crowd of black people were women or children?—A. It may be three or four women and children down there. I saw people rushing up as I was.

Q. How close up did you go?—A. I got pretty close upon them. I had to go through the white people mostly to get where the fight was. I didn't see the fight.

Q. Just tell me what it was you heard Mr. Hatcher say.—A. I heard Mr. Freeman; he seemed to be advising them not to have any fuss, and Mr. Hatcher says, "Go away from here; don't say anything to us; go on, and make them damn niggers leave here;" and Mr. Freeman says, "They are not doing anything now." He said, "Damned if you don't make them go away we will kill the last one of them, and them that protect them."

Q. Did you see anybody else try to disperse the crowd and keep the peace?—A. No, sir; I don't know as I did.

Q. It is said by other witnesses that several men were mingling in the crowd, Mr. Booth, Mr. Corbin, and the colored policeman, Walter Withers, and some others, and that Captain Oliver made a speech and begged them to go away, and so on. Did you hear any of those?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Not a thing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, who got the white people out on the street and made a line?—A. Hatcher.

Q. What did he say to the white people?—A. When he said that, "We will kill them all and them that protect them," he said, "Stick to me," and he led them out in the street.

Q. Off the sidewalk?—A. Yes, lead them out; maybe probably as many as a dozen went out, and I turned my back and started away and met some colored people coming on down, who asked me what the trouble was, and I just told them to go away now.

Q. By whose advice was it you left, or did you go of your own motion?—A. I didn't want any advice then.

Q. You didn't need any advice except circumstances?—A. No, sir.

Q. How far did you get up before you halted?—A. My attention was called then by hearing people hollering and running, and I looked back and they was coming out of the opera house.

Q. Which way did you go when you left, up or down street?—A. Up street.

Q. When you heard the people hollering where were you on Main street?—A. I was just in front of Paxton's jewelry store.

Q. How far is that from the opera house?—A. I reckon it is about 50 or 60 yards.

Q. Why, it is more than that to the corner of Market street, ain't it?—A. I don't know exactly how far it is.

Q. Well, it is nearly two blocks, isn't it?—A. Nearly two blocks?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. Is not the opera house one block from Market street?—A. No, sir.

Q. What street is the opera house on?—A. On Main.

Q. And what is the street next to it on the other side, crossing Main; North Market street?—A. North Market street—no, not Market, I reckon. Well, it is the street that runs right by Mr. Averett & White's shoe store. I don't know what the name is. It's an alley.

Q. Well, then, you heard the hollering?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. People coming out of the opera house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how long was it from the time the people got out of the opera house until the firing began?—A. It seemed to be one minute. I don't say everybody was out of the opera house.

Q. Well, I know. A part of them came out?—A. Yes, sir; a part of them came out.

Q. How long then until the firing commenced after you heard them hollering as they came out of the opera house?—A. Some gentlemen came running and hollering, looked like they was trying to get in front of each other, and some run away out in the street.

Q. That still don't answer my question. I say how long after you heard that hollering until after the pistol shots commenced?—A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. You could get tolerably near it, I reckon, just to oblige me. Was it as much as a minute?—A. Probably a minute.

Q. Was it as much as two minutes?—A. I said probably more than a minute. I couldn't tell you exactly.

Q. I know you couldn't, but you could to the best of your judgment?—A. That is to the best of my judgment; that's what I think, if you want me to say it.

Q. Had all these people that had come out of the opera house got up to Woolfolk & Blair's before the firing began?—A. The people come out of the opera house looked like they struck across the street.

Q. Well, they struck across to the hardware house?—A. I saw them in front of the hardware store.

Q. No; you said they ran to the hardware house.—A. I don't say where they ran; I say the hardware store is nearly opposite where they came out of the opera house.

Q. Whose hardware store?—A. Joplin's.

Q. That is not opposite the opera house.—A. I didn't say it was opposite; I say it is nearly opposite.

Q. It is away out near Market street, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir; first door from the corner.

Q. Did they run over for that hardware house?—A. I can't say they run in it.

Q. That is what you said before; they ran like they were going to the hardware house. Did you see any of them go in?—A. I didn't take enough notice of them to see them go in.

Q. How long after that until the firing began?—A. Well, it was a minute, and probably more, to the best of my judgment; I couldn't tell.

Q. Now, you being up to Paxton's, you could not tell how many of the whites had come up before the firing began, could you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say there was about a dozen white people followed Mr. Hatcher out in the street?—A. I say I can't say certain that there was that many.

Q. Well, you looked back during the firing and couldn't see anybody for the smoke?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were people running by you at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after the smoke lifted you say there were no colored people to be seen on the street?—A. I say I could not see any.

Q. Well, none to be seen by you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was that now after the firing ceased until the smoke lifted and you could not see any colored people?—A. Well, so I could see, I think, down street tolerably clear it was about three minutes; because I know I looked down and expected to see the street lined with dead men and did not see any dead men at all.

Q. Now, when you looked back and could not see for the smoke, did you hear any firing of pistols?—A. The firing had ceased when I looked back.

Q. And then it was some three minutes until the smoke rose so that you could see clearly all over the streets and there were no colored people that you could see?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which way did you go then after it was all over. You say you saw Mr. Lea and some white men, and Mr. Lea was pointing a pistol, but not firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which way did you go then?—A. I stopped at my mother's; she called me and asked if anybody was hurt, and I kept on up to the revenue office.

Q. Where is the revenue office?—A. Just above the Arlington.

Q. Just above the Arlington on Main street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you passed on up did you see or hear any firing up the street about the Arlington?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you hear any at all that evening about the Arlington?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you passed on up the street did you see Mr. Cabell calling the crowd up and making a talk to them?—A. When I passed on up the street I was above the crowd then.

Q. Well, you can just say you didn't see Mr. Cabell, if that is so.—A. No, sir; I did not see him when I passed up the street.

Q. But you know that the crowd came on up and that Mr. Cabell assembled them on the steps of the old post-office and made a speech?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was that after you had passed up?—A. When that crowd stopped there, I reckon it was about five minutes.

Q. Well, that is about reasonable. Now, between the time that you passed up along by the Arlington to your place of business and the time that Mr. Cabell assembled his crowd there to make a speech, did you hear any firing about the Arlington?—A. Between the time that I passed up the street and the time Mr. Cabell was making that speech?

Q. Yes; and when you left the scene of the general fight down there and passed along up street as you have described and talked with your mother and going on to the post-office, then you say it was about five minutes after that until Mr. Cabell's crowd assembled there for him to make a speech?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, between the time of your passing up and Mr. Cabell's crowd assembling to hear him speak, did you hear any guns fired about the Arlington?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you hear any more pistols fired on the street after the firing had ceased down at Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. Any more when?

Q. That evening?—A. I heard several more fired between 6 and 8 o'clock that night.

Q. I mean before dark. That was the end of the row, so far as you saw, when you left and came on up the street?—A. The riot?

Q. Yes?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear the fire bell ring that evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you when you heard the fire-bell ringing?—A. I think I had gotten to the revenue office, and was standing up in front of the door.

Q. You was at the revenue office and standing in front of the door when the fire bell rang?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you belong to the fire company?—A. I did not.

Q. You didn't have to go?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you heard the fire bell ring was that before or after the crowd was listening to Mr. Cabell? If you were not there when Mr. Cabell spoke you cannot well tell, I suppose?—A. I wouldn't say for certain, but I think it is about the time the crowd was there in front of the Arlington, or coming up to the Arlington, when the fire bell rang.

Q. And you were at the door of your place of business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to understand you on one point. How far down is the farthest you went when the fight was going on?—A. How far down?

Q. How far below Paxton's?—A. I went to Mr. Ruffin & Woolfolk's office.

Q. You went opposite the office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the sidewalk or in the street?—A. On the sidewalk.

Q. Where did you see men with shotguns?—A. It was one man standing in front of Mr. Ruffin & Woolfolk's office.

Q. That was Mr. Dance, wasn't it?—A. I don't know.

Q. Standing in the door?—A. Standing sort of front of the door.

Q. Now, where else did you see any man have a shot-gun?—A. There were two or three men with double-barrel shotguns standing between the hardware store and Mr. Ruffin & Woolfolk's office.

Q. Whose hardware store?—A. Vass & Company.

Q. Did you know these men?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did not know either of them?—A. I didn't take any pains to learn who they were, because when I saw they were shotguns I thought there was danger and I left. They were standing back behind the rest of the white people.

Q. Now, that is three shotguns. You told Mr. Lapham there were from four to six that you saw.—A. I saw there was two or three, probably more, but I know I saw them men.

Q. Are these all you can recollect, two men standing between Woolfolk & Blair's and the hardware store, and one man standing near or in the door of Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. I didn't say two men.

Q. Well, you said you saw two shotguns?—A. No; I said two or three.

Q. Well, have it that way.—A. It may be more, but I don't think it was over half a dozen.

Q. Now, can you tell us somebody else that had one except those you saw right there?—A. I haven't told you who did have one.

Q. Suppose you do?—A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know?—A. No; because I didn't stay there long enough to notice who they were.

Q. Probably you didn't take notice enough to know whether they were shot-guns or not?—A. Well, I have seen shot-guns.

Q. Probably about that time a small pistol looked to you like a shot-gun, and a shot-gun looked like a columbiad.—A. The pistols all looked large and the shot-guns still larger.

Q. In passing up Main street by the mouth of Union, did you see those two dead colored men?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Were they not there when you passed up?—A. I don't know.

Q. You didn't see those dead men there at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Addison Coles?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Did you see the wagon of Adams that had run away?—A. Three or four wagons run by me up the street.

Q. Did not you see one that had run against the lamp-post where Mr. Addison Coles was standing?—A. I don't know where he was standing; I don't know as I saw him.

Q. Why you must have seen him.—A. Well, I say I didn't see him.

Q. You did not see him?—A. No, sir.

Q. You must have seen Motley that was with him; don't you know Motley?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you see him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did not see either of these men?—A. No, sir.

Q. You swear you did not see them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You swear you did not see either of these men?—A. Yes, sir; I swear I did not see them.

Q. Didn't you see Johnson standing there on the corner?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you afraid to vote on election day?—A. Was I afraid to vote on election day?

Q. You heard my question, didn't you?—A. I don't know as I did hear you; I ask you is that what you say. I can't hear very good.

Q. Well, now, you have had time to make up your answer. Were you afraid to vote that day?—A. No, sir; I was not.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You went back before the firing commenced up street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And walked back up as far as where your mother lived?—A. No, sir; not before the firing commenced.

Q. Well, you went up some distance before the firing commenced?—A. I went up as far as Paxton's jewelry store.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. Then my attention was called——

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. Well, I was walking along.

Q. You didn't stop?—A. I didn't make no stop.

Q. That was what I supposed. You walked along until you got to your mother's?—A. I stopped and looked down street.

Q. You turned and looked back, but did you stop at all?—A. My attention was called when I got to Paxton's jewelry store.

Q. But did you make any stop?—A. I turned and looked back at this fuss.

Q. And then you kept on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabouts does your mother live?—A. The third door from the Arlington.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. Until the crowd stopped firing, and went up street.

Q. Then you went on to the revenue office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then it was not a great time from the time you saw the men move out in the street, you describe, before you got back to the revenue office, was it?—A. No, sir.

Q. The fire-bell didn't ring until you got back, did it?—A. Did it ring until I got back?

Q. In other words, had you not got back to the revenue office before the fire-bell rang?—A. I had.

Q. Now, wasn't it after that that the meeting gathered there; that Colonel Cabell addressed the crowd?—A. I couldn't say exactly.

Q. You don't mean to say he was addressing a meeting while the bells were ringing, do you?—A. I say I couldn't tell exactly, but I think it was after the fire-bells had rung.

Q. Are you able to tell how long that was; how long did the fire-bells ring?—A. I reckon they rung about two or three minutes; they rung very fast.

Q. Did you see people running in the streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the bells rang?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, hadn't they returned from that alarm, or what was supposed to be an alarm, before this meeting?—A. I didn't see them come back, because I stayed up street, and it was a good distance, and I couldn't have seen if they had come.

Q. What time did you go to Ringgold on election morning?—A. I left Danville at 5 o'clock.

Q. You were at Ringgold all day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any white people there from Danville?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Did they have arms?—A. Well, they had pistols.

Q. Visible?—A. I could see them in their pockets.

Q. Well, the pistols were hanging out of their pockets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did they come there; how did the people that you saw with pistols come there?—A. They came on horseback and in buggies.

Q. Did not some come on the trains?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They came on rail, and on horseback, and in buggies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. Well, five or six, I reckon, came horseback.

Q. Can you give the names of any?—A. I can.

Q. Give them.—A. Mr. Ned Lambkin was one, Mr. Charles Sneed, Mr. Richard Poorman, Mr. Green Williams, and Mr. Allen Peyton. I think that is as many as I can give.

Q. They all live in Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did they go up there?—A. They come down there, I reckon, about 4 o'clock, I think.

Q. All come at once?—A. Yes, sir; all of them come at once.

Q. You think there were eighty of the colored people who didn't vote there?—A. I think that is the number.

Q. Were these pistols that they had plainly to be seen?—A. Well, I saw some of their pistols in their pockets.

Q. Do you know what they were there for?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Did they make any movement that you saw?—A. No, sir; they got down and tied their horses and went up where the white people were.

Q. Up where the polls were?—A. No, sir; they didn't go exactly where the polls were; the white people were standing at the depot, and in a few minutes a freight box came down there full of people.

Q. What do you mean by a freight box?—A. One freight box with an engine attached to it.

Q. Full of white people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they Democrats?—A. I don't know; I didn't look to see whether they were Democrats or not.

Q. Were they from Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they people whom you know?—A. I knew some of them.

Q. Don't you know whether they were Democrats or not?—A. I didn't know but one man on the car.

Q. Was he a Democrat?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Hurt.

Q. Well, were those you have named Democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You say white people, Democrats, went down from Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any colored men go down, too?—A. I went down there from Danville. I staid down there all day.

Q. Any more besides you?—A. I don't know that there were.

Q. Did any of your political party go down there?—A. No, sir; I tried to get—what do you mean, from Danville?

Q. Yes, from Danville.—A. No, sir; I tried to get them to go in my place. I wouldn't have went myself, only the tickets were not up there and had to be carried down.

Q. Well, is it not a custom to come out from town to electioneer in country precincts?—A. Yes; we generally sends men out to our precincts.

Q. There is no harm in that, is there?—A. No harm in sending men out? I don't think it is.

Q. Did the white people who went down there interfere with any of the colored people?—A. Not that I know of. I left after I saw the crowd coming down there.

Q. Did you get scared?—A. I didn't think I was safe down there.

Q. Well, you told me in your examination awhile ago that you staid in Ringgold all day—didn't go home?—A. No; I didn't say I staid all day. I say I went down there—tickets down there.

Q. Where did you go then, back to the whites?—A. I left Ringgold then. It was dark when I got home. When the crowd came I left.

Q. Had the polls closed when you left?—A. No, sir.

Q. How far is it from town? It was dark when you got to town?—A. Five miles to go.

Q. What time did you get there in the morning?—A. I got there about 6 o'clock, before sunup.

Q. Well, you were the first man on the ground, then, from town, were you not; and you left there, how far from sundown?—A. I didn't have the time with me and it is hard to tell always.

Q. Well, give us country time; how high was the sun up?—A. Well, it was cloudy, and it was rainy just about the time, and I started off pretty soon after they got there.

Q. But still the sun was in the heavens, giving light, notwithstanding it was raining; how long before sundown do you think it was?—A. The cloud was betwixt me and the sun, and I couldn't tell.

Q. Well, give us an idea?—A. I think it was about 4 o'clock.

Q. You went there and staid from 6 o'clock until 4?—A. Yes, sir; I staid down there.

Q. What time did the white men come out?—A. Which white men do you mean; from Danville?

Q. Yes.—A. They come down there, I think, it was between 3 and 4 o'clock.

Q. They were rather too late to do any good, were they not; the votes were nearly all in at that time?—A. Yes; they put them in pretty fast.

Q. Well, they were pretty nigh all in by that time, were they not; it is rather bad electioneering to send men out at 4 o'clock in the evening, isn't it?—A. I didn't say they went to electioneer.

Q. What did they go for, then?—A. I don't know.

Q. You don't swear, then, that they went to interfere with the sacred right of suffrage guaranteed by the amendments to the Constitution of the United States?—A. Why, of course not.

Q. You say you saw pistols on some of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. Well, I saw two or three pistols in the crowd.

Q. Of the white men that went out from Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see the pistols themselves or the shape of the pistols through the cloth?—A. I saw the pistols themselves; I didn't say I saw the pistols by shape; that would not be seeing the pistol.

Q. Yes, it would, with a certain degree of indistinctness, but it would be to see the pistol. Can't you see a bundle in a man's pocket through the cloth?—A. No, sir; I can't.

Q. Well, I have seen many a one.—A. You might say it; you couldn't say for certain.

Q. Well, that precinct you went to, somebody told you there was some 80 colored votes that didn't come up.—A. But the people around there told me——

Q. Was not the vote of the colored people polled there that day larger than any they had polled there for many years?—A. I don't exactly know what vote was polled there. I'd never been to that precinct in my life.

Q. That is a Democratic precinct; has been for many years, has it not?—A. The Democrats carried it, but I don't know whether they got a majority or not.

Q. Well, they carried it by some sort of fraud or chicanery, didn't they; they carried it?—A. I think it went for Mr. Cabell for the Congressional election.

Q. Well, they had for several years past, hadn't they?—A. That was year before last.

Q. Well, I say for several years past that that has been called a Democratic precinct; is not that so?—A. I think Mr. Cabell carried it, and I think President Garfield carried it by 8 votes.

Q. Don't you know how these precincts voted; don't you learn at the custom-house; don't you keep there a list of the precincts, and voters, and everything?—A. No, sir; not that I know of. I hardly ever have anything to do with it. I hardly ever have anything to do with the condition of the precincts. I couldn't tell the majority in half a dozen precincts in the county.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Did the colored people vote any after these people came up with pistols?—A. I left.

Q. Did you see any colored man vote after they arrived there?—A. No, sir; I left right away.

Q. And there were 80 votes out yet, as you understand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you leave because they came there?—A. Well, after seeing that shooting around Danville it——

Q. Did you leave because they came there; cannot you answer me?—A. I didn't feel safe there——

Q. Did you leave because they came there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And went home on foot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you go back on the cars?—A. The train wasn't there.

Q. There would have been a train, wouldn't there?—A. I think the train gets there about 6 o'clock.

Q. Well, why didn't you wait for the train?—A. Because I wanted to go then.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1884.

JOHN D. BLACKWELL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am forty-six years old; I am attorney at law by profession, and since 1869 have been a resident of the town of Danville, Virginia.

Q. Have you at any time served in a judicial capacity?—A. I have, and am so serving now.

Q. What position?—A. Judge of the corporation court of the town of Danville.

Q. Were you in Danville on the afternoon of Saturday, 3d of November?—A. I was.

Q. Did you see the shooting that occurred on Main street that day?—A. I did.

Q. I wish you would state in as mathematical and chronological way as you can, the events of that day as you saw them transpire?—A. Somewhere about three o'clock on that day I was seated in the law office of Crowenpecker and Blackwell, which is in the same building with Jones's drug store, in the second story of that building fronting on Main street. The law office has two windows, both of which front upon Main street. It is almost immediately opposite the office of Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair. The street there, including the sidewalk, I suppose is from 60 to 65, possibly 75 feet. I was seated with my back to one of the windows in conversation with Daniel Dugger, who was standing facing the window, lighting his pipe or cigar at the stove, and I heard a great yelling upon the street and so did he. We immediately ran to the window which was very near me and threw the sash up. On looking out I saw a white man whom I presently recognized, as I thought, to be Mr. Noel, beating a negro, who from his appearance I supposed to be Hense Lawson. He had the negro by the left hand, either about the collar or lappel of the coat, and was beating him with a stick over the head. The negro had his arms up this way [indicating], his head bowed down so and his arms up appearing to ward off the blows, and he was yelling as loud as he could bawl "murder." The word murder I could hear distinctly, and I may add though, at the time, I was very deaf and that while I heard that word distinctly repeated several times I did not hear another articulate word that was uttered there.

Q. You are a little deaf, are you?—A. I was very deaf then from a long course of quinine; I had scarcely recovered from a long illness of fever. I saw at the same time two white men, one of whom I easily recognized as Mr. George Lea, the other, whom I did not positively and don't now know, but I suppose it to be Mr. Taylor, from his appearance. They both had pistols presented in the direction of the white man and negro who were in collision. I also saw at the same time a colored policeman. There were at that time two colored policemen upon the force, and this, I thought, though I don't know and didn't then know, was the one named Withers. The policeman was standing quite near to the persons in conflict, and the pistols were presented in that direction.

Q. Did Withers have a pistol?—A. Not that I saw. I also saw two or three others, may be three or four white persons standing, one looking through the window of the office of Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair, another standing at or in the door of the adjoining office, the office of Mr. Catlett, another insurance agent there, and I saw several negroes, possibly half a dozen, standing near, upon the street near the sidewalk, evidently watching the difficulty. The same cry that alarmed Mr. Dugger and myself I suppose alarmed people generally, and in a much less time than it takes to tell it a number of persons collected there—white men coming from all directions and congregated upon the sidewalk—negroes coming from all directions and congregating in the street or near the sidewalk, all of them standing and looking on. In a very short space of time the number of whites upon the sidewalk in and about it increased possibly from twenty-five to forty; the majority of whom, however, stood a little up a few feet off the upper portion of the walk, and the lower portion of the walk above and below where the difficulty was going on, standing looking on. The negroes, as I said, in the street looking on. About that time my attention was attracted by a large, powerful man, a negro, who seemed to be with a lot of wagons standing almost beneath my window; he ran across the street, and ran to where Mr. Lea was standing.

Q. Was that Adams?—A. I didn't then know, and I don't certainly now. I never saw Adams until I saw him testify here yesterday or the day before.

Q. Was it the same man, so far as you could tell?—A. So far as I could tell, it did not appear to me to be the same man. From what I have learned since, though, I have no doubt it was the same man, though I didn't recognize him. He ran across the street and seized Mr. Lea by the hand or arm and by, the pistol as well as I could tell—I thought by both—and appeared to be trying to wrench the weapon from his grasp. He did not, however, succeed. He did succeed, however, in pulling Mr. Lea down upon the pavement; that is, partly I thought, upon the sidewalk and upon the gutter immediately adjoining the sidewalk. He fell flat upon his back—the negro, I didn't hear him, but I thought, of course, he would then carry out his purpose, which was evidently to disarm him. He did not, however. He suddenly and very quickly jumped up—from what reason I could not say—and ran back across the street toward the wagon where he had been standing, in the exact direction from whence he had come. When about two-thirds of the way across the street Mr. Lea had regained his feet and raising his pistol, took deliberate aim at him and fired. It was evident, though, he didn't strike him. There was no appearance of his being hurt. The shot, however, alarmed some persons whom I could not see, standing in Mr. Graves's door, beneath my window. They screamed and shrieked—they were evidently female voices—but I didn't know who they were. I could not see. During the time my attention was attracted to this negro and Mr. Lea, in some way, I don't know in what way, the white man whom I supposed to be Noel and the negro whom I supposed to be Lawson, had become separated, and for a moment I saw this man, I still think to be Lawson, standing there, but only for a moment; I never saw him afterward to know him. If it was Lawson I never saw him until I saw him in this room. During all this time persons continued to come, of both colors, the negroes in that portion of the street on the opposite side where the difficulty was going on and the whites on the sidewalk. Some one took hold of Mr. Lea and carried him up the street a few steps, Captain Oliver—

Q. How took hold of him?—A. Took hold of him as if to take him off to remonstrate with him about something. I only judge that from the manner in which it was done. And Captain Oliver came down there, and from his appearance I thought was trying to preserve order. I also saw Mr. Hatcher there. Mr. Corbin I did not see at that moment. I saw him a few moments thereafter; Mr. Jordan and Motley, a gentleman who is not a citizen of Danville, but lives in the county of Pittsylvania, probably 6 or 7 miles from Danville. Presently some one touched Captain Oliver on the shoulder and took him off a few moments, I thought, to make some suggestion.

While these two persons had off Mr. Lea and Mr. Oliver, just a few steps up the sidewalk, in plain view, I could see that Mr. Motley and Mr. Hatcher and two or three other whites, whom I did not recognize and do not know now, were apparently conversing in a very excited and angry manner with the negroes in the street. I could not hear what they said, but could see from the motion of their jaws and lips that they were in conversation with three or four negroes in the street, who evidently replied to them in the same excited manner, as I inferred from their gesticulations, raising up their hands, but I could hear nothing, as I say. At that time the difficulty, such as it was, which I supposed was a street fight between a white man and a negro, which frequently occurs in our streets, was at an end, when suddenly, to my surprise, I saw a line of whites, fifteen, possibly twenty—somewhere about that number—station themselves, a great majority upon the sidewalk, but several of them, from three to six, perhaps, out at the upper end of the street, out in the street, and they presented pistols.

Q. Along the line of the street or across the walk?—A. Well, somewhat of a curved line. Here, for instance [illustrating], is the sidewalk, the edge of this book; this is the upper portion here, and that the lower. They aligned themselves along here until they got up here, and then curved out slightly into the street. I thought that that curvature in the line was probably produced for two reasons: Immediately in front, I think, of Woolfolk & Blair's office is a low, but very thick and stout, horse block, and that seemed to separate the line rather into two parts. There were whites standing back there at that time, fifty, possibly seventy-five, but they had nothing to do with this line that I saw; and another thing that I thought the line curved with the street for was that the negroes were ranged rather in this way [illustrating].

Q. In the form of an egg?—A. Yes, sir; rather of an oval. They suddenly presented the pistols, and I heard the click; I was very much surprised at it; it was done so quickly. The negroes there, seeing the pistols or hearing them click, I don't know which, probably both, immediately turned as quickly as they could and run. By the time their backs were fairly turned—some of them I reckon had not been able to turn—the firing commenced. The discharge was a volley that was delivered as if it had been by disciplined soldiers. I never on a battle-field heard a volley delivered as well together as that was. After that it was continuous firing, as if soldiers were firing at will. Each man apparently shooting as quickly as he could, but to my great astonishment I saw no effect from the bullets; no one seemed to be hurt at all. There were some shouts, some screams too, from the negroes, as they ran, but that was apparently from fright. They ran nearly all of them down the street in the direction towards my right and below me.

Q. That is down Market street, is it?—A. In that direction, toward what I designate South Market street. And evidently the great majority of them, I think, must have gone down that street, because they disappeared from my view so quickly; but a portion of them, when they got down to Market street where it crosses Main—a few of them—evidently went down. I could see them down Market; a portion of Market street I call North Market, although it is not half so wide a street as Market street proper, or South Market. The only person that I recognized firing there was Mr. George Lea; and I think probably I would not have recognized him, but he was there the first man at the end of this curved line, or the second, I don't remember which. The others I did not recognize; don't know who they were. The firing was done very quickly, and the negroes as speedily as possible disappeared from view. Before, however, this firing commenced, I omitted to state that in looking out of the window I saw young Mr. Dance, then a clerk in the firm of Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair, now a member of the firm of Ruffin, Blair & Dance, standing in the door of Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair's office, with a double-barrel shot-gun, holding it up in this direction. [Indicating.] He seemed to be standing there looking at the fight going on with the crowd of negroes; but he made no use of the gun, either at that time or subsequently, that I saw. The only shooting after that that I saw was some shooting done by Captain Graves here, the gentleman sitting to my right. I first saw him (I do not know from whence he came) standing near the junction of Main street and North Market, rather slightly in Main street, as I thought, and not far from the corner of White & Averett's shoe store. I was looking out of the same window. My attention was being attracted up the street by some noise that I heard (I don't know what caused it), and I heard the report of the fire-arm down the street in that direction. It made more noise—sounded more like the report of a rifle to me than the report of any other fire-arm that I heard during the day. I immediately went to the other window, which by that time Mr. Dugger had thrown up, and I saw Captain Graves aiming a pistol, and he instantly fired it, almost as soon as I saw him, apparently in the direction of Nicholas & Hesberg's saloon. It is known in Danville, there, as the "Border House." It is a saloon that has been spoken of here. He then fired a second shot down North Market street; I could not see at what object he aimed or fired with either of those shots; whatever it was was beyond my line of vision. He then presently, after a brief pause, turned around, or partly around, and fired, shooting, apparently, down South Market street.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Is that three shots?—A. Yes, sir; I never saw him shoot but three times.

Q. In which direction was the second one?—A. The second one was down North Market street, as well as I could see. The third, as well I could see, was down South Market street; but in neither shot could I see out the way he aimed. Whatever object he shot at, whether a thing or person, was beyond my line of vision. The next shooting that I saw was one that amused me somewhat, though it did not amuse my sight at all when I saw it. I heard, a moment after Captain Graves's last shot, and he was slowly passing up the street in the direction of the Arlington House, a very loud yell, rather a whoop, and looking out of the same window I saw Mr. Blunt coming at what you might call a double quick, apparently from the direction of Joplin's hardware store. He had his black silk hat in his left hand, and had a revolver in his right. He got out about the middle of Main street; he turned around certainly once or twice, or possibly three times, rapidly on his heel, spinning like a boy's top, giving a tremendous yell, and flourishing his hat as he did so, and after turning around he fired his pistol up in the air, at an angle I suppose of 75 degrees.

Q. He fired certainly?—A. Yes; and I suppose three times. He presented to me the appearance of a man in excitement, and I have no idea he knew what he was doing. That was the last shooting I saw, and the last report of fire-arms I heard. About that time, and immediately thereafter, citizens came from down the street, and up the street too.

Q. White citizens or black?—A. White citizens, who evidently had nothing to do with the shooting that I have described—evidently not there—came with pistols, and many of them with shot-guns. They went up the street walking, not rapidly, but a good gait—scarcely fast—in the direction of the Arlington House. The alarm bell then rung, and, from what I ascertained that evening I suppose quiet was speedily restored.

Q. I wish now you would describe the appearance, condition, and conduct of the colored people as they gathered; who they were, whether armed or not, and what resistance they made.—A. Who they were I do not know. It was a crowd of negroes there assembled in the street. At no time did those in the street number more than one hundred and fifty. I doubt if there was scarcely that many; but I will say one hundred and fifty. The large majority of them seemed to be standing there gazing at a fight, as people, both white and black, down in our country (and I reckon everywhere else) are foolish enough to do—run to a fight—looking at it. The only appearance of anger that I saw on the part of these negroes was this large man—I have no doubt it was George Adams—who was trying to wrench the pistol from Mr. Lea, and these three or four in the street, evidently replying to the white men—talking to them; made no hostile demonstration in any way, shape, or form to the whites that I saw. They made no efforts at violence whatever; and as to weapons, I never saw a negro have a weapon of any description, or have the appearance of one.

Q. In the crowd?—A. Yes sir; not one.

Q. How was it composed in respect to sexes and ages?—A. Most of those in the street who congregated looking at the fight were evidently grown men. I saw perhaps a dozen negro chaps, that from their size I should judge were from ten to fifteen years old, and may be more than a dozen; and down to the lower part of the crowd, where there was a flight of stepping stones across Main street, leading from Jones's drug store to the upper corner, Hesberg's saloon, were a number of women, probably two or three dozen. There might have been a few children with them. I do not recollect seeing more than three or four children there. I mean by children—to be accurate, I should say they were little negro girls, I thought probably with their mothers; but the majority of those women that I saw did not seem to be attached to the crowd. They seemed to be passing back and forth. A few were standing still, apparently in conversation. There was evidently a crowd—a considerable crowd on the sidewalk, upon the side of the street on which I was, below my window, so that, although I could hear these shrieks I spoke of I could not see any one there at all.

Q. What steps were taken to organize the police force after this firing had ceased, and who composed that force?—A. I cannot tell you who composed the force, except that it was composed exclusively of whites. I do not know personally of it; that is, who the gentlemen were that composed it; but, as I was informed, they were summoned by the sergeant-at-arms of Danville as his posse, and probably about thirty or forty, I believe about thirty-three—thirty-six in all, including captains, I believe were sworn in as special constables by the mayor of the town, and the mayor also had his regular force included in the sergeant's posse, and the Danville military company, commanded by Captain Oliver, a white company, to police the town; that combined force did.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Are you not mistaken in saying that you were over Jones's drug store?—A. I did not say that I was over Jones's drug store; I said that I was in the office of Crowenpecker & Blackwell, which is in the same building as Jones's drug store.

Q. I thought you said over the drug store?—A. No, sir; there is the width of a passage. I don't know the width; I suppose from 4 to 6 feet.

Q. You were then nearly directly opposite the scene?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose not mathematically directly opposite, but not out of the way more than 6 or 8 feet.

Q. Were the window-shutters down or up?—A. There are no shutters to the windows at all, unless you mean the sash.

Q. Well, the sash.—A. The sash were down, but immediately raised.

Q. You raised them to look out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you hear what the crowd were saying?—A. I could not; I could not hear a single articulate syllable or word, except that one of murder.

Q. And yet there were some men talking in pretty excited tones, were there not?—A. From their appearance I thought they were; their gesticulation and manner made me think so.

Q. Now, several witnesses—I believe all of them—have testified that it was a young fellow, a relation of Lawson's, that called murder, but not Lawson himself.—A. So I heard.

Q. How is that; what is your opinion of that?—A. Well, the man that the white man was beating with a stick when I saw him I thought at the time was Lawson. If he was not Lawson—I utter here what I might have stated before—Lawson was at that time—I reckon he weighed thirty or forty pounds more than now. I reckon that he had been at that time (and had been for some time before) drinking a good deal of liquor, and was evidently bloated, I thought.

Q. I believe all the other witnesses, without exception, have testified that Noel had no stick. Are you not possibly mistaken in saying he had a stick?—A. I did not say that Noel had a stick; I said that the white man whom at the time I supposed I recognized and thought was Noel. Now I will say this (and it is proper that I should say it), I had not at that time and have not now any personal acquaintance with Noel, though I have known his father for many years. He had been pointed out on the street, and I had casually seen him two or three times as the son of Jesse Noel, and from what I have seen of his testimony, if you want to know my opinion, I do not believe I saw Noel that day at all.

Q. Who was the man who was fighting with Hense Lawson?—A. What I wish to say is this: I have related this matter as it appeared to me then, but from what I have heard since I do not believe the white man was Noel, and I do not believe the negro that I saw was Hense Lawson. I believe Noel had gone away from there to wash his hands then, and that I saw some one else.

Q. That is a little strange. You are confident that the man you saw beating the colored man with his hand in his pocket was using his stick with the other?—A. I know that he was using a stick.

A. Did you know Mr. Taylor?—A. I did not and do not.

Q. Do not now?—A. No, sir.

Q. At the time Mr. Lea and George Adams (this large negro you spoke of) were scuffling on the ground, did you see Mr. Taylor use a stick?—A. I did not.

Q. Did not see that?—A. No, sir; didn't see it. I saw this, about the time the negro jumped up I saw the stick, but whether a blow had been struck with it or was being struck with it I don't know. I know this, that when the negro ran back across the street toward the wagon he had upon his left cheek a spot of blood, right here [indicating].

Q. Which; the negro that was scuffling?—A. The negro that was scuffling with Lea—that pulled Lea down, and he subsequently shot at him.

Q. You stated in your testimony before—your deposition in the contested-election case of Sims vs. Hurt—that there were twelve or fifteen whites on the sidewalk when you first observed them?—A. Not when I first observed them. I think if you will look over it, I did not state that; not at first, but subsequently.

Q. At what time?—A. When I first observed them I saw but two white men standing with pistols presented watching, and there were two or three, may be four or five, standing not immediately near, but in comparatively close proximity, just looking on. That was when I first got to the window. Now that published deposition there makes me say that twelve or fifteen white men formed into a line.

Q. Yes.—A. If I said that I was wrong. I do not think that is the case. The language I intended to use was from fifteen to twenty when the volley was fired.

Q. Well, that difference is very slight. About the time that the main firing began—the actual hostilities—how many of either color were present?—A. You mean when the volley was fired?

Q. Yes.—A. I will say there was one hundred and fifty negroes there in that street. It is very difficult, you know, to estimate a crowd when they are not drilled into line as soldiers; but I will say one hundred and fifty.

Q. Now, how many whites were there on the sidewalk opposing them?—A. Those that seemed to be opposing them—I don't think there was more than fifteen or twenty, those that formed that line. There were twice as many as that there standing above and below, possibly in the rear, that did not seem to have anything to do with them.

Q. The others stretched on the sidewalk toward or opposite the opera house?—A. Yes, sir; some were in that direction, and some were above, in the other direction.

Q. Did you see the white people come from the opera house on the alarm being given?—A. I did not see any one coming from the opera house. I say I saw them come from that direction.

Q. How many were on the sidewalk between the corner from Market up to Woolfolk & Blair's? How many whites do you think were on the sidewalk?—A. From the corner of the Border House up to Woolfolk & Blair's?

Q. Yes. I mean at the actual commencement of the firing.—A. When the volley was fired—well, there were some whites stationed above, standing on the sidewalk several feet above Woolfolk & Blair's. Altogether there might have been fifty or sixty, including those that formed the line.

Q. Including all that were there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, of course, it is not true, as some witnesses have testified, that the body of the white people who were engaged in that meeting in the opera house had got up there before the firing commenced?—A. That, I think, could not possibly be true. I am satisfied that the large body of that crowd never got there at all until after the shooting was over, nearly every bit of it.

Q. You say you could not hear the language used, or a single articulate word.—A. Except the word murder.

Q. Except the word murder, which some man, I suppose, was yelling in a very loud tone?—A. Yes, sir; his lungs evidently were never affected.

Q. And yet you say you heard the click of the triggers when this line was formed?—A. No, sir; I don't think I said that. I am sure I could not have heard the click, and I will tell you why. If I said it, I was wrong. I will tell you why. I am sure I could not have heard that, and you will understand from that how deaf I was at the time. The report of those pistols sounded scarcely louder to me than the explosion of a cap on a gun.

Q. With the window up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you said that the line was formed, the men drew their pistols, and you heard the click?—A. I did not intend to say that.

Q. You mean to say you heard the firing?—A. No; I did not use the word click at all. What I meant to say, and will say now, not that they did draw their pistols, because I did not see them draw their pistols at all. They were in line, and had their pistols out, and presented when I first saw them. It was done as quick as that [snapping his finger]. If I used the word "click," I did it mechanically without any intention.

Q. When you first threw up this window, was there any appearance of regular formation among the whites?—A. No, sir; when I first threw up the window, and looked out, there were very few persons of either race there. There was nothing regular about the matter at all.

Q. Up to the time that line was formed on the sidewalk, one flank resting a foot or two in the street?—A. Yes, sir; several feet.

Q. Well, was there any appearance of formation up to that time?—
A. None whatever, except what would be mechanical with people standing on the sidewalk.

Q. With the curbing making a line in front of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you say that they called out, or yelled when they fired?—A. No, sir; I did not say anything about that.

Q. But it was Mr. Blunt that you spoke of as yelling?—A. Yes, sir; he must have yelled very loud, for I doubt much if I would have heard him if he had not.

Q. Now, how many shots do you say you think were fired in that first volley, that was so regular and like disciplined soldiers?—A. I suppose (I take it for granted that every pistol was fired), I reckon fifteen or twenty; they fired all just at once.

Q. How far was the mass of the colored people from these men with pistols who stood in the line?—A. If, by the mass, you mean the greater number, of course they were much further off than the others, the front part of the formation, or the rear part if their backs were turned, was very close. They certainly were not further off than that fire-place [indicating fire-place in the room].

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Ten or fifteen feet?—A. Yes, sir; and that is the reason I was so surprised to see no execution.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Not only the front line was that near, but they were very closely packed together?—A. They were huddled up as closely as a flock of sheep.

Q. Now, judging from the facts, and of the proximity of the men who were firing to their object, is it your opinion that they were trying to kill anybody in that volley, or to disperse the crowd?—A. If I should judge simply from the facts alone, I should say they were not trying to kill anybody at all, because they had not bullets to kill them, but fired blank cartridges; but, from the way they took aim—they pointed just like my hand is pointed at you—aimed directly at the crowd.

Q. How is it possible for men to have missed an object that close and thick?—A. I don't know. Yes, I know this: I have been in a battle with a brigade and lost apparently few men, and then walked over the ground afterwards and every twig had been hit. There would not be a space for a bluebird to have flown across there without being struck.

Q. Yes; but those were 100 yards, perhaps, off, and here they were right within a few feet, and that mass was so thick that a man could not have fired without hitting that crowd, could he?—A. Yes; and I think I can explain how it was that so few were hit, if any were hit at all. Those double-action pistols—I don't know much about pistols, I got sick of carrying one during the war, and never had one since; but I have shot occasionally, practicing. The hammer of the self-cocking pistol has two actions. If you want to shoot at a mark you take deliberate aim; but if you want to shoot rapidly, you keep pulling; and I never saw a self-cocking pistol in my life but in pulling the hammer you pulled the pistol up.

Q. You think the bullets went over their heads?—A. Yes, sir; and I don't think they intended to go over their heads, because they took aim at the crowd.

Q. From where you were situated, could you judge from the line of the pistols that they were aiming at the body of those men?—A. I think

I could; and I am satisfied that if the upper end of that line had fired over the head of that crowd, it was mighty apt that some of those bullets would come into the window at which I was standing.

Q. And you think the mere pulling of the trigger would make the pistol fly up?—A. I know it would.

Q. Even with your little experience with this pistol?—A. Even with my little experience. I have shot occasionally myself, and know enough to know that.

Q. Don't you suppose these men who used them so much and knew all about them made allowance for that in their aim?—A. I don't know anything about that; I don't know whether they knew much about them or not.

Q. It is reasonable to suppose they knew something about it from the way they handled them?—A. It is reasonable to suppose they did not.

Q. You see it has been testified here, and it has been the object of Senator Sherman to prove, that they habitually carried pistols, and were ready to draw them and to shoot all the time. Now, that would give them a large acquaintance with the use of these pistols, wouldn't it?—A. Not necessarily.

Q. It would not?—A. No, sir; I have carried a pistol six months at a time, and never shot at all.

Q. You think, then, that they were aiming at the crowd, and doing their best to shoot the crowd down?—A. I thought so, and think so now.

Q. And fifteen or twenty men fired at a thickly-packed mass of people, doing their best to kill, and did not drop one?—A. Not one; I did not see a single bullet take effect; but I don't think that was the fault of the men who shot at them.

Q. They were doing their best, you think?—A. I do.

Q. Well, they were the worst marksmen I have heard of.—A. Fortunately, sir, they were.

Q. You say Captain Graves fired from down the street?—A. Yes, sir; below me to my right.

Q. Below you to your right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On which side of the street was he—the side that you were on?—A. On the opposite side—on the north side of the street.

Q. Where did he stand?—A. He stood, I think, right at the junction of what I designate as North Market and Main, but somewhat a little out in Main, as I thought, diagonally a few feet from the corner of Mr. Averett & White's shoe store.

Q. But on the corner next to Nicholas & Hesberg's?—A. No, sir; on the opposite corner next to Averett & White's shoe store.

Q. Then he was across Market street?—A. North Market; yes.

Q. Then he shot back up the street toward you, did he?—A. No, sir.

Q. He shot down Market street, did he?—A. That second shot shot down Market street. The second one I could not certainly tell. He was in the act of shooting when I first saw him. I thought that was rather in front, toward the negroes, in front of Nicholas & Hesberg's.

Q. Well, he was on the corner of the shoe store, and Nicholas & Hesberg's was up the street, as you call it, up towards the Arlington Hotel; and if he fired in that direction, of course it must have been up the street?—A. Diagonally up the street, yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any one in Main street that he fired at?—A. I did not.

Q. Was there any one in the street?—A. Not that I saw.

Q. Well, from your commanding position, could you not view the whole crowd?—A. Not at that time. You see when I got to the lower window where I went when I first heard the report of the pistol down there, there was a chair standing there about as large as this one here, at the window, and as I got to the chair he shot. Looking diagonally as I did, the corner of the window obscured—or the wall where the window is put into the wall—my view, so that I could not see but little up or beyond them to my left, but in the line of vision, I saw no one in the direction that he appeared to shoot that shot.

Q. The other two shots, as I understand you, he fired, one up and the other down Market street?—A. No, sir; one was fired down North Market street, and the other apparently down South Market street.

Q. That is what I say.—A. If that is what you mean, yes.

Q. One down South Market and the other down North Market?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw no object that he shot at?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see him shoot over toward Joplin's corner?—A. Joplin's corner is across Main street from where he was, but I think he shot a little higher than that, down North Market street. I judge that from the way the pistol was pointed.

Q. That would be down South Market?—A. Down South Market, yes, sir.

Q. How long was that after the main firing had stopped?—A. It was a very short time, a very few seconds, certainly not more than half a minute, and I think probably not more than a third.

Q. How long after that until Mr. Blunt closed the performance?—A. I expect Captain Graves had time to get out of my sight. I reckon it must have been half a minute. Half a minute is a long time on an occasion of that sort; but it was some moments.

Q. You say that was the last shot you saw or heard?—A. The last that I saw.

Q. There was no more firing in that neighborhood that evening?—A. None at all.

Q. According to your best impression I suppose you were cool on that occasion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did the whole thing occupy from the time the volley began up there?—A. From the time the volley was fired?

Q. Yes, until the streets were cleared, and Mr. Blunt shot up in the air, and the thing was quieted?—A. From the time that volley was fired to Mr. Blunt's doing his shooting I don't think it could have been more than a minute and a half, if so long. It was done with the rapidity that language cannot express.

Q. The popular impressions of time on such occasions are very apt to be exaggerated, are they not?—A. Yes, sir; you can divide them by two, and I believe they will then be too large. I have frequently heard of a fight lasting five minutes; but there never was a fist fight in the world that lasted more than a minute and a half, I think.

Q. I do not believe there was, except these prize fighters, who take rounds and rest. Now, about where were those women that you saw?—A. All the women that I saw across the street, except a very few, seemed to be standing still on the flight of steps standing across Main street between Jones's drug store, and directly across the street in front of the barber shop, the upper edge of Nicholas's saloon. I did not see any women where the white men were.

Q. Where the white men began their volley there were no women in danger?—A. None that I saw, unless, as I say, there were some out of my sight beneath the window.

Q. You saw no arms in the hands of any colored man at all?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you hear any firing that came from the ranks of the colored men, judging from the sound?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you could hear no words, and saw no actions on the part of the colored people that indicated anger, except the conduct of this man Adams, who ran in and seized Lea's pistol, and three or four others with their backs to you evidently excited?—A. I inferred that from their gesticulations.

Q. Did you see any policeman, or white citizens who were apparently trying to keep the peace?—A. I saw Mr. Corbin there. He was as high up as Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair's, but a little below it I thought. From his manner I was pretty sure he was trying to keep the peace.

Q. Did you see any policemen exerting themselves?—A. I saw the colored policeman that I thought was trying to part these men, and I thought from his appearance that he seemed to be speaking to the whites and blacks, too; I concluded that from his manner.

Q. After the men had been separated, and the fist fight was over, there was some considerable pause before the volley began, was there not?—A. There was a pause, but not of much duration.

Q. Well, I speak with reference to the length of time occupied by the whole transaction?—A. Yes, sir; speaking relatively, there was.

Q. During that pause did you see any of these citizens or policeman apparently trying to disperse the crowd?—A. That was the time I saw; I don't know about trying to disperse the crowd, but trying to quiet them, and I thought it was quiet, and people would go about their business, as people generally do when a fight is over.

Q. Senator Sherman asked you if any colored people were about on guard, keeping order in the town, and I believe you said there was not?—A. I was informed there was not. I do not know about this guard matter of my own personal knowledge; but I was so informed, and believe it.

Q. I will ask you if, under the circumstances, it was not best for the peace of the town that the white men should be put in charge?—A. Unquestionably it was.

Q. If there had been mixed guards that night there would have been danger of a collision, would there not?—A. There would have been, and probably a number of throats cut before daylight, in my opinion.

Q. Did you ever issue any warrants for the arrest of those parties engaged in this row?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Had you any power and authority to issue warrants for the arrest of the offenders?—A. Full power and authority, but I declined to do so from a matter of principle, which I can state to you, if you desire to hear it.

Q. Well, I should like to hear what it was.—A. First I will state a matter of fact: After the riot was over and quiet was restored (I mean that evening)—the election was to come on a few days thereafter, which, as you know, was three days thereafter—I advised the magistrates not to issue any warrants until the election was over and quiet restored, and then to get these people to come forward and make complaint. I thought at one time that I myself would issue a warrant against Lea, as the only man whom I could say that I recognized. I concluded, as I would have to be a witness in that case, that I would not do it, and on further reflection I thought it would be better to submit the investigation of the whole matter to a grand jury, which I did. I will add that, so far as I am informed and believe, not a single person came forward to the magistrate to make complaint at the time, I mean after the election was over, and quiet and order were restored.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Vance). I was intending to examine the witness as to the events before the third, and also the events which called out his charge to the grand jury. You are only anticipating that examination, as I infer.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Then you said nobody came forward to make a complaint?—A. No, sir; no one came forward to make complaint at all. The truth is, I am satisfied that I failed entirely to appreciate even then the condition of public affairs. I thought that after quiet was restored it would be as it always has been done in Danville and anywhere else, that the persons who were wounded, and the relatives of those who were killed would come forward to make complaint to the proper authorities, and I thought it was best in that way for justice to take its ordinary course. Besides, I thought it was best for every consideration, too many to mention here, that the matter should be thoroughly ventilated by a grand jury.

Q. You had a grand jury impaneled to inquire into this?—A. I did.

Q. Who drew that grand jury?—A. I did myself, in the manner prescribed by law.

Q. Were they respectable men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Intelligent, good citizens?—A. Yes, sir; so far as I know, they were, and I think I know most of them.

Q. Were they, any of them, different in politics from the other portion?—A. Yes, sir; there was one negro upon it—Preston Watkins, I think. He was a Republican, although I think the others were all Democrats, though I don't know.

Q. How long did they sit, and how many witnesses did they examine?—A. They sat certainly for two days, and I think a part of a third. I am not sure about that. I do not know the number of witnesses examined. I examined a list of witnesses; had a number summoned myself, and made the attorney of the commonwealth submit to me a list that he had summoned. My impression is that probably all of those witnesses, with one or two exceptions, were before the grand jury.

Q. Does the commonwealth attorney go before the grand jury to examine witnesses?—A. No, sir; that is not customary in Virginia. He does not go before the grand jury to examine witnesses at all. When I say not customary in Virginia, I mean to be understood to say in the State courts. I believe they do in the United States courts.

Q. Did you see any of the whites in that crowd before the firing armed with shot-guns except Mr. Dance?—A. I did not; he was the first man, and the only one, I saw who had a shot-gun until the shooting, so far as I know, was all over.

Q. If there had been any shot-guns fired in the shooting, could you not have told them from the report of a small pistol?—A. Certainly; if I had not been deaf I could, and I think even as deaf as I was I could. I am satisfied that there was not any shot-guns fired out there.

Q. According to the custom among the working people there, there were a good many colored men on the street Saturday evening, were there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Being paid off Saturday evenings, they buy their rations and rolie around?—A. From what I could see from my office—I was so very feeble that after I got to my office in the morning I remained there all day. What I saw I saw from my window, but I know that is the custom in Danville.

Q. And on that evening is not the crowd of white folks diminished ordinarily and the crowd of colored people increased?—A. I do not know that the crowd of white folks is diminished. I believe the crowd of both races is greater on that day. But there is this thing in it. In my fifteen or sixteen years of observation there in that portion of the town where the business is done the ladies of the town never come out Saturday evening, because the streets are so crowded. Plenty of people come into town on Saturday evening.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I wish now to ask you a few questions in respect to the political canvass that was going on, and the effect that canvass had upon the events that followed. What were the parties in Virginia last fall in the election?—A. They were known as the Readjuster or Liberal-Coalition party and the Democratic party.

Q. In the county in which you are, which party was in the majority?—A. The parties there in the county of Pittsylvania, including the town of Danville, I believe, are pretty evenly balanced, with probably a slight majority in favor of the Coalitionist. I think the majority is not large, however.

Q. How is it in Danville?—A. In Danville the majority of negroes, and the Readjusters who acted with them, was considerably larger, much larger.

Q. About how much usually in an ordinary vote?—A. Well, some hundreds; I don't remember.

Q. You cannot say how many?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you which party, as a rule, the colored people voted with?—A. Since the formation of the Readjuster or Coalition party they voted generally in our State with that party.

Q. The body of the Democratic party, then, were white?—A. No doubt of it. The Democrats in Virginia, I reckon, have always had some negro votes, but very few.

Q. What excitement was there in the town of Danville or in the county prior to the issue of the circular headed "Coalition Rule in Danville;" what was the degree of excitement?—A. I could not answer that question of my own personal knowledge. I returned to Danville early in August last year; had been away some weeks on a visit, and was taken sick and returned there.

Q. You were unwell?—A. I was taken down with a fever and in my bed for two months, and I know nothing of the canvass at all except what I saw in the public prints and what my friends coming in would tell me, and for a great length of time they could not even talk with me.

Q. You don't know whether it had been exciting or quiet?—A. Of my own personal knowledge I do not.

Q. Have you ever seen this circular called "Coalition Rule in Danville," which is now printed in the testimony (p. 26) of this committee?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen it.

Q. What was the effect of this circular upon public opinion; did it tend to create excitement?—A. Well, even at that time I scarcely could get about; wouldn't have been about at all, but business carried me; but from what I could see of my own personal knowledge it created a great deal of feeling, a great deal of bitterness.

Q. Was that circulated about Danville much?—A. It was not, so far as I know, circulated at all.

Q. Where was it circulated? I see it is addressed, "To the citizens of the southwest and Valley of Virginia."—A. On that point I only know by common report.

Q. Then I will not ask you any further. Have you read that circular?—A. Yes, sir; I have read it.

Q. State whether or not that is a true statement of the facts alleged to be given; whether the statements contained in that circular are true.—A. Some of them are, but in my opinion a great majority are false.

Q. Now go on and point out in such detail as you choose what statements there are false in your opinion.—A. In answer to your question, the first portion of this circular, as I recollect it and what my eye catches now, gives the figures as to the census of the two races in Danville; the figures given here in reference to the taxes and the amounts derived from taxation from the two races paid out for the purpose of educating white and negro children.

Q. That seems to be correct; derived from the census, is it?—A. I accept those as correct. I suppose they are, not meaning to say by that that they are or are not of my own personal knowledge.

Q. You see no exaggeration or anything to dispute?—A. None that I recognize.

The next statement is:

Up to the session of the last legislature the town was not divided into wards, but voted as a single precinct.

That is true.

And in that way the council was generally kept in the hands of the white people.

The council has always been kept in the hands of the white people, but not for that reason, because there never has been a time when the whole council of Danville and everything in it could not have been negro with the majority they had.

Q. But they didn't exercise that?—A. No, sir; not since I have been there.

But the negro party desiring to get complete possession of the town government, that they might share in the offices as well as levy upon the treasury of the whites whatever they thought proper, applied to the legislature.

I was never aware that any party, until I saw this, applied to the legislature for that purpose or for any other purpose. There was an application made by a number of persons represented in the council, and especially made by Capt. William T. Clark, a prominent citizen and merchant.

Q. A Democrat?—A. Yes, sir. Either did it himself or had an appeal prepared for that purpose, to divide the town into wards; that is the first movement I ever heard for that purpose.

Q. Then you say Captain Clark was the first one that made that movement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Captain Clark's is the first signature to the paper, and he charges it was done by the negro party?—A. He or somebody else charged it.

Q. Well, he signed the paper. You might state how that division into wards was brought about.—A. Under the provisions of the bill the judge of the corporation court, Judge Aiken, was the gentleman who then held that office, divided, as I understand, the town into wards.

Q. Is Judge Aiken a Democrat?—A. I don't know what Judge Aiken's politics are. I never knew him to have any politics in my life until last fall.

Q. Did he write this circular?—A. I don't know that.

Q. Well, Judge Aiken, then, divided the city into wards?—A. Yes, sir; under the provisions of that statute it was for the judge to do so, and after a survey of the town, made—an accurate one, no doubt—by the city engineer, it was done the best way he could do it.

Q. Was there any complaint made of that division at the time?—A. None that I ever heard. Individuals may have complained, but I never even heard of that being done.

Q. I will ask you now whether, as a matter of fact, the division into wards was not necessary in order to enable people to vote?—A. The vote is so large; our people generally think so, I believe; such was my opinion.

Q. Then I will call your attention to the next paragraph.

From the localities in which the negroes had herded themselves, it was totally impracticable to so run the ward lines without creating two wards in which the negroes had a large majority, and this they and their white leaders knew.

Was there anything about that that excited hostility?—A. Not at the time it was done that I ever heard. Indeed I never heard of any complaint being made about this, one way or the other, until I saw this circular.

Q.

The result was that they elected seven out of twelve of their candidates for the council and their candidates for justice of the peace from each ward.

Could not the negroes have elected all the justices and all the council if they had exercised their power and drawn the race lines?—A. Since 1869, the year I went to Danville to live, to the present time, there never has ceased to be a time that the negroes could not have elected every officer in that place that they had a right to vote for.

Q. And yet you say, notwithstanding that the white men had the majority of the council?—A. They have always had it.

Q. I will ask you whether the negroes themselves didn't elect, as their presiding officer, a Democrat?—A. They elected Mr. Joseph D. Blair—elected a Democrat to what?

Q. Presiding officer of the council; have you a president of the council?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Blair is now president of the council. Mr. Blair was elected president of the council by the Coalition majority, or by somebody in the council.

Q. Is Mr. Blair a signer of this paper?—A. I don't know whether he is or not; I will look and see [examining circular]. Well, his firm is, as the firm then was, Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair, real estate and insurance office.

Q. He is the Blair of that firm?—A. He is the Blair of that firm; Joseph D. Blair, esq.

Q. Now, you can go on and call attention to other misstatements in this circular if you find them?—A.

Then began the deeds which have so humiliated us in our own estimation and made our town, once so noted for wealth and enterprise, a by-word for shame and reproach from one end of this land to the other. Wherever it was possible for anything to be done by the council or its magistrates that would irritate and wound the pride of the whites it was executed with the keenest relish.

Q. How was that?—A. I don't know anything of that; never heard of it.

Q. Were there any acts that the town council complained of?—A. None that I know of.

Q. They had elected a white Democrat as presiding officer?—A. Yes, sir; and he under the law appointed committees of the council.

Q. I will ask you about the policemen. It says, "Out of nine policemen four negroes were chosen."—A. Well, the council chose four negroes, two upon the police force.

Q. The majority of the council were negroes, were they not?—A. No, sir.

Q. How was that?—A. There were four negroes in the council. All the rest were white men. There were twelve in the council in all, eight white men and four negroes.

Q. Then it was the white men who must have elected the negroes, was it not?—A. According to the rule of addition it would seem so. I believe, however, the rule of addition did not work down there, for I understood you could not find a white man who said he voted for a negro at all. Yet they were elected.

Q. I want to know whether it was a true or false allegation that the colored people, exercising their political power, elected any colored policemen; wasn't it done by a council of which two-thirds were white Democrats?—A. Yes, sir; and the presiding officer was a white Democrat, and one member of the council was a Republican; I mean as the council then was. Colonel Raulston had been a Democrat, but had been a Republican for a year or two. The others in the council were Readjusters—Democrats every one of them.

Mr. VANCE. Let us not get out of the record. There is no allegation here that the negroes elected him; it was the Coalitionists elected him. The whole document is headed "Coalition rule, not negro rule, in Danville."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who elected the four negroes—the council?—A. Yes, sir; as policemen, two on the regular police force in the city; one was a scavenger there; I don't know his true name, but I believe he is called health officer, or something of that kind, but he is a scavenger.

Q. But he is a scavenger. If not, then the health officer was the man that gathered up the dead cats, horses, &c., things of that kind, old garbage; and the clerk of the market is the weighmaster spoken of here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of the citizens complaining of the fact of the negro being a scavenger, &c., as an invasion of the rights of the white men?—A. No, sir; they thought it was a very proper office for him to be employed in.

Q. If a white man had been appointed health officer, he would have employed a negro to do that, would he not?—A. They always had been doing it before.

Q. Well, read on and point out any other false statement.—A. Here is a statement about the market.

Out of the 24 stalls and stands at the market place, 20 are rented out by the council to the negroes.

Q. What about that?—A. That market is owned partly by the town of Danville and partly by private citizens. The town of Danville owned at that time and still owns twelve market stalls, and in front of each stall upon the sidewalk is what they call a table or stand for hucksters, making twenty-four. These twelve stalls and twelve stands or tables for hucksters, in which vegetables are sold, are rented out by law to the highest bidder for the period, I believe, of twelve months. Any citizen may bid at those auctions. In addition to that there were then, and I think still are, six stalls belonging to a citizen of Danville, Captain Robinson. At the time this circular was published I think but two of those stalls were rented out by him; I don't know to whom they were rented. Captain Robinson's stalls and those of the town council are upon what I will call the west side of the street, the same side, together. On the opposite side of the street, immediately in front of the stalls owned by the town, are twelve stalls or shops in a long brick building belonging to Mr. John W. Holland.

Q. The father of this young man that was shot?—A. Yes, sir; I said twelve, I believe it was eleven at that time, and I think now nine of the eleven were rented to negroes.

Q. By Holland?—A. By Mr. John W. Holland.

Q. Is he a Democrat or Republican?—A. He is a Democrat.

Q. Does his name appear to this circular?—A. I think that he signed here; yes, I see John W. Holland, tobacconist; that's the gentleman.

Q. Then out of twenty-four stalls how many were rented to negroes directly by the city authorities, if any?—A. Some were; I don't remember the number.

Q. But all these that were rented to the others or belonged to the others were owned by white Democrats, and sublet, if at all, to negroes?—A. Yes, sir, they were their private property, and were rented as any gentleman would rent a private house to any gentleman that would pay for it.

Q. Then you say Holland owned eleven of these, and that he signed this paper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now what about the other stalls, what you call the city stalls, how were they occupied?—A. They were occupied by whites and blacks, and I think more by blacks than whites, and so they are now.

Q. How are they rented—are they rented from the city authorities?—A. Yes, sir; rented at public auction to the highest bidder.

Q. Upon public advertisement?—A. Upon public advertisement. I believe it is ten days' advertisement in the papers.

Q. Did you ever hear it made a matter of complaint of injustice or oppression to the white people that the negroes occupied and rented stalls?—A. Never until I saw this circular and never since.

Q. It goes on now just the same way it did before.—A. Except I think there are more negroes engaged in business in the market now than I have ever known.

Q. Go on to the next?—A. It speaks of scenes about the market, filth and stench. Well, a market is never a very sweet-smelling place, but ours in Danville has been and is now a very cleanly well-kept place, as well as such a place can be kept. As to bad behavior and bad language, my office is not very far, and I go there every day when I am able to get to it, and have been for several years, and I have never heard anything of that kind.

Q. Let me read this to you and see what ground of proof there is:

The market, once occupied in all its stalls by polite white gentlemen, with their clean, white aprons, and the most enticing meats and vegetables upon their boards, is now the scene of filth, stench, crowds of loitering and idle negroes, drunkenness, obscene language, and petit thieves.

What do you think of that statement?—A. I say it is untrue.

Q. Is there any difference from the market now to what it formerly was?—A. No, sir; except there are more negroes selling more articles than ever before.

Q. Well, in regard to stench and filth?—A. It is as well kept as a market can be in that respect.

Q. Is that known to be false by the citizens of Danville generally?—A. I should suppose it was; all they would have to do would be to sit down and think of the matter two minutes to know all about it.

Q. Suppose you were called upon to refer to this expression, signed by these respectable names, would you, because it was signed by them, hesitate to pronounce this as a false statement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Knowingly and willfully false?—A. Well, I would not say that these gentlemen, all of them, or any large number of them, signed this paper, knowingly and willfully false, because I have lived long enough in this world to know this: that a man, honest and truthful as he may be, may be so prejudiced by passion or by opinion that he fails to use his reason at all.

Q. But still you would not hesitate to denounce this matter as absolutely false, although it was signed by respectable men?—A. Oh, no; I have no hesitation in that.

Q. Now I will read the next paragraph:

The white men have been driven out and forced to take up private places for vending their meats and vegetables, and the public market, erected by the money of the white people and intended to be occupied by men at least courteous and cleanly, has been converted to the use of squalid negro hucksters, and presents a spectacle of loathsomeness positively repulsive to any person who has the least idea of how a market should be kept.

What do you say to that?—A. I know of no white men being driven out, and under the law they could not have been. You or I or any other citizen of the United States, going to Danville to live, can rent any place in the market if we pay the highest price.

Q. Was it so very much changed by "squalid negro hucksters," &c.?—A. It was not; it was conducted at that time, has been, and is now conducted in the same way, so far as I know or ever heard until I saw this paper.

Q. Is that paragraph true or false?—A. I state that that whole paragraph in reference to the market is particularly untrue.

Q. How is it, compared with other markets in other cities you have seen?—A. I think it will compare favorably with them.

Q. Do you go there yourself?—A. No, sir; I am an old bachelor, but I have for many years been having an office immediately near the market, and pass through it frequently, every day.

Q. Suppose this paragraph circulated among the people of Southwestern Virginia and the valley, where the great body of the population is white, would not this paragraph create an impression upon the minds of the people out in the valley of Southwestern Virginia that you people in Danville were suffering under some terrible, ignominy and disgrace brought upon you by negro rule?—A. It would make that impression upon any man that read this paper who was not acquainted with the facts.

Q. Was not that the design?—A. I should think that it was evidently done with that intention.

Q. To create race prejudice?—A. Since I first saw it I have not been able to conceive for what other purpose it was placed here.

Q. Now you have no hesitation in saying these statements are false?—A. None whatever.

Q. Now go on to the next paragraph in this circular which contains a misstatement, as you think. Read the next clause, if you please.—

A. The next clause :

The whites of the town are powerless to prevent this outrage upon their rights.

Q. Now, is it not a fact that at the time the whites of the town had the majority of the town council?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the majority of the offices?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a native Virginian?—A. Born and raised in the slave-holding portion of Virginia.

Q. You were the judge of the town at the time this circular was prepared.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What power had the negro people in the town of Danville over the matters of the government of the people of Danville?—A. Very little, if any.

Q. The white people had the majority of the policemen; a majority of the council; the judges of the courts; the sheriff; what power had they that you could name over the government of Danville at the time this was written?—A. I can name none, except what power might be conveyed, or used rather, by the votes of the 4 blacks in the council.

Q. That is 4 against 8.—A. That is 4 against 8. Now, I have heard of 8 beating 7, but I have never heard of 4 beating 8.

Q. Were those 4 councilmen bad men, riotous, demonstrative?—A. I have never heard them charged with anything wrong in my life.

Q. Give us their names, so we will see who they are.—A. I don't remember—one was named Lipscombe; one was named Swan; one Batts. I have heard something against him; he got into a difficulty there with another negro and had a fight with him, in which, from what I could learn, I think he behaved badly, but against the others I never heard anything.

Q. Now let me read the next paragraph :

The council, which has the power of regulating the conduct of the market, is presided over by a carpet-bagger—J. B. Raulston—Mahone's collector of internal revenue for the Danville district, and the patronage of his Federal office enables him to control the council with the same undisputed power that the general does his party.

Who is J. B. Raulston?—A. Just a moment; I was in error in answering the former question; I wish to correct myself. I told you of this difficulty, and I had heard of nothing against any other. I was mistaken. The other negro in the council, named Payne, was a man at that time, and is still, I think, in the employ of Colonel Raulston, in the custom-house. He is, in my opinion, a very bad man.

Q. There are two of these negro men who you say are bad; now about Raulston, who is he?—A. Colonel Raulston is a gentleman who was a colonel in the Federal Army, I think, and has been living in Virginia since the close of the war.

Q. What are his politics?—A. He has always been a Democrat until the last three or four years.

Q. Is he a Republican?—A. He is, so far as I know, and I know, I know him well, as respectable as any man in Danville. I never heard anything against him in my life until I heard it here.

Q. Has he ever been convicted of stealing, or anything of that kind?—A. The records of my court won't show it, and I never heard of it elsewhere.

Q. What control could he exercise over the council?—A. None whatever, except personal influence, which anybody might exercise.

Q. He had two in his office?—A. Yes, sir; one of them, I think, certainly is a bad man.

Q. How came Colonel Raulston to be president of the council? I thought Mr. Blair was president.—A. Mr. Blair was elected president of the council, beating Raulston for that office. Mr. Blair held the office probably a year or more, when he resigned, and I believe—I have been informed and I believe it; I have heard Mr. Blair say so, and I have heard Colonel Raulston say so, too—that a number of white men in the council were urged to take the presidency, but all declined it; Colonel Raulston accepted it.

Q. You say, then, he did not seek or court power, but accepted it?—A. He declined it as long as he could, as I understand from Mr. Blair and Colonel Raulston and others of the council.

Q. Where was Raulston from? He was a carpet-bagger. I want to see if he was from Ohio?—A. Well, Colonel Raulston—no he was about the only man I know of in office not from that State; he was from New York.

Q. Was he married?—A. Yes, sir; married in Danville.

Q. Has he a family?—A. He has no children; his wife lives there.

Q. What was there offensive about Raulston? Is he a man of decent manners?—A. He is a man, if you go to him, of as fine address as any I know anywhere. And can do whatever a man of intelligence can do; he can make good use of all that capital that he has.

Q. What do you say of this paragraph in regard to Raulston; is that true or false?—A. In my opinion, it was inspired simply by political dislike, and is false.

Q. Then you say it is not true?—A. I say it is not true, so far as I know and believe; and I think I know.

Q. Let us see what next:

It is seen, therefore, that our town is practically in the hands of and actually controlled by the officers and slaves of the Federal Government, not one of whom has a dollar's worth of visible property within its limits, and this, too, by the most shameless usurpation:

In respect to property—was Raulston a man of any property?—A. I don't think he owned any in Danville; none that I know of.

Q.:

For the constitution and law of the State and the Presidential order by which the Norfolk postmaster was removed, all declare that such officials shall hold no office under the government of this commonwealth.

Mr. VANCE. I would like to have an answer to that other allegation.

The CHAIRMAN:

Q. Well, what do you say to that paragraph now, that "our town is practically in the hands of and actually controlled by the officers and slaves of the Federal Government?"—A. Well, I say, if three officers, "slaves of the Federal Government," members of the town council, could control the others, then it was; not otherwise.

Q. How many officers of the Federal Government are in the town, taking the deputies and all?—A. I think the postmaster has one deputy.

Q. Well, about how many altogether?—A. I reckon there is about five, may be six, altogether.

Q. I want to know if things have come to such a pass that five men can make slaves of a flourishing city of 15,000 inhabitants?—A. Not since this circular was issued it has not been the case, nor was not before.

Q. Is this statement true or false?—A. Oh, no; that's a political canard.

Q.:

The Federal Government, through its internal-revenue collector and the negro councilmen hired by him to scrub—

Mr. VANCE. Senator, I believe there has been no answer to the charge that they had no visible property.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I will ask him, "Not one of whom has a dollar's worth of visible property within its limits, and this, too, by the most shameless usurpation."

A. Payne, if I mistake not, owned real estate, and Batts owned some at one time, but since the riot he left Danville and sold it.

Q. What about "this by the most shameless usurpation." Did they usurp their authority to be Federal office-holders?—A. I don't know.

Q. Were they lawfully appointed and confirmed by the Senate here, as far as you know?—A. So far as I am informed, they were.

I will read the next paragraph:

The Federal Government, through its internal-revenue collector and the negro councilmen hired by him to scrub the floor of the custom-house and make incendiary speeches against the white people of the town, make our town laws, levy and collect our taxes.

Now, I will ask you if you know of these men that are here described as making incendiary speeches?—A. No, sir, I do not. I never heard Colonel Raulston make any speech.

Q. Do you know about the collector or council?—A. I never heard of any of the councilmen except Batts making a speech. I never heard him make a speech. I have heard he has made a speech there and in the county, too, but I never heard any of them.

Q. Do these people make your town laws?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who made your town laws?—A. The town council; the majority of that body.

Q. Who lays and collects your taxes?—A. It is done under the law by an officer elected by the town council. The same officer who collects the taxes now has been collecting them probably six years.

Q. What body appoints the policemen to guard your town?—A. The majority of the council of Danville.

Q. The majority of those were white men?—A. Eight of them; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether the revenue collector, when he was elected president of the town council, said—that it was his intention to use the patronage of the council to build up the Radical negro party.

Did you ever hear of that before?—A. I never heard of it until I saw it here and I never heard of it since.

Q. What do you say about that whole paragraph, taking it together?—A. I say, so far as I am informed of the facts, the statements are in the main untrue, and the whole paragraph is calculated to make a false impression upon the mind of any reader going over the facts.

Q. You may go on without my reading, and state about the police court. That is not your court, is it?—A. No, sir.

Q. I do not know your judiciary system, and therefore ask you to explain.—A. The police court he speaks of is simply a court, not of record, where the mayor of the town and other magistrates—. The mayor of the town has the nomination of the justices of the peace under the common law, and he and other magistrates try cases. If there was anything wrong or irregular, as there might have been, I don't know, in my own knowledge, anything one way or the other. No complaint was ever made to me about it, nor did I ever hear of any complaint at all, and, therefore, my answer to that question about the police court is, that I do not know whether it be true or untrue.

Q. Before we leave that about the town council, I will ask you whether in former times, before the Coalition party was formed, there were not colored men in the council?—A. Yes; there have been colored people there in the council for a number of years. I don't remember how many years, but a long time.

Q. And consequently having 4 councilmen out of the 12 was not an unusual thing in Danville?—A. This was the first time the negroes ever had 4; they had before that, I reckon, for a number of years, 2.

Q. But they had the power, if they chose, to elect them all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But they chose to give the majority to the white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, go on about the police court.—A. I can only say that from my own knowledge I cannot say whether that is true or not. I can only say that no complaint was ever made to me officially, and I was the proper officer for complaints to be made to, but I never heard anything of it until I heard of this.

Q. They speak of a young man named Jones; what do you know about him?—A. I know that when I was prosecuting attorney I prosecuted him for a certain offense and the jury acquitted him. I believe now, and believed then, that he ought to have been sent to the penitentiary.

Q. What kind of a jury was it?—A. I don't know whether it was all white or not; certainly the greater portion of them were white.

Q. He was charged with the crime of seduction, wasn't he?—A. Yes, sir; and in my opinion he was guilty.

Q. But he was acquitted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next statement, that he was only saved from conviction upon indictment by the evidence of his partner?—A. That is an evident mistake. His partner was that man Payne, who evidently committed perjury, and no weight was taken of his evidence at all.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. That man Payne, you say?—A. That man Payne, in my opinion, committed a perjury, and ought to have been sent to the penitentiary.

Q. These two members of the council ought to have been sent to the penitentiary?—A. Yes, sir. I believe in doing justice to all parties.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You believe two were bad men?—A. Yes, I do.

Q. Were they in the council?—A. No, sir; one councilman and one magistrate.

Q. How would you pass on many of the white men, if called upon, that were elected councilmen in Danville? You don't select your preachers and most moral men for councilmen in Danville, do you?—A. That is a delicate question.

Q. What do you think of the council of the city of New York and other cities?—A. Well, there is always something about the character—

Q. Well, tell us about this man Jones, who was acquitted by a jury a majority of which was white?—A. Yes, I believe all were white, but I am not sure of that; but the great majority I know was.

Q. What do you say generally of this statement:

This court which, before the negro régime came into power—

When did that come into power?—A. He means by that “Coalition,” I suppose. Came in to power two years ago next July.

Q. Was there any more negro régime than before?—A. None, except that two negroes were in the council, and a magistrate was a negro; that is all I know of.

Q. Then this means that all Coalitionists are negroes, or what does it mean?—A. The expression “negro régime” evidently means—

Q. Coalitionists?—A. Yes. I can infer nothing else. This circular evidently intends to mean that.

Q. It says:

This court, before the negro régime came into power, was only open a few hours every morning, is now practically open from morning till night, and nothing but actual observation can convey the least idea of the travesty of its transactions. Malice and partiality, whenever there is a motive, and ignorance, in its absence, are the rules of decision. The officials of the court, justices and policemen, co-operate in the work to make fees, and every act, or word, or deed of the citizen, whether atrocious in its character or too frivolous for the law to take notice of, is brought before a justice, and the party, if not fined, is required to pay the costs; and if there is more than one party the cost is doubled, and both parties made to pay costs. White men are arrested for the most frivolous acts by negro policemen and borne along to the mayor's office followed by swarms of jeering and hooting and mocking negroes, and tried, fined, and lectured, and imprisoned by a negro justice, and then followed to the jail by the same insulting rabble.

A. I have no personal knowledge of that fact at all. I know there never has been a time in Danville that I recollect that a person committing an offense, they take him to the court-house before a magistrate who tries him or not, just as he pleases, but whether they do it at all hours of the day or not, I don't know.

Q. Well, all these minor offenses tried before a magistrate come before your court, if of magnitude?—A. Very few of them.

Q. Before what court are indictments found?—A. My court; but in Virginia, for the last eight years certainly, and I believe longer than that, probably ten, certainly eight, the magistrates have concurrent jurisdiction in almost all misdemeanors with the county and corporation courts.

Q. Is there no appeal?—A. There is an appeal; but in a great majority of cases no appeal is taken.

Q. I will ask you if the conduct of these officers and justices, &c., has been made a matter of complaint that you know of—general complaint by the city?—A. No complaint was made to me of Jones's behavior as a magistrate, and never has been up to this time.

Q. Have they ever been arraigned before the grand jury, that you know of, for misconduct or malfeasance in office?—A. No, sir; but one of them might have been. However, I am not certain, either. It seems to me that one of the magistrates, W. H. Luck, I think—it seems to me was indicted for carrying concealed weapons. I am not sure of that.

Q. For carrying concealed weapons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were ninety indictments made at that time, were there not; how many indictments were made?—A. I do not recollect the number; probably one hundred.

Q. And he was one of them?—A. I think he was one of them; I am not sure of that.

Q. I will ask you whether this young negro Jones was a good or bad magistrate, so far as you know?—A. So far as I am informed, I have heard the deputy sergeant, a very estimable man, a Democrat, too, say he was a long way the best magistrate in the lot; I have heard others say that. He may have been that and not a very good one.

Q. Had you white magistrates?—A. Two.

Q. How many negroes?—A. Only one, Jones.

Q. Two white magistrates and one colored?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you understood that Jones was rather the best of the lot?—A. That's all I ever heard about it.

Q. From what this gentleman said?—A. Yes, sir; well, I have heard several other white men there say the same thing. I have heard the clerk of the court say it.

Q. Then the signers of this paper say that this negro—

There the most active justice is a young negro named Jones.

A. I don't know whether that is true or not.

Q. Well, that is rather a compliment to him, saying he was the most active of the three. There were only three in Danville then, were there?—A. Only three justices.

Q. It says:

At the October court of this year two of the party magistrates were removed from office by the judge of the hustings court, one for embezzling the money of the commonwealth, the other for "causes sufficient to the court," and one of them has fled the town to avoid indictment.

A. That is true.

Q. Which one was that?—A. W. H. Luck. He fled the commonwealth to avoid indictment for not paying over moneys for fines he collected.

Q. Was he a white man or a colored man?—A. He was a white man, and so was the other magistrate, R. E. Lee.

Q. Both white men?—A. Both white men. I removed them both. That is one of the few things in this paper that is true.

Q. Is there anything in this statement showing that they were white men?—A. No, sir; I don't remember that there is or that there is not. I don't think there is.

Q. Would not the good people of the southwestern valley of Virginia in reading this paragraph have supposed, as I did until you mentioned it, that these were negroes?—A. An ordinary reading would lead you to think so, I think; I must confess I think that is the case.

Mr. VANCE. I think this is rather a stretch of the examination.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I will ask you if this Luck was not elected as one of the magistrates in a Democratic ward?—A. He was elected by the people in the third ward, I think, which is the one in which the whites had then, and I think now have, the majority.

Q. Then he was elected in a Democratic ward; had he not served under a Democratic judge?—A. He had not served as a magistrate under Judge Aiken, but had been Judge Aiken's commissioner of accounts, or trusts, which is a responsible position, to settle fiduciary accounts.

Q. He was elected by the people of a Democratic district as a magistrate, and he was the rascal you turned out?—A. He was the rascal I turned out.

Q. Is there any more important office in your county than that occupied by Luck, of trust commissioner?—A. None whatever.

Q. We call it the probate judge.—A. I have seen the expression in your newspapers, but never knew what it was.

Q. Go to the next thing. I will ask you whether there is truth in this:

The notoriety which this state of things in our town has produced has attracted to the town large numbers of idle and filthy negroes from the border counties of North Carolina, and from Halifax, Mecklenburg, and Charlotte, Va.

What do you say to that?—A. I do not think that is correct; my impression is that the negro population of Danville and particularly the transient population, that is, those that come and stay some months and leave, increases annually because the number of tobacco factories increases annually, and they come there to work.

Q. It is not because of the offense that you charge as false?—A. No; it has been that way for fifteen or sixteen years; ever since I have been in the town.

Q. What is the extent of the business in Danville compared with what it was at the close of the war?—A. Well, I never lived in Danville then.

Q. Don't you know the fact?—A. I went to Danville in 1869, and I know that the tobacco sales are ten or twelve times as great now as they were then.

Q. Danville has got to be a large city, hasn't it?—A. My recollection is that when the first report of the Tobacco Association the first year I reached Danville, they sold less than four millions of pounds and now they sell from forty-five to fifty millions, I believe.

Q. Now they speak of these vagrants:

Although there is a law against vagrants they are never disturbed.

Whose business is it to arrest vagrants?—A. It is the business of the officers. We have a law in Virginia against vagrants. I don't know whether there is an ordinance of the corporation against them or not.

Q. Well, the majority of these magistrates are white men?—A. Yes, sir; I think during the years I have been in Danville I have known a few instances in which vagrants were taken up and sent out of the city, but very few instances. We have very few vagrants about there. Our people are mighty busy turning round and working.

Q. Very busy at work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state whether you have in Danville any more of this class of idle people than you have in other cities of equal size?—A. My observation, since I have been there, is that we have less by a good deal. Danville is the most thrifty business place going; what you may without offense term the most Yankee place that I know anywhere at all.

Q. Now, is this true:

Although there is a law against vagrants, they are never disturbed. They infest the streets and sidewalks in squads, hover about public houses, and sleep on the door-steps of store-houses and the benches of the market place. They impede the travel of ladies and gentlemen, very frequently forcing them from the sidewalk into the street. Negro women have been known to force ladies from the pavement and remind them that they will "learn to step aside the next time." In several instances white children have been struck by grown negroes. We know of several cases where the lie has been given to a white lady to her face by a negro.

I will ask you if that is the situation of society in Danville?—A. In reference to the streets and sidewalks being infested by negroes hovering about public houses I know nothing of that kind, except that on Saturday evenings there are crowds about the streets and you get along sometimes with difficulty; persons passing, that is all. As to sleeping on door-steps and benches, &c., I go home and go to bed. I do not know how the man that wrote this thing found that out. I never heard of it before. As to impeding ladies and gentlemen, they are very often impeded in Danville and elsewhere, as ladies and gentlemen are whenever they get into a crowd; not otherwise.

Q. You have been in Baltimore and New York, have you?—A. Yes, sir; and Philadelphia and Boston.

Q. Is there not the same kind of obstruction there?—A. The same kind of impediment and obstruction that, so far as I know, exists in Danville exists everywhere else. I believe there is less of it on Broadway, in New York, than anywhere else I have seen, because people go up one side and down the other.

Q. Are not the negro people, as a rule, peaceable and polite compared with the same class of white people?—A. So far as I know the negroes are defferential to white people. I have been run against by negroes and whites, and I always thought it was an accident, and I have run against them myself.

Q. Now, I will ask you whether taking that whole paragraph, is that true?—A. I cannot think it is true.

Q. Now, would not the tendency of such statements as that made to the people of the white counties of Virginia make them believe that you in Danville were subject to an ignominious negro rule by which these people oppressed you and denied you the ordinary decencies of social life?—A. I should think that would be the impression made upon the mind of the ordinary reader.

Q. Now, is that correct?—A. No, sir; it is not.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. How much of that paragraph does your denial cover?—A. I understand it covers that portion about the behavior of the negroes. I can only say until I saw this statement in this paper I never heard of it before.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you appoint the magistrates to take the place of those two men whom you removed?—A. I did.

Q. Whom did you appoint?—A. I appointed a gentleman by the name of Ogleby, and another gentlemen by the name of Venable.

Q. Are they white men?—A. They are both white men, and I think both Democrats. They are both of them men of capacity and of the highest integrity and I made a written request of them if they would accept the office and faithfully attend to the business. They said they would and I appointed them and they still hold office.

Q. When was that done?—A. That was done at the October term of the court last year, I think.

Q. Was that before this circular was issued?—A. I think that was done before this circular; I do not remember about that, though.

Q. Then there is no mention of that made here?—A. There is no mention of it made here.

Q. But it was made before the circular was issued?—A. I think it was. By the way, what is the date of this circular?

Q. It has no date.—A. I never saw this circular until may be five or six days before the election.

Q.:

A few nights ago the negroes were very indignant because they heard of the earnest work that was going on by the whites, to register all their voting strength, and called a meeting, which was addressed by an incendiary negro, named Pleasants, a postal agent, and one of the town councilmen, hired at the custom-house, and they passed a resolution requesting the governor to have Federal troops sent to our town on election day, to intimidate the white people at the polls.

What have you to say to that?—A. I do not know whether that is true or not. I never heard of it until I saw it here.

Q.:

They have also a scheme to amend the town charter if they elect the legislature this fall, and take into the town a large negro settlement, outside of the town limits, called Jacksonville, by which they will get several hundred more black voters, and then it will be impossible for any white man to hold office in the town. We know this is their plan.

Did you ever hear of that?—A. I never heard of that until I saw it here. He knows a great deal more than I do.

Q. They had a better opportunity of knowing schemes of the people than you.—A. Yes; much better, judging by this.

Q.:

It is well known that hundreds of the North Carolina tobacco raisers who live within a few miles of Danville, and used to sell their tobacco in our market, now go five times as far to a market in their own State, on account of the negro rule in our town. At the negro meeting, referred to above, one of their speakers said they did not want the people of North Carolina to come here anyway.

Do you know anything about that?—A. I never heard of the negro meeting until I read about it here, and therefore do not know anything about what the negroes said, and as to the tobacco men in North Carolina, I do not know anything about that.

Q. I see the words "On account of the negro rule in our town," are italicized?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was meant by "negro rule"?—A. I suppose it meant Coalition rule.

Q. Yes; but the Coalitionists, I understand, were white men?—A. Well, a great majority were, but I am speaking after the manner of the circular.

Q. Then they intended to apply the term "negro rule" to the rule of the Readjusters?—A. I suppose so; I cannot see any other meaning than that.

Q. Read the next paragraph and see whether that is true or not, according to your judgment. It is very eloquently written.—A.:

Now, fellow-citizens of the valley and southwest, we cry out to you in our affliction to deliver us from this awful state of humiliation and wretchedness. We know that, as a rule, the cries of the wretched make but little interruption of the general progress of things. The sun rises and sets all the same, and the work of the Government, and the work of the feast and the torture goes on with exactness and tranquillity.

It is true, I believe, that the sun rises and sets all the time, and that the work of Government goes on, I believe that is true, but I know nothing of the awful state of "humiliation and wretchedness" of the people of Danville, and, if it was so, I do not know how voters in the southwest could relieve the people of Danville in any way.

Q. Let me read this:

But we appeal to you by that sympathy which constitutes the bond of union between honorable men struggling in the cause of freedom, to help us throttle this viper of negroism that is stinging us to madness and to death, by voting against the Coalition-Radical candidates who are yelling and screaming with delight at the prospect of fastening its fangs into us forever.

A. Well, I regard that clause and the one that follows it, just as a sort of cure that you politicians have the habit of putting in your speeches; I never heard one of the speeches that one of you made in your life that you did not think the country was going to the devil.

Q. Well, you say this produced an excitement when it was brought out?—A. I had very little opportunity of judging, but as far as I can judge, it did.

Q. Do you know whether it was circulated openly there in Danville?—A. It has never been circulated there at all, as I know. As I told you, it was just a very few days before the election; the date of my telegram and letter to D. S. Lewis will show the first time I ever saw or heard of that circular.

Q. How soon after this was it that Sims made a speech in Danville?—A. I do not recollect, because I tell you I do not recollect the date of my first seeing that circular. If you can find my telegram to Lewis I reckon I can tell you. I think it was a very few days before election. My impression is that Colonel Sims, at the time he was stated to have made a speech, which I did not hear, happened a day or two after I saw that circular.

Q. I will ask you if you wrote to Mr. Lewis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A letter dated November 1, 1883 [handing witness a letter]. Look at that letter and say if that is the letter you wrote to him. I see it is published in the election contest of Sims and Hurt.—A. Yes, sir; I am the author of that letter. I cannot speak positively as to the date; I assume it to be correct.

The Chairman. I offer this letter in evidence.

Q. This expresses your opinion of the matter at the time?—A. It expressed my opinion then, and expresses it now.

Q. I will embody it in your testimony at this point:

DANVILLE, Nov. 1, 1883.

Hon. D. S. LEWIS or Hon. JNO. PAUL:

I have to-day seen for the first time the circular headed "Coalition rule in Danville," and addressed to the people in the southwest and valley of Virginia. I have read this circular with mingled feelings of astonishment, sorrow, and indignation—astonishment and sorrow at seeing the names of some persons of known integrity and truth (if their signatures be not false) affixed to a document containing so much falsehood, and these elements so ingeniously commingled together that entire false impression is left upon the reader; and indignation that any class of men, however morally depraved by nature or education, or however blinded by prejudice and passion, should be so far lost to ordinary reason and common sense as to indorse a paper which has been evidently prepared for a political purpose by some one who is regardless of truth.

I am free to say that I am perhaps as well acquainted with the behavior and conduct of the people of this town as any citizen in it, and I believe the great majority of the statements made in said circular are utterly false and without any foundation in fact. Indeed I have been able to find but two statements which are true, and these are in reference to the removal of two justices of the peace.

You are at liberty to use this telegram as you think proper.

JOHN D. BLACKWELL.

Q. Did you hear the speech of Mr. Sims?—A. No, sir; I did not hear his speech or anybody else's. I was at no meeting during the last canvass; my health was so I could not get about at all. I have to stay in the house at night.

Q. You mentioned to Senator Vance you thought it better to submit this matter to the grand jury because you yourself were a witness to a portion of the transaction?—A. Yes, sir; that was one reason, but perhaps other reasons might be given.

Q. Did you charge the grand jury on that occasion?—A. I did; I charged them especially about the Danville riot.

Q. Give me the substance of your charge; here is a paper signed by you [handing witness paper]; you may take that to aid your recollection if you choose?—A. I read that this morning. I wrote that letter myself.

Q. State the substance of your charge, refreshing your recollection by that.—A. I charged them about offenses generally, such offenses as are usually charged in our State by judges, given to the grand jury, but then presently I got to the Danville riot; there I dwelt at some considerable length, because I had first to explain to the grand jury what a riot, unlawful assembly, and rout were; all three intimately connected together. I did explain as well as I could and intelligently as I was able to do, undertaking to impress upon the jury how grave a crime at common law, especially under our statutes, a riot or rout was, and especially when attended with damage to property or life. I charged the jury that any man who fired a pistol in that riot at another was not only guilty of a riot but guilty of shooting at another under our statutes; that if he struck or wounded any one he was not only guilty as a rioter but guilty of felonious wounding. If the wound produced death he was guilty not only as a rioter but as a murderer, and I charged them carefully without fear, favor, or affection to inquire into the whole matter and see first whether there was a riot, rout, or unlawful assembly; if there were, who constituted the rioters or routers; to find out how many persons were wounded as far as they could; how many were shot at, and, if possible, how many were killed, and urged them as a matter of the vindication of the law, for the safety of order and good government, to prosecute the matter as extensively as possible, to get all the facts and indict the parties, if any, they found guilty. That, I believe in a few words is the substance of what I had to say about the Danville riot.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Have you a statute defining what is a riot?—A. Only as it is the common law. Our statute has not changed the common-law definition of riot at all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I will ask you whether the assembly of those three men, Lea, Noel, and Taylor, armed as they were, was not itself a riot under your law?—A. Under the definition of the law, the assembly of three men, whether armed or unarmed, for an unlawful purpose, is an unlawful assembly, and makes a riot.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Well, for the purpose of assaulting Lawson?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Then this would be a riot according to the Virginia law?—A. Yes, sir; and according to the English law, because that is the Virginia law.

Q. You have the statutory law?—A. We have the common law except where the statute has modified it, and, in a large number of instances, it has not done so. The old English common law, in reference to unlawful assembly, riots, and routs, obtains in Virginia to this day.

Q. Has there been any bitterness or partisan feeling among the Democrats of Danville, Va., against the members of the Coalition party? What is the state of feeling between the parties?—A. As far as I could learn, in some localities there has been a good deal of bitterness.

Q. What is the feeling among the Democrats there toward the white Coalitionists? You spoke of that.—A. Yes, sir; I did that in answer to your former question.

Q. I will ask you if that personal feeling extended to their personal relations or social relations?—A. I have reason to think that in some instances it did. It ought not to have done so, but I believe it did in some cases.

Q. Did you yourself experience or see any such evidences of hostility?—

A. There was a good deal of coolness manifested toward me. There was a number of men who were formerly very friendly to me that will scarcely speak to me. It is a matter of very little moment, though, hardly worth talking about.

Q. No; but I want to know whether that grows out of political relations?—A. I know of nothing else; though let me add another word in justice to all parties; in a vast majority of instances, though, there has been no such coldness as I spoke of just now.

Q. Only in regard to a few. You spoke of being a soldier. Were you a Confederate soldier during the war?—A. Yes, sir. I was in the entire war for four years, except nearly twelve months, when I was a prisoner of war.

Q. Besides the Danville circular, as we will call it, can you cite any other document or proof showing a disposition to make the race issue, classifying all Coalitionists as negroes?—A. No, sir; I cannot cite any particular one now; from the Lynchburg papers which I saw during the canvass, the Danville papers, not all the Richmond papers, but some of them, and the extracts that I saw, not from those papers, but from other papers in the State, it was evident the key-note of the campaign was to excite the color line.

Q. Was there a campaign paper published?—A. Yes, sir; published in the city of Lynchburg; I believe it is the same paper under the same name published there still. In fact, I know it is.

Q. The tendency was to draw the line on the color line and class all the Coalitionists with negroes?—A. Only as I could judge from the public prints, and, judging from them, that was the key-note of the campaign.

Q. As a matter of fact, was not the settlement of the debt by the Coalitionists acquiesced in by the Democratic party in the last canvass?—A. So considered in Virginia; they announced their intention to acquiesce in it and have so acted since.

Q. And they then drew the line between the two parties on the color line?—A. Their organs do, unquestionably.

Q. When was your poll-tax repealed in Virginia; what year?—A. It was done by the legislature of 1881 and 1882. I think the law went into operation from its passage. I am not sure about it, but it was in April or March, 1882, I think.

Q. Then, in the election of 1882 and 1883 there was no demand for a poll-tax?—A. None whatever. Last fall was the first time when the payment of poll-tax was not a prerequisite of voting.

Q. Was it in the fall of 1882, too?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. The fall of 1882 and 1883?—A. Yes, sir; that was the first time. Time flies so rapidly that I omitted to say last fall was the second.

Q. Do you remember when that poll-tax was first levied?—A. It was a number of years ago.

Q. I will call your attention to it again; was not the repeal of the poll-tax adopted at the time of the election between Wise and Massey? Was it not that election that adopted it?—A. Oh, yes; the people voted upon it at that time, and last fall was the first election since the limitation was removed.

Q. Did that limitation, while it lasted, operate to exclude the colored vote in Virginia?—A. Yes, sir; and a very large number of the white vote, at least so the figures would seem to indicate.

Q. So that the first contest of a free vote for every male citizen above the lawful age was made last November?—A. Last November at the November election.

Q. How were they prevented from voting by the existence of that tax?—A. Because they could not pay that money, or did not have it; intended to pay it, but did not have it at the time.

Q. How could they pay it; did they have to go to the county court to pay it?—A. I am not sure I am correct about this. I will make a statement, however. They were required to pay it at the usual time for paying taxes; if they did not pay their taxes at the time they were required to pay them, that tax, and property tax, and all other taxes, at the same time the election was going on they could go to the clerk of the court and pay it to him, and he would give them a receipt; and when the election came on and they came to the polls they would present that receipt to the judges of election, and then if they were found to be properly registered they would be allowed to vote.

Q. Then they had to go to the county clerk?—A. Or the corporation clerk.

Q. They would have to come from different parts of the county to do that, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir. I may be wrong in that. I say the county clerk; it may be the county treasurer.

Q. At all events, they had to go to the county town?—A. Yes; to the county town.

Q. However remote they lived from Danville, they would have to go to the county seat to pay the taxes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent did these difficulties that you have mentioned prevent the colored people from voting prior to the repeal of the poll-tax?—

A. That is a very difficult question to answer. I cannot answer it, because I don't remember.

Mr. VANCE. Does the question refer to Pittsylvania County?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, confine it to Pittsylvania County, if you please. What proportion of the colored vote, in your judgment, was prevented from voting either by the poll-tax or by the difficulties of the other?—

A. My impression is that from some causes, I don't know whether from legal causes or what causes they were, that in proportion to the population it operated to prevent more colored people, and white people too, from voting in Pittsylvania County than in any other county in my State. But as to the percentage in which the vote was diminished I do not know. It was generally thought it was a considerable per cent., but that was derived from rumors, and I couldn't say.

Q. You have formed no opinion about it?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. You say that under the old tax system, requiring the prepayment of taxes before the party could vote, that a man could go to the county treasurer and pay his tax and vote even if he had not paid at the regular time?—A. Either the county treasurer or the county clerk, I am uncertain which; I think, however, he might go to either officer.

Q. He could not pay to either, though, until after he had been reported as delinquent, could he?—A. I don't know that he would be reported as a delinquent until after the end of the year.

Q. How did the tax collector settle with the State if he was not reported as a delinquent?—A. I cannot state; I don't know that he would be reported as a delinquent at all until the end of the year. Of course a report would be made, but I don't know at what time it would be made.

Q. Well, the tax that was required to be paid as a prerequisite to voting was the tax of the year before, not the current year?—A. Not the current year, the preceding year.

Q. Well, those certificates, or rather receipts of taxes paid, had to be exhibited at the day of election, had they not?—A. That was the custom in our State.

Q. Was not it the law?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was the law. I don't reckon there is any doubt about that.

Q. Was it not charged all over the State, from one end to the other, that thousands and thousands of colored men voted upon receipts that had been fraudulently issued to them?—A. Yes, sir; it was charged that thousands of men, both colored and white, did it.

Q. But especially it was charged by the Democrats upon their opponents, wasn't it? Of course I am not asking you whether it is true or not.—A. I think it was a general charge of both sides. I don't remember that one side charged more than the other.

Q. Didn't you know that in the contest between Massey and Wise that that is the main allegation that Massey relies upon? No, sir; I have never seen Massey's brief or argument, or whatever you call it.

Q. You don't know that he alleges that there was five thousand votes cast against him on fraudulent certificates?—A. No, sir; I don't know that he alleges that. It seems to me I have heard it, and that he alleges that there was more than ten thousand.

Q. Well, the greater includes the less.—A. Oh, unquestionably.

Q. You were asked if this circular was distributed in Danville, and you replied, "Not at all," that you know of.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not addressed to anybody in Danville, was it?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was distributed among the people to whom it was addressed?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Was there any attempt to keep it a secret in Danville, or was there just a failure to make use of it extensively as a campaign document?—

A. I can only express an opinion about that, if you desire to hear it.

Q. You don't know what the facts are?—A. No, sir; I know nothing about the facts at all.

Q. When did you see the circular first?—A. I saw it on the date of my letter to Mr. Paul. I see it is dated the 1st of November; if that be correct, and it presumably is correct, that is the first I ever heard of it.

Q. Do you know how long that was after the circular had been printed and given out?—A. No, sir; because I don't know when the circular was given out or was printed. Indeed, I didn't know that such a document was in existence, or contemplated, until I saw it that day for the first time.

Q. Did you hear Sims's speech?—A. No, sir; I did not hear any speech during the campaign of any kind; was at no public meeting of any kind whatever.

Q. You were not well?—A. No, sir. I should not have gone if I had been well.

Q. But you would have been more on the streets, and have known more of what was going on?—A. Yes, sir; no doubt about that, I reckon.

Q. You say the circular created considerable excitement at Danville when its contents were known?—A. I said that I had but little opportunity of observing whether it did or not, but such opportunity as I had I thought it did.

Q. Did you know whether Mr. Sims's speech created any excitement or not?—A. I was informed that it did.

Q. Now you have heard what it was said Mr. Sims's speech contained, that he took up these signers of this circular one by one and denounced each one as a liar, scoundrel, and perjurer.—A. Yes, sir; I have heard that said, and a coward, some of the witnesses say.

Q. Was that not more calculated to produce excitement than anything stated in the circular?—A. It was more calculated to cause bitter personal feeling on the part of these gentlemen against Mr. Sims than anything he said of the circular was.

Q. Well you have designated the circular as false in the main, and calculated as a whole to make a false impression?—A. Yes; I believe it does.

Q. When Mr. Sims denounced those men as liars, scoundrels, and perjurers, did he tell the truth?—A. Well, a number of those men I do not know; if he used that language in reference to the gentlemen whom I did know, I say that Mr. Sims was entirely mistaken. They are not liars, scoundrels, or cowards, those whom I know, and they ought not to have been so denounced; and I will add further, if it is not improper, if he did so denounce them some one ought to have given him a whaling, but I never heard that they did it.

Q. You spoke about the race issue. You were asked if this circular, and other attempts of the Democrats, did not call for a race issue—array the whites against the blacks?—A. Will you repeat that, please?

Q. You were asked if there was not an attempt made by the Democrats, in this circular, and otherwise, to create a race issue?—A. Yes; I was asked that.

Q. I will ask you if the colored people themselves did not create a race issue?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Don't you know, or do you know, that they ostracise, in the most ultra manner, most colored men that tried to vote the Democratic ticket?—A. I never knew it until I saw it in the Danville papers last fall.

Q. Do you know it now?—A. Only now, as everybody seems to know it now.

Q. Have you never heard any expressions among themselves of very violent feeling toward any man who would vote the Democratic ticket?—A. Never until I came into this room, when I heard a woman, whose name I have forgotten. That is the first and last that I ever did hear of that character.

Q. Do you know of any colored men in the town of Danville or the county of Pittsylvania who were Democrats?—A. Ever since I have been in Danville—I cannot answer of my own knowledge—I have always heard of two or three dozen colored men who voted the Democratic ticket. I do not know that it is true.

Q. You do not know that they were persecuted by their own race?—A. I do not know; never heard any such thing until I saw it in the Danville papers last fall.

Q. Did you know, or do you know, that the Democratic paper promised any colored man that they would personally protect him if he voted the Democratic ticket?—A. I was informed that such an address was issued. I don't remember whether I saw it or not.

Q. Don't you know that it was published in the papers that Mr. Fred. Douglas, the great apostle of the colored people and miscegenation, had advised the colored people to make it too hot for any to vote the Democratic ticket?—A. No, sir. I have heard of his miscegenation ideas, but I never recollect to have heard of that.

The CHAIRMAN. If you can show that Mr. Douglas did say so we would not object to it, but I do not think you can quote a newspaper as proving that fact.

Mr. VANCE. If that newspaper was circulated——

The CHAIRMAN. Circulated as a Democratic or opposing paper it would hardly be fair, unless you can prove the fact. If a colored paper said that I should think it would be proper, because that would go into circulation among the colored people and carry weight with it.

Mr. VANCE. It was undoubtedly circulated, and never denied that I know of, the attempts in Virginia to raise the race issue. I think it would be perfectly pertinent to ask if that statement of Mr. Douglas had been circulated, whether true or false.

The CHAIRMAN. But if you show that that was true, that such a statement was made, or was circulated among the colored people and believed by them, why that would be different; but I think it would be hardly fair, with our knowledge of the aptness of political party papers to falsify the opposition, to prove anything by them.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. And you do not know the fact that the colored people ostracized each other when they attempted to vote the Democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; I do not know that they ever attempt to vote the Democratic ticket, but I have always heard that there were several in Danville who invariably did so. I do not know that that is true.

Q. You told us about your charge to the grand jury. Did you think your court had jurisdiction of that riot on the streets there?—A. Could take jurisdiction of it?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you think that the courts of the United States had any jurisdiction of it?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you think that this Congress and this committee have any jurisdiction concerning that riot?—A. I do not. I am not a constitutional lawyer, but if you ask me my opinion upon that point I will give it to you.

Q. You were asked in relation to the bitterness exhibited by the Democrats toward the Coalitionists. Now, I will ask you whether that bitterness was not fully reciprocated; if the parties did not meet half way?—A. I have reason to think it was so. I have no idea that there was any slapping on one cheek and turning the other for a second dose.

Q. And it was about as bitter on one side as the other?—A. Oh, about as bitter, I think, as gall could make it.

Q. I will ask you if these issues which arise in the family, so to speak, in the party are not much more bitter than those which exist between the two parties, Democratic and Republican?—A. Family feuds are generally supposed to be the bitterest and most malignant. I presume that is true.

Q. You stated that there were two parties there, the Coalitionists and Democrats; what had become of the Republican party?—A. The Republican party, or as I think, at least, far the greater portion of it, belonged to the Coalition party, and were part and parcel of it, as I understand it.

Q. They had merged, then, into the Readjuster party?—A. Yes, sir; or the Readjuster party had merged into them, whichever way it was.

Q. Well, which constitute the most numerous wing of the Readjuster party, the Republicans or the white Democrats?—A. I think it probable the Republicans did, although at one time the white Democrats in Virginia were in very large number, undoubtedly.

Q. But they never were equal to the full Republican vote?—A. No, sir; I think at one time they were more than the Republicans that voted with them; that is my opinion, but it is only my opinion.

Q. How was it in the last election?—A. In the last election there was certainly, in my opinion, a considerable falling off of the white Coalition vote; whether they voted with the Democrats or abstained from voting, I do not know.

Q. How did the vote then cast compare in amount with the previous vote?—A. I do not remember; but speaking generally, I can only say that I have seen it stated and heard it stated—you mean the aggregate vote?

Q. The aggregate vote?—A. That the aggregate vote was at the last time larger than it had ever been before, and I have seen it stated in the newspaper, but what the aggregate vote was I have never seen the figures.

Q. You have no doubt it was a very large and full vote, have you, at the last election?—A. From all I can see and learn from the public prints, I think it was.

Q. Did I understand you to tell Senator Sherman that Pittsylvania County was slightly Republican or Coalition?—A. I did not say so; I say I thought—will you repeat that question?

Q. I asked you if I understood you to say that Pittsylvania had a small majority, Republican or Coalition?—A. In Pittsylvania County, including the town of Danville, the parties were very evenly balanced, but I thought the majority were in favor of the Coalitionists, but a small one though.

Q. Did any candidate on the State ticket for the legislature, or governor, or Congress, on a general ticket I should say, carry that county within your remembrance, Republican or Coalition?—A. No, sir; not one.

Q. Then it would be more correct to say that it was a small Democratic majority, would it not?—A. My answer was addressed not to the polled but to the registered vote.

Q. Well, whose fault was it heretofore that the full registered vote did not come out?—A. I reckon it was the fault of the men who did not go to vote. I was somewhat surprised by the result at the polls; and surprised by the result of the polls of Pittsylvania County, including the town of Danville, which has been what you call Democratic.

Q. What would you call it?—A. I suppose I should take the old name to-day of Conservative Democrat, but I do not think there is much Democracy down there now.

Q. Well, is there much Republicanism in the Democratic party?—A. A good deal; the two parties seem to us to have changed very much. The man has changed into the serpent, and the serpent into the man.

Q. I should like to have your opinion whether the town was sufficiently quiet and order sufficiently restored for the colored men to have voted on Tuesday after the riot that Saturday?—A. From what little I could see, I passed not immediately by one of the precincts but within 75 yards of it, I suppose, and I was at the other precinct, that is, at the courthouse building in which it was held—it was held upstairs—I did not go past there, I had no vote myself, and therefore I did not go to the polls to vote, but from what I saw and could learn I thought anybody could have voted without being molested. That was my opinion then and is now.

Q. How long have you lived in Danville; you stated, but I have forgotten?—A. Since June, 1869.

Q. Well, from June, 1869, up to the last election did you ever see any improper or violent interference or illegal interference with the right of the colored people to vote in Danville and Pittsylvania County?—A. No, sir; I never had any opportunity of seeing any in Pittsylvania County, and I never heard of any there and I never saw any in Danville.

Q. Did you ever hear any complaint of the colored people that they were not allowed to vote?—A. In Danville? No, sir. I did hear some little complaint in the Congressional election there between Colonel Cabell and Stovall, that they were retarded, some of them from voting, but not that they were not allowed to vote. That is all I ever heard.

Q. As a resident of the State of Virginia, and a man of intelligence and observation, do you think that the colored people have been treated fairly in Virginia with reference to their right to vote?—A. As a general thing I think they have. I never knew of any intimidation being practiced towards the colored people until last fall, if it was practiced then, and I hope never will know of it again.

Q. I will ask you further in justice to your State, if the people of the State of Virginia at large, up one side and down the other, are not as conservative and law-abiding and well disposed as any people on the American continent?—A. I do think so; that is my opinion, and I would be very sorry to think otherwise.

Q. So would we all. Now have you any facts tending to show that this riot was procured to be brought about for the purpose of intimidating the black people at the polls?—A. None whatever, and I would be very slow to believe that there was such a malignity and depravity to set on foot a riot premeditated for any cause.

Q. That would resort to bloodshed for the purpose of carrying the election?—A. Yes, sir; there are bad men everywhere, but that the majority of the citizens designed it and premeditated it, I never have believed and do not believe.

Q. Do you believe that riot had its origin in anything else except the inconsiderate and hot-headed young men that began that fight?—A. Nothing except that. In the highly inflammable state of public feeling I will say here what I know now but did not know then. I had no idea of what public feeling was at that time, not having had the opportunity of seeing.

Q. Not having been able to be out on the streets?—A. Yes, sir; it was like a spark in a barrel of gunpowder, as I since know, but did not have any idea such was the case then.

Q. Now in relation to this circular, under Mr. Sherman's examination I could not get exactly all the things that you alleged were untrue, believed to be untrue. I will go over it again briefly, if you please, without asking you to give each particular that you gave Mr. Sherman, just to see if I am correct in what you denied and what you did not. I understood you to say that the third paragraph, that in reference to the finances of the State, is correct?—A. The second, relating to the census, and the third also I have no doubt are true.

Q. If not true the official figures can very easily contradict it?—A. Oh, yes.

The committee here took a recess and reassembled at 2 o'clock.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Before the recess, Judge Blackwell, I began to go over with you the allegations in this circular and ask you which ones you designated as true, and which untrue and which you don't know.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. We had agreed, I believe, that the second and third paragraphs, containing the statistics, were true?—A. The second and third paragraphs. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the first two clauses of the fourth paragraph I believe you said were partly true and partly not true; that is, the wards were divided, but that it was not by that means that the colored people got any more power than they had before. Is that correct?—A. I think you have stated my answer correctly.

Q. Then the next controverted statement: "Then began the deeds which have so humiliated," &c., down to the end of the second clause in the paragraph, "those things were done which would irritate and wound the pride of the whites, it was executed with the keenest relish." I have marked on the margin that you do not know that to be true or untrue. How is that?—A. I do not know that to be true, and the latter part of it you have not correctly stated.

Q. I didn't quote it all; I just quote a few points.—A. I do not know that to be true, but from my knowledge I do not believe it to be true.

Q. You do not believe it to be true?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then another clause:

Out of nine policemen four negroes were chosen—something before that time unknown to the history of the town—two of them acting not only as policemen, but one as a health officer, and the other as weighmaster at the public scales and clerk of the market.

I have marked on the margin that you answered that that was true.

A. That is true.

Q.:

Out of the 24 stalls and stands at the market place, 20 are rented out by the council to the negroes.

I have marked here in the margin that you say that is untrue.—A. No, sir; I did not say that. I will say what I did say. There are 24 stalls and stands in the market, and they are all rented by the council or by a committee of the council, but I don't know and didn't know then how many were rented to negroes and how many to whites.

Q. Then you don't know whether that is true or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then the next paragraph, describing the scenes of filth and disorder and bad language, &c., about the market, I have you marked in the margin as saying that that was untrue.—A. Yes, sir; that was untrue; put down in such a way as to make a decidedly false impression, contrary to the truth.

Q. Then the next clause in relation to the white men having been driven out, you say that was untrue, or did you say it was true?—A. No, sir; I did not say whether that was true or not true. I do not know whether any whites had been driven out or driven in there, but I stated this, that the stalls and stands were rented out at public auction, according to law, to the highest bidder, and at this auction any citizen might buy. How many whites bid and how many did not and were driven out I do not know.

Q. Now, taking it for granted that the authors of this circular did not mean that men were driven out not by force or by any legal process, but by circumstances.—A. I have no idea that they meant that.

Q. But driven out by circumstances. Taking it for granted that they meant that, that they were forced by circumstances to withdraw their money and their occupation from such a place.—A. No, sir; I cannot say that is true, any more than it is now and was before that time.

Q. Well, you can say what would amount to sufficient to drive a man out of business?—A. No, sir; that would be something every man would have to settle for himself.

Q. The next paragraph:

The whites of the town are powerless to prevent this outrage upon their rights.

Do you say that is true or false?—A. Well, I do not recollect saying anything about that at all. I never heard of anything that I regarded as an outrage upon the rights of the whites. You will understand, I suppose, that that line refers to the preceding clause or paragraph.

Q. Well, construing the document by the whole tenor, don't you understand that they meant there by the word "whites" the Democrats as opposed to the Coalitionists who were partly white and partly colored?—A. Unquestionably the author of this paper meant it so to be understood.

Q. Yes. Now, in that sense, was it not true that they were powerless to help themselves, with the majority ever against them?—A. I cannot see that that majority had anything to do with the renting of the stalls.

Q. The majority had all to do with putting in authority those who did rent the stalls.—A. The majority in the town?

Q. Yes.—A. The majority in the council had; they had never been rented by any one but that council.

Q. In this case you say it would be untrue?—A. Yes; taking that view of it, it is not true.

Q. The paragraph that alludes to Colonel Raulston that he—

Is exceedingly offensive to the white people, and it is well known he takes no pains to carry out any of their wishes. Two of the negro members of the council hold positions under him at the custom-house, and they are as obedient to his will in the council as they are in the revenue office?

A. The fact that two negro members of the council held positions under Colonel Raulston at the custom-house is true. As to his being exceedingly offensive to the people, and it being well known that he took pains not to carry out their wishes, I had no knowledge of that fact; never heard a syllable of it before and never have since.

Q. Now, the next paragraph, the first clause of it—

It is seen, therefore, that our town is practically in the hands of and actually controlled by the officers and slaves of the Federal Government.

Allowing now for the magniloquence of using the word "slaves"—a little rhetoric—is that not practically true that it was controlled by the officers of the Federal Government?—A. I should say it is not true, unless officers and employes of the Federal Government, being I believe according to this paper three in number, could control nine others. I think that was the statement I made.

Q. Well, let us see. There are two parties, one composed of 50 and the other composed of 60 members, and those parties hold caucuses or separate meetings and nominate candidates or do anything else by party strength. Thirty-one would control the larger party, and the larger party would control the minority party, so that 31 controls. Is that not so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your practical politics?—A. If there were not any bolting in your practical politics it would be so.

Q. Well, the Coalition members of the council consisted of seven members, and four of them consisted of revenue officers and negroes?—A. Three of them.

Q. Three of them consisting of revenue officers and negroes; if they could control the majority of their party, they would control the whole twelve, would they not?—A. Certainly; just as I said, if three men can control nine.

Q. But it is reduced to less than that, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; just as one man in the State of New York might elect the President of the United States.

Q. By a deciding vote?—A. Yes, sir; you might say one man could control the whole United States.

Q. Yes, but, practically, how many Republicans or Coalitionists were in that board?—A. In the council?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Eight.

Q. How many were there of both parties?—A. There are twelve in the council altogether, eight Coalitionists and four Democrats.

Q. Now, Colonel Raulston coming in, his own vote for one, and his two employés, being three, he would only have two more of his own party to influence to get a majority of the council, would he?—A. Five would not be a majority of thirteen.

Q. Well, it would be a majority of a quorum.—A. I do not remember what a quorum is, but I suppose it would be.

Q. And in that way it is possible that the legislation of your council would be practically in the control of Colonel Raulston?—A. Certainly, it might be so.

Q. So that might be true and might be false, according to the actual influence that Raulston might exercise over the council?—A. Yes, sir; I have heard it said once that Henry Clay, a United States Senator, practically controlled the United States Senate by personal influence.

Q. The next paragraph, or at least the remaining portion of that clause that I have quoted, has reference to the amount of property owned by negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that not true that the men who practically controlled the government were not property-holders?—A. No, sir; I think that is a mistake. So far as I knew then and know now, and believe, Colonel Raulston owned no real estate in Danville, none that I knew at all, but my recollection is, and I think it is accurate, that the negro councilman Batts did own some at that time, and that Paine owned some, and still owns it. Batts, however, sold his and left the place, as I am informed. I do not know that personally.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. That is since the riot?—A. Since the riot; yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Now, Lipscombe was a colored member of the council, was not he?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You speak only of the ownership of real estate?—A. Yes, sir; I speak of the real estate, because I have no means whatever of knowing whether any of them own personal property or not.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Lipscombe was one member of the council, a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What property did he own?—A. I do not know. I never knew him or heard of him before he became a member.

Q. Another colored man was Swann, was he not?—A. Yes, sir; I think he is a member of the council now.

Q. What property did he own?—A. As I understand and have always understood ever since I have been in town, that he owns a house and lot, may be more than that; I reckon two of them. I am not sure of that. I am speaking from general recollection.

Q. And Baine, another councilman, what did he own?—A. He owned a house and lot, so I have been informed, and I think I have seen it on the land-book of the town in the last year or two, but not recently.

Q. Do you know anything of the property or amount in value taxable?—A. No, sir; I do not; I presume it was small.

Q. What about Batts?—A. He owned some lots, as I was informed. I do not know whether they were improved or unimproved, perhaps unimproved, but I have understood that since the election he sold them and left the place. That, however, is mere hearsay.

Q. Well, we want to inquire the date of this circular, anyhow?—A. Well, I am speaking as of that date.

Q. Those four men I have mentioned are all colored men, are they not?—A. Yes; I believe they are all colored.

Q. Only Raulston was president of the council?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he own?—A. So far as I know he owned no property in Danville; no real estate that I am aware of.

Q. Was he a native there?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long has he been there, and where did he come from?—A. He came to Danville from Petersburg, as I was informed; I do not know that of my own knowledge, and he has been in Danville from five to seven years; I don't know how long.

Q. Mr. Arrington?—A. Mr. Arrington has been living in Danville for a number of years, I do not know how long. He is a citizen there and real estate owner. He was born and raised in the county of Franklin.

Q. Mr. Robinson?—A. I do not know whether he owns property or not. My impression is that he did at one time, but my impression is that he failed there.

Q. Beckner, another councilman?—A. Beckner has been living in Danville as long as I have. He is a man, I reckon, worth $20,000 or $30,000.

Q. What kind of property?—A. Real estate. I am not speaking of personal property at all; that fluctuates so, and is perishable.

Q. You are speaking of visible property?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think he owns $20,000 or $30,000 of real estate?—A. That is my impression.

Q. What business does he follow?—A. He has been a liquor man ever since he has been there, selling liquor in one form or another.

Q. Do you mean wholesale dealer or saloon keeper?—A. Well, he has a saloon. I do not know whether he sells wholesale or not. He has a considerable establishment and a large building that he uses for that purpose; I do not know especially the nature of his business.

Q. How much do you think the whole councilmen were worth in real estate, all that I have named?—A. Not a great deal. I do not know how much. You could form a better estimate, I reckon, from what I have told you than I can. I have not a very definite idea of the value of Beckner's property, but much more nearly of his than I have of any of the others. I do not know what they would all amount to altogether.

Q. Well, let us go to the other clause:

The Federal Government, through its internal-revenue collector and the negro councilmen hired by him to scrub the floor of the custom-house and make incendiary speeches against the white people of the town, make our town laws, levy and collect our taxes, distribute our money, and elect negro policemen to watch our town while its inhabitants are asleep.

What do you say of that?—A. I say part of that is true and the other part not true, but all of it is so put together that the general impression made by the whole of it would be as a whole untrue.

Q. What part of it is true?—A. The internal-revenue collector did have at that time, and possibly has now, for what I know, in his employment two negro councilmen. I do not know that is true that he hired them to scrub the floor. As to making incendiary speeches I never heard of Pain's making a speech in his life; I have heard of Batts making a speech or speeches in the town or county, but I have never heard him make one.

Q. But you do not know whether it was incendiary or not?—A. No, sir; I don't know so; I don't know whether that is true or not.

Q. What position did these colored men hold in the revenue department?—A. As I understood and still understand, Batts was—I do not know what you would call him—I should call him watchman. I don't think that is the name they call him by—the United States public building there—I don't know whether it is janitor, something like that; that is not the name they called it by, though; I have forgotten what it was.

Q. What was the other?—A. Payne, I think, was a sort of clerk in the revenue office itself, doing something with stamps, as I understood and understand yet.

Q. You don't know whether either one of them swept the floor or not?—A. No, sir; I do not know that they did or did not, nor do I know whether either of them scrubbed it or not.

Q. Now, what part of it do you especially object to as being untrue?—A. I have told you the part of it that was true; they make our town laws; if they meant by "them" that they assisted to make them, it is a fact; but if they meant they made them, it is not a fact. "Lay and collect taxes" they assisted to lay taxes, but never collected a cent of taxes; and "elect negro policemen to watch our town while our inhabitants are asleep;" they, in common with other councilmen, did that.

Q. What do you construe to be the fair meaning of that, that they did all this by themselves, or that they were part of the body that did this?—A. I construe that the meaning intended by the writer of that was, that they were especially influential in doing all this.

Q. And as such, you pronounce it untrue?—A. As such, it would make a decidedly false impression upon the mind of the reader.

Q. Now, according to your judgment and what you know of the men, was it not understood that Mr. Raulston controlled the proceedings of the council?—A. No, sir; not that I know of. I have no idea that Mr. Raulston had a great control over these two men. I do not know that. I infer that, simply because they were in his employment; but that he really inspired and controlled the proceedings of the council, I do not know. He didn't inspire sufficiently to get himself elected president, I know.

Q. Well, you have some knowledge of the political machinery of bodies like that, have you not?—A. Bodies like the council?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. Or like a legislature or anything?—A. I know something about lobbying about the legislature and the way they do things there, but never knew the town council had anything to do with politics.

Q. Never knew that it had anything to do with politics?—A. No, sir; and I hope I never will. I have heard of such things, but never knew of it.

Q. Well, the next paragraph:

The police court of the town is another scene of perpetual mockery and disgrace.

I have you marked in the margin as—you don't know?—A. Yes, that is true.

Q. You did not visit it?—A. No, sir; I knew nothing about it. No information or complaint was ever brought before me on the subject.

Q. I understand you to say that the allegations here about Jones are in the main true?—A. Yes. I will tell you in a moment what I think is a mistake. That in reference to his being cleared by the evidence of "his partner in a junk-shop." I think that is a mistake. He was cleared, but I think not on that evidence.

Q. Well, that evidence was given?—A. Yes, sir; and was not believed.

Q. You don't know whether the jury acted upon that or not—whether they gave it controlling weight or not?—A. I may say I do in this way, because a number of the jurors told me that they discarded his testimony because he lied, as he unquestionably did. I could state, if it were necessary, what influenced the jury to acquit him, but it would be unnecessary to state that.

Q. Is it true that the court was open, as stated in the next clause—that the court was open a greater length of time than it had been before that?—A. I don't know whether that is true or not.

Q. Do you know whether the assertion is true that the officials of the court, justices, and a policeman co-operated to get up indictments in order to make fees?—A. No, sir; I don't know.

Q. Do you know that the allegation is true that "white men were arrested for the most frivolous acts, by negro policemen, and borne along to the mayor's office followed by swarms of jeering and hooting and mocking negroes," and so on?—A. No, sir; I don't know anything about it. I have no doubt—without knowing anything about it—that negro policemen did arrest white men, and that negroes would follow them along on the street. I have frequently seen that, but that they would jeer him, or anything of the sort, I never noticed it.

Q. Well, the next paragraph relating to the removal of magistrates, you have said, I believe, that that was true?—A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And the first clause in the next paragraph:

The notoriety which this state of things in our town has produced, has attracted to the town large numbers of idle and filthy negroes from the border counties of North Carolina, and from Halifax—

And so on. I have you marked here as saying that that is untrue?—

A. I think that is untrue. I think in the first place we had numbers of idle negroes; I don't know how cleanly they were. The writer of this is probably better acquainted with them than I am. A large number of negroes are annually attracted to Danville, because of the increase of the tobacco factories, and they come there to work.

Q. The next clause, about infesting the sidewalks, sleeping on doorsteps, and so on, I have you marked as saying, you don't know?—A. No, sir; I go home at night and go to sleep; I don't know where the negroes sleep.

Q. The next clause to that, the impeding of travel of ladies and gentlemen on the street. I have you marked as saying that that is not so.—A. You are mistaken about that. I said I expected that that was so.

Q. Then I am very glad to make the correction.—A. Because I have frequently seen ladies and gentlemen, and not unfrequently been impeded myself, especially in going about there one day in the week—that is, Saturday—so much crowded that I have been in the habit of going a number of nights down in the street, and not on the sidewalk. But it was done not by negroes or whites either especially, but simply because of the crowds congregated.

Q. Now, this allegation, professing to refer to individual instances of disrespect to ladies on the street; do you know whether that is true or not?—A. I do not. I never heard of it before, and I cannot believe that to be true, because I know no people on earth would submit to such things. It is all false, for the people of Danville are not base cowards, and no people will allow their women to be insulted, much less men who were once soldiers.

Q. That is your individual belief?—A. It is my individual belief, founded on sixteen years living there. Still these individual instances, if anybody has given those individual instances and said they saw them—men of integrity—I expect they are true, but I can only say I never heard of them up to the time of this circular and have never heard of them since.

Q. Well, this clause about the murder of the farmer of Pittsylvania County, while on his way home from Danville, by negro men, is that true or untrue?—A. I was not questioned about that at all. In reference to the farmer from Pittsylvania—last summer, when I was absent from Danville, I saw before my return to the town, and learned after my return there, that a man had been murdered by three negroes, or by one of the three, at least, if not by all three, some 3 or 4 miles from town, in the county of Pittsylvania. They were brought to Danville, and for a short while lodged in the Danville jail, until they could be carried to Pittsylvania jail, which is some 40 miles off, and they were tried, convicted of the murder, and hanged. I was not questioned about that at all.

Q. I don't remember that you were. I will ask you if the Danville Grays or some white organization was not called out to protect these colored men from lynch law?—A. I was informed that they were. That was before my return to Danville.

Q. To conduct them to jail, the Pittsylvania court-house?—A. I am informed that they were.

Q. Well, this instance that is alleged by a colored man standing in a crowd of his friends with a pistol on his person, and with threatening gestures and loud oaths declared that he wanted to "start a row with some d—d son of a b—h of a white man that he might kill him." Do you know whether that is true or not?—A. I do not; I never heard of it before I was about to say until I saw this, but I think I did. My impression is that I saw published in the Despatch newspaper a letter sent by Mr. Ruffin—Nick Ruffin, I have forgotten his full name—to General Samuel Newberry, of the county of Pulaski, in Southwest Virginia, in which he stated that. I think I saw that in that letter, and if I did it is the first I ever heard of it until I saw this circular.

Q. He is one of the signers of this paper, is he not?—A. He is a member of the firm of Ruffin, Woolfolk & Blair, and as such a signer of this paper.

Q. Is he a respectable man; would you believe his statement?—A. Yes; if Ruffin will swear to me that that is so I will believe that it is so. I say swear to me, I mean if he would tell me so without swearing.

Q. The next paragraph relating to a meeting at which a resolution was adopted requesting that troops should be sent to Danville on the day of election, do you know whether that is true or not?—A. No, sir; my answer to that was I did not know anything about such a meeting and never heard of it until I saw it here.

Q. The next paragraph to that, in relation to taking in the town of Jacksonville, I have you marked as saying you don't know.—A. I don't know; I never heard of that until I saw it here.

Q. The next paragraph to that, in which it is stated that North Carolina tobacco raisers had declined to come to Danville on account of the state of things, I have you marked as saying you don't know whether that is so or not.—A. Yes, sir; I don't know whether that is true or not.

Q. Well, that winds up all the allegations, I believe, in the circular. What are the duties of the health officer?—A. The health officer of our town?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, as I understand, it is doing certain police or scavenger duties in the rear portion of lots—seeing that they are properly policed during the warm or hot months of the year. You understand what that is.

Q. He has some other duties to do than merely to go around and pick up dead cats, as suggested by Senator Sherman, does he not?—A. Well, yes, sir.

Q. He don't do that thing at all himself, does he?—A. Yes; I believe he sometimes does it himself.

Q. Does he not go and inspect and report any one whose lot is not in order?—A. Well, he can do that, and I believe that he has been in the habit of doing it.

Q. He cannot fine or punish anybody, can he?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. He makes a report?—A. He makes a report. I don't know that you understand me or that I fully understand you. What I intend to be understood as saying is this: That, as I understood, a portion of his practicable duty is to remove these things by himself or by his agent; and he may, if he thinks the owner of the house or lot has offended against the sanitary rules, make a report of it.

Q. Exactly; don't they have a cart in the employ of the corporation that goes around and removes the filth from every house?—A. Yes; I think they have several of them.

Q. What I mean, it is not the personal duty of the inspector to go around and pick up the filth himself?—A. No; I don't know that it is.

Q. But to see that it is done?—A. If it is I am satisfied he has not been doing it.

Q. Did you remove Luck?—A. Yes, sir; I removed him from the office of justice of the peace and also commissioner of accounts.

Q. When you went on the bench, didn't you find a rule existing that had been granted by Judge Aiken for that purpose?—A. yes; I found three rules, I think, against him—more than one, and I think it was three.

Q. You were asked about—— A. Governor, just a moment—I was wrong, I guess, now. I said there were three; I am certain there were four rules.

Q. Against Luck?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, the town had rather a bad Luck?—A. Well, it did.

Q. And good luck in getting rid of him?—A. I think so.

Q. Well, you were asked about social, personal ostracism—that it was attempted to be exercised by Democrats towards Readjusters—was there much of that?—A. I saw very little of it. I heard of something of the sort a good deal more than I saw. Of course I don't know anything about that.

Q. If I understood you, you had no personal complaint of that sort to make?—A. None, whatever. I make no complaint of anything of that kind anyhow, but several persons were very cold to me that had not formerly been so, but it is not worth while talking about that.

Q. Now, in the majority of instances I will ask you if your friends could complain?—A. Oh, in a very large majority of instances, as I said to Senator Sherman, there is no change whatever, and has not been any.

Q. No change yet?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. I will ask you if there was not as much, or more ostracism exercised by the negro towards their own brother?—A. Yes; you asked that before.

Q. Well, you need not repeat the answer.—A. I would say just here that I would like to correct an error that I fell into sometime during the examination. I stated that I had heard ever since I had been in Danville that a number had voted the Democratic ticket and never knew it. I may add, these three negroes, whom I can name, stated frequently that they voted the Democratic ticket.

Q. Did they tell you they had any trouble about it?—A. No, sir; did not speak of any trouble at all.

Q. Did any men ever talk to you about trouble they had in voting the Democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; I never heard of that at all until I saw it in the papers.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. I see in this circular this paragraph :

At the October court of this year two of the party magistrates were removed from office by the judge of the hustings court, one for embezzling the money of the commonwealth, the other for "causes sufficient to the court," and one of them has fled the town to avoid indictment.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You see from that that this circular was subsequent to that action, do you not?—A. Subsequent to the removal of these magistrates; yes, sir.

Q. You immediately filled their places with two Democrats, at the same term of the court at which these men were removed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you think that that was a fair statement to make?—A. No, sir; I don't think that that circular was intended as a fair statement about anything.

Q. Now, in that respect was it a fair statement?—A. Oh, no; it was not. I regarded the whole circular, and regard it now, as a political canard gotten up for that purpose. I can see no other reason.

Q. Now, I understand one of these magistrates you did remove had been elected by the Democrats.—A. Presumably so. He was elected in a ward that had a large majority of Democrats.

Q. He also held the office of commissioner of accounts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the most important office in the county, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir; and that was when the Democrats had control.

Q. How was the other one put in office?—A. The other one I appointed to office myself, to fill a vacancy. Capt. W. P. Robinson was a magistrate and resigned.

Q. How are these commissioners selected, by ballot or by appointment?—A. They are appointed by the court.

Q. All those twelve commissioners of council, I mean.—A. The council are elected by a vote of the people by ballot.

Q. All on one ticket?—A. No, sir. There are three wards, and there are three different tickets—three different voting places. Each ward elects four.

Q. This time there were four Democrats and eight Readjusters?—A. Yes; that's the way it was done.

Q. That is, there were four Democrats, four white Readjusters, and four colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Elected by the people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were they elected?—A. They were elected in May, 1882.

Q. At a special election?—A. No, sir.

Q. I mean a charter election.—A. Yes, sir; a charter election.

Q. Not at the State election, but at what you call a village election, or city election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I would like to ascertain from you what is the practice in voting there; do the colored and white people go together to vote?—A. Yes, sir; they have been in that habit.

Q. Or do they go in separate lines?—A. I believe they go there together, and I think they—I don't know how that is; I believe they have been going up pretty well together, letting in first one and then another as they come along. I am not sure of that, though. I know I have been voting there myself frequently, and have had to stand a long time before I could get in; but that was before the ward system was adopted.

Q. When you answered that you did not know of anything which would calculate to intimidate the colored people, did you mean to include in that answer the effect of this circular?—A. The effect of that circular upon the colored people? No, sir; because I had no idea the colored people knew anything about that circular.

Q. Assuming that they did know, that might possibly have deterred some of them?—A. I don't know.

Q. Would not that be its natural effect?—A. I don't know whether it would or not.

Q. You think the main object was to excite the white people?—A. That's my idea. I don't think that was intended to influence the colored people at all.

Q. Now, the last clause of this circular:

Help us, fellow-citizens, by voting for the Conservative Democratic candidates for the legislature, for unless they are elected we are doomed.

Is that a fair presentation of the condition of things?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is not?—A. No, sir. It is about as fair as most everything else in there, though.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What is the name of the man you removed from commissioner of accounts?—A. Walter H. Luck; I don't know his full middle name.

Q. There was another one removed?—A. A magistrate; his name, I am sorry to say, sir, was R. E. Lee.

Q. Who appointed him?—A. I did.

Q. You appointed him and you removed him?—A. I did. I appointed him and removed him. He was well recommended to me, but my appointing him was a great mistake. Within a week after I appointed him, I reckon, a dozen gentlemen in whom I had full confidence were kind enough to come to me and tell me he was not a proper man at all. I told them I wished they had come to me beforehand. And as soon as I could get rid of him I did.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. How long was he in office?—A. I don't remember the time—a short time, though—a very few months.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Was he recommended by either party or by both parties?—A. He was recommended by intelligent and honest men of both parties ; principally Democrats.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. (handing the witness a map of Danville). Will you look at that and see if it is properly laid down?—A. Do you mean whether the lots are opposite each other?

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. He wants to see whether the lots are properly named—whether the persons named are owning the houses.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. Yes.—A. I see this map is correct in an instance that almost every witness that has spoken of it has been mistaken. They, all of them, locate Jones's drug store exactly opposite the Border saloon, which is not the case, as you will observe.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You say that this is correct?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE :

Q. That purports to have been made by the city engineer of Danville. Are you acquainted with him?—A. Yes, sir ; he is a very skillful engineer, a man of a high order of intelligence ; an excellent man.

W. P. ROBINSON sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Were you examined in the contest between Sims and Hurt?—Answer. I was partially examined. The examination was not concluded for want of time.

Q. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—A. I am forty-one years old, and agent for a guano company in Baltimore.

Q. You reside in Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Danville?—A. I have lived there about thirty years.

Q. Were you a soldier in the Confederate service?—A. I served through the war.

Q. Were you at any time a captain of a military company?—A. I was captain of the Danville Grays for a number of years—raised that company and organized it.

Q. Were you present at the meeting in front of the court-house addressed by Col. W. E. Sims?—A. Yes, sir ; I was present.

Q. Were you an officer of that meeting, or had you any particular part in it?—A. I had no part in the world.

Q. But you heard it all?—A. I heard the speech. I saw he was going to explain this Danville circular about Coalition rule.

Q. Had he a copy of that circular before him?—A. Yes, sir ; I think when he made the speech he held it in his hand.

Q. If you heard his speech I wish you would tell us about it.—A. He held in his hand what he called this Danville circular, said to have been addressed to the people of the valley of Southwest Virginia, and said that no copy of it had ever been seen in Danville ; had not been circulated there, and the copy that he had he obtained from Washington.

and that it contained forty lies, and he read it section by section and commented upon it, and he took up each section as he went on.

Q. You say it was directed to the valley or southwest part of Virginia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the character of the population of that region, white or black?—A. In the valley it was white—a large white population.

Q. A large majority white?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were the politics of that region of country?—A. It was Re-adjuster.

Q. Give now, as near as you can recollect, the course of his speech and what he said.—A. I could do it better if I had that circular.

Q. We will give you a copy of it [handing witness a copy of the circular].—A. Well, I think the first thing he took up was this, in regard to the town being divided into wards. The circular charged that the negroes voting at one precinct had been able to control the town and levy upon the treasury and get its offices, and he stated in regard to that that a petition of four hundred and eighty-five white persons had been signed and sent to W. T. Clark, who was the first signer of the circular, who was then a member of the council—the council at that time being Democratic—asking him to get the legislature to divide the town into three wards, and it was passed unanimously, as Sims said, by the council.

Q. It was recommended by the council?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then did he state what Clark did; whether Clark presented it to the legislature or what he did?—A. Well, it was divided into wards by Judge Aiken.

Q. It was not done by the legislature, then, but by the judge?—A. They had to pass the law.

Q. Who procured the enabling act of the legislature?—A. It was the council. Sims said W. T. Clark presented the petition to the council and they passed a resolution asking the legislature to divide it.

Q. That the legislature passed the enabling act upon the petition, did he say so?—A. Sims stated that it had been done by the resolution of the council offered by Clark, and it was done by Judge Aiken, who gave the whites one ward and the negroes two wards.

Q. The authority was granted by the legislature, and Judge Aiken, acting upon that law, divided it into three wards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that one of the lies?—A. That was one of the lies.

Q. What was the next one?—A. Then he went on to explain. The circular charged that there were four negroes on the police, and he went on to explain that there were only two negro policemen—that one was the town scavenger and one was clerk of the market, and I think he stated that one was superintendent of the poor-house, and that he had been superintendent of the poor-house under Democratic rule. I think he stated that.

Q. Who was the one who had been superintendent of the poor-house under Democratic rule, which one of the colored men?—A. It was one of the colored men; I think that Sims stated that in his speech, though I am not very certain.

Q. What further did he say? Did he say how many white men were in the council?—A. He went on to say that there were eight white men in the council and four negroes. If four could control eight they could control the council. The circular charged that—

The market, once occupied in all its stalls by polite white gentlemen, with their clean, white aprons, and the most enticing meats and vegetables upon their boards, is now the scene of filth, stench, crowds of loitering and idle negroes, drunkenness, obscene language, and petit thieves.

He denounced that as one of the lies.

Q. What do you say, you are a citizen there—what do you say, is that true or false?—A. I say it is false.

Q. What was the next?—A.:

The white men have been driven out and forced to take up private places for vending their meats and vegetables, and the public market, erected by the money of the white people and intended to be occupied by men at least courteous and cleanly, has been converted to the use of squalid negro hucksters, and presents a spectacle of loathsomeness positively repulsive to any person who has the least idea of how a market should be kept.

He denounced that as one of the lies and explained.

Q. What explanation did he give?—A. The explanation was that there were twelve stalls in the market, six of them were rented to white people and six to colored people. Well, that night I helped him to explain. I was present and was struck with this part of it, about the market; how absurd it was and how false it was, and I told him that there were twelve stands belonging to the corporation, and it was stated in this circular—he stated in this circular—they charged that the Readjusters had rented all the stalls to the negroes, and he said the people would think that they had rented, as they said, to the negroes, instead of to white men and driven white men from the market, but Mr. Arrington was there that night, who was chairman of the committee from the council, and he stated there that the stalls were rented at public auction by him, and that there had not been any change from Democratic rule; that the only exception—I have forgotten what exception it was, but I think that exception was that Daniel Dugger had had a vegetable stall and had given it up to somebody and taken a stall from John W. Holland on the other side.

Q. John W. Holland is a white man, and so is Dugger?—A. Yes, sir; and it was stated also that John W. Holland owned eleven stalls immediately opposite the market; nine of them he had rented out to negroes, or his agent had.

Q. Was Mr. Holland a Democrat?—A. Yes, sir; he signed this circular, and I suppose is a very strong Democrat.

Q. What do you say in regard to that statement?—A. I told Sims this and he said it in his speech. I knew the fact that these stalls were rented.

Q. You stated that to him and he repeated to the audience what you stated to him?—A. Yes, sir; and I knew that every white man had an opportunity to rent these stalls at auction. I knew they had then. There was no butcher in Danville, except upon the market in Danville, and that no one had been compelled to leave the market to take their meats elsewhere.

Q. What do you say as to that statement in the circular?—A. I say it is not true.

Q. And Mr. Sims stated the information you gave him?—A. Yes, sir; stated the information I gave him.

Q. What do you say it is now?—A. I say it is untrue. Stalls have been rented since the 1st day of January by the Democratic council, and three white men have been put off the market that were there under Readjuster rule.

Q. And colored men have taken their places?—A. Colored people have the stalls. The way it was, two butchers took two stalls apiece, and that only left two stalls, and I think at the time this circular was gotten up there were seven white butchers in the market, while at this time there are only four. There are other butchers upon the market, but they rent private stalls.

Q. From the first of January the Democrats have had control, and you say they have changed the stalls.—A. The negroes have nearly all the stalls, and very few white men. A man named Young told me he could not get a stall, and a man named Halican told me he couldn't get a stall.

Q. So that there are more negroes than there were under Readjuster rule?—A. Yes, sir; and those white men had to pay rent for those stalls that they couldn't stand up to.

Q. Are not the white men all residents there familiar with these facts?—A. It seems to me they could have been familiar with them. I was familiar with them. I traded on the market; I had a family, and got meat there.

Q. You got your meats and supplies there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether these persons who signed this circular had not the opportunity to know whether these things were true or not?—

A. I will look and see [examining circular]. Nearly all of these men are men of families and I suppose they had every opportunity to know. I would go to the market and buy my meats, and pass through there every day.

Q. They had the same opportunity to know that you had?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the next statement Mr. Sims characterized as a lie?—

A. He said, it says here, "White men have been driven out." He said the circular charged that the market was uncleanly and loathsome, &c., and that that was false. Well, I pass through the market every day, twice or three times a day sometimes, and it is as well kept and as cleanly as any market I ever saw, and I have visited the large markets in different cities. I know the clerk of the market has a large hose, and every night I see him with it after market hours, and he would always wash off the nice brick pavements and the rock-paved street. It was all kept as clean as could be.

Q. Have they running water there?—A. They have water-works.

Q. In this respect was it any better or worse than it was before, when the Democrats had control?—A. It was not certainly any inferior than the way it was kept under Democratic rule. It may have been better, I don't know.

Q. What was the next statement he denounced as a lie?—A.:

The whites of the town are powerless to prevent this outrage upon their rights. In fact, it is believed that their well-known objection to such an indignity is the principal cause of its infliction.

Q. That is, it was made indecent and filthy, &c., to disgust the whites?—A. Yes, sir; that I don't believe.

Q. Was that one of the lies?—A. Yes; he said that was one of the lies; he read it;

The council, which has the power of regulating the conduct of the market, is presided over by a carpet-bagger, J. B. Raulston, Mahone's collector of internal revenue for the Danville district, and the patronage of his Federal office enables him to control the council with the same undisputed power that the general does his party.

Q. Now, what about that?—A. I don't know what he said about that.

Q. What do you say about that?—A. I am like Judge Blackwell about that; I think, that if Raulston can, by his influence, control it—there are eight white men in the council, and some of them very independent men, and very hard to be influenced to do anything against the citizens there.

Q. If Raulston can control a great body that way, it is only an evidence of his superior skill and ability?—A. Yes; as regards his being a carpet-bagger, I don't believe that; but, I saw it stated in the Index-Appeal (a Democratic paper), that Raulston came to Petersburg eighteen years before that and lived there, voted the Democratic ticket, and was very popular there, and was in business there.

Q. What do these people mean by a carpet-bagger?—A. I think they mean, by a carpet-bagger, a man who lives in Northern State and comes down South to get an office.

Q. Don't they mean by carpet-bagger any man who does not vote the Democratic ticket?—A. Any man who goes down there I think to obtain an office from Republicans or Readjusters.

Q. Would he be called a carpet-bagger if he voted the Democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; if he had an office from the Democrats he would not be called a carpet-bagger.

Q. What is the next statement that Sims denounced?—A. Raulston married a lady in Danville, too:

Raulston is exceedingly offensive to the white people, and it is well known he takes no pains to carry out any of their wishes.

I don't know what Sims said about that.

Q. What do you say about that?—A. I never heard of it until I saw it in this circular, except in a political sense.

Q. I will ask you what acts of the common council were complained of by the Democrats of Danville; if any, do you know of any?—A. I don't think that any acts of the town council of Danville have been complained of with the exception that they appointed two negro policemen, and that they appointed a clerk of the market. They have done a great deal of good, in my opinion, by the laws they have passed there since they have been in power, and their acts have not been complained of that I know of; except the appointment of this clerk of the market and the sanitary policeman, and so on.

Q. Did politics enter into the ordinary administration of the council, do you know? Do you know of any political question which arose upon which there was a party division in the council, except as to the appointment of these two policemen?—A. I have heard it stated that Democrats voted for a part of those negroes—voted for all but one.

Q. Was it considered a gross wrong to the Democrats, that although the negroes were in the majority of the voting population of Danville, that they should have one-third of the policemen?—A. It was very repugnant to the Democratic party. Their idea, I think, was that the negro should not have any office.

Q. They turned these negroes out after they got possession of the council after this riot. Have they any negro policemen in Danville now?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then the majority is not represented on the police force at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then it was considered a very great hardship that the negroes should be represented by one-third of the policemen? Is there any other oppression or wrong committed upon the white people of Danville that they complain of?—A. No; I thought their action was very superior to the preceding Democratic council, at least the preceding Democratic council had always been elected by negroes since the war.

Q. Then the thing complained of was that the negroes were armed in any surveillance to protect live and property. Was that it?—A. I think they mean that the negro shall not hold office there. The Danville Times says it—I have seen it very often—and that is one of the representative papers there.

Q. Not even a policeman?—A. No kind of an office.

Q. Or scavenger, Is that the idea?—A. I think they were opposed to that.

Q. Or town clerk?—A. Any kind of an office.

Q. That was the grievance. Do you know of any act of Raulston's in the council that the people complained of, except the appointment of those policemen?—A. I don't know of any at all.

Q. Did you ever hear it as a matter of complaint, that Raulston controlled the negroes to the injury of the white people in Danville?—A. Well, I don't think I heard much talk about it. I think his being a revenue officer and being of course in the council, they would be apt to attribute it to him if they voted in a certain way.

Q. Was there anything done by the council that they complained of, that you know of?—A. Nothing but the appointment of these negro policemen.

Q. The white Democrats there are opposed to negroes and Federal office-holders. Is that the general subject?—A. That is my opinion.

Q. What is the next complaint in this circular that Sims arraigned?—A.:

The police court of the town is another scene of perpetual mockery and disgrace.

Q. What did Sims say to that?—A. Sims said it was untrue.

Q. How many persons compose the police court?—A. The police court was composed of the mayor of the town. The mayor of the town is a justice, and the president of the council is a justice, and acts now as a justice; had a right at that time to act.

Q. How many police justices besides?—A. There were three magistrates besides.

Q. That makes five, the mayor, president of the council, and three magistrates constitute the police court?—A. Yes, sir; and an ordinance of the town makes it the duty of the mayor to try all violations of the city laws.

Q. The municipal laws?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He denounced this statement, that this court was a "mockery and a disgrace," as a lie?—A. Yes, sir; I knew of my own personal knowledge about this police court, because I was elected myself in my ward by a large majority, and a great many of them were white men, and elected without regard to politics, and I acted as a magistrate for a good while.

Q. You were a member of this police court?—A. Yes, sir; I was a member of the police court, but I resigned before this circular came out, so that this circular did not apply to me.

Q. When did you resign?—A. I resigned some seven or eight months, may be more than that, after I was elected.

Q. Who was elected to take your place?—A. Judge Blackwell appointed one of these magistrates that is complained of.

Q. The one that he promptly removed?—A. Yes, sir; he removed him as soon as he found out he would not answer.

Q. Then he appointed another?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You served as a police magistrate, then, for how long?—A. It was very near a year, I reckon. It was some time; I don't know exactly; it was long enough to know the practice of the court there.

Q. Who were the other three justices when you were there?—A. Walter Luck and this colored man named Jones. This circular goes on to say:

There the most active justice is a young negro named Jones, who first became famous by seducing a girl under promise of marriage, and was only saved from conviction upon indictment by the evidence of his partner in a junk-shop, who swore that he had had criminal intercourse with her before Jones. This court which, before the negro régime came into power, was only open a few hours every morning, is now practically open from morning till night, and nothing but actual observation can convey the least idea of the travesty of its transactions.

Now, in regard to that, that is untrue, I am well acquainted with the court and proceedings before these magistrates were elected—before I was elected—and Mr. Mosely held open court all the time.

Q. He was your predecessor?—A. Yes, sir; under what they call Democratic rule, I reckon, but most of them were elected by negroes. That court was open. You could go there any time of the day and Mr. Mosely would try any kind of a case at any time.

Q. Don't your law require your magistrates always to be on duty at their office?—A. If they are wanted they have to issue a warrant when they are called upon. A man named D. P. Harvey, elected by the Democrats before these three magistrates were elected, held open court all the time, but this circular charges that the Readjusters held open court, and before that it was not so.

Q. You speak of Readjusters, they speak of "negro régime;" do they mean by that Readjuster?—A. I suppose they call the white Readjuster negro, because it was not under negro rule unless they do so.

Q. Was there a greater number of crimes committed while you were a justice than under the old régime?—A. No, sir; I don't believe there was.

Q. You say you did not increase the number of hours, and that there was no necessity for it?—A. No, sir; for these magistrates held open court all day, and the Readjusters did not do any more than try the cases brought before them during the day.

Q. What do you say about these allegations, then?—A. I say it is false. In regard to this negro mentioned, I stated in my deposition there that I never heard any complaint of him in trying cases. He understood the law very well, and seemed to be a very well educated negro, and wrote a very beautiful hand. I have seen him try white cases, and white men preferred to have him try them to this magistrate, Luck.

Q. There were two white magistrates and one negro?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Jones, the negro man, was an intelligent, skillful man, and a good writer?—A. Yes, sir. He wrote a first-rate hand, and, I think, he understood law very well.

Q. Did you ever hear any Democrats complain because you had one negro magistrate there out of the three?—A. Yes, sir; they complained all the time about a negro being a magistrate.

Q. On the ground that a negro ought not to be a magistrate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, their idea of justice was to have white men always?—A. They didn't believe in negroes being officers; I know that.

Q. Well, the next clause.—A. Yes, about making them pay the costs; both parties made to pay costs. That is the law there. If they are found guilty, both have to pay the cost; so that is untrue.

Q. Both parties paying the costs—don't that mean plaintiff and defendant? Can you divide the costs? It says here, "More than one party, the cost is doubled." Where they are tried jointly, there are double costs, and you can require the defendant to pay costs; is that true?—

A. No, sir; they don't make the defendant pay the costs all the time.

Q. But where the defendants are found guilty they have to pay costs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q.

Malice and partiality, whenever there is a motive, and ignorance, in its absence, are the rules of decision.

Is that so?—A. That is entirely false; I never heard of it before I saw it in this circular.

Q.

The officials of the court, justices, and policemen. co-operate in the work to make fees, and every act, or word, or deed of the citizen, whether atrocious in its character or too frivolous for the law to take notice of, is brought before a justice, and the party, if not fined, is required to pay the costs; and if there is more than one party the cost is doubled, and both parties made to pay costs.

Was that so?—A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. Where the charges were frivolous were prosecutions made merely to make costs?—A. Not that I know of. Men might have gotten out warrants when they were frivolous; the violations of the law were frivolous, but the magistrates had to try them and acquit them or convict them.

Q. But these are the charges that Sims denounced as false?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the next charge to which you wish to call our attention?—A. The next charge—

At the October court of this year two of the party magistrates were removed from office by the judge of the hustings court, one for embezzling the money of the commonwealth, the other for "causes sufficient to the court," and one of them has fled the town to avoid indictment.

That statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief. One of these magistrates though, that fall, came out in one or two articles in the paper before the election protesting that he was a Democrat.

Q. Well, hadn't he been previously a Democrat?—A. Either one or, I think, two articles.

Q. What was the name of the magistrate?—A. That was Robert E. Lee I am speaking about; Luck was a Readjuster.

Q. Luck was a Readjuster and Lee was a Democrat?—A. Judge Blackwell appointed him. I don't know what he was.

Q. You say you saw a card from Lee announcing that he was a Democrat?—A. Yes, I am pretty certain I did, one or two.

Q. There is one charge before this I wish to call your attention to—

White men are arrested for the most frivolous acts by negro policemen and borne along to the mayor's office followed by swarms of jeering and hooting and mocking negroes, and tried, fined, and lectured and imprisoned by a negro justice, and then followed to the jail by the same insulting rabble.

How was that?—A. I don't believe that is true. I don't believe that a white man would submit to it.

Q. If a white man was arrested was he not usually taken before a white man?—A. I say some of them elected to be tried by this negro. I am pretty certain that sometimes white men were carried before the negro magistrate, but they had a right to elect a white magistrate and we always granted them that privilege.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. If you issued a warrant for the arrest of a man, could he go before any other magistrate?—A. Certainly he could.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. The warrant could be returned by the constable before any arrest, then ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Handing witness a paper.) Is that the card of Lee ?
The witness read the paper as follows :

DANVILLE, VA., October 30, 1883.

To the Public :

I desire to say that notwithstanding I have been heretofore classed with the Readjuster party (which charge I do not deny) I am a white man and shall in the future act with the Democratic party in all elections, as I consider the question of Readjustment settled.

Respectfully,

R. E. LEE.

That's the card I refer to.

Q. That's after he had been removed from office by the judge ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The first Monday in October ?—A. Yes, sir ; the first Monday in October.

Q. He then joined the Democratic party ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the next charge here that Sims denounced as a lie ?—A. :

The notoriety which this state of things in our town has produced has attracted to the town large numbers of idle and filthy negroes from the border counties of North Carolina, and from Halifax, Mecklenburg, and Charlotte, Va. Although there is a law against vagrants, they are never disturbed. They infest the streets and sidewalks in squads, hover about public houses, and sleep on the door-steps of store-houses and the benches of the market place.

Well, I don't know what Sims said about that, I don't think he said anything about it.

Q. You spoke awhile ago about the colored man who was appointed clerk of the market. I will ask you whether he was not nominated by a Democratic member of the common council ?—A. I don't know the fact, but I have heard so.

Q. You don't know that except by hearsay ; what do you say that Sims said about that ?—A. I don't know what Sims said about that.

Q. What do you say about it ?—A. I don't believe that the negroes go there to become vagrants. I have not seen them, and there is a law against that ; they would be arrested by the police if it was found that they had no visible means of support ; I have seen them arrested for it.

Q. What is the next statement to which Sims called attention ?—A. About sleeping on the door steps of houses. I go about at all sorts of time of night and day, and have never seen it except occasionally in the summer time. I might happen to see one somehow.

Q. :

They impede the travel of ladies and gentlemen, very frequently forcing them from the sidewalk into the street.

Did that occur ? I will read the balance of it :

Negro women have been known to force ladies from the pavement, and remind them that they will "learn to step aside the next time." In several instances white children have been struck by grown negroes. We know of several cases where the lie has been given to a white lady to her face by a negro.

A. Well, he denounced that as a lie ; that the white people of Virginia would not submit to that state of things.

Q. Were they ever called upon to submit, that you know of, to such a state of things ?—A. Well, while I was a magistrate no one ever brought a case to my notice, and I never knew it to be brought to the notice of the corporation court or any magistrate, but I never heard of it until I saw it in this circular, and I don't believe it.

Mr. VANCE. Is it evidence of a fact, asking a witness if he believes it?

The CHAIRMAN. No; I asked him about these magistrates. He has said several times he didn't believe such and such things were true.

Mr. LAPHAM. The witness is an intelligent witness, and I want to have his knowledge. If he was a magistrate I can ask him if complaints were made.

Q. I will ask you if while you were a magistrate complaints of this kind were made before you?—A. No one ever made any, and I never heard of any before I saw this circular.

Q. Don't you know, from the general feeling in Virginia, that if a gross insult of this kind was made the negro would be killed on the spot?—A. The negro would be killed as quick as a man could draw a pistol, and most every man carries a pistol there, too.

Q. Would there have been any difficulty in punishing a man for an assault of this kind?—A. No; there is not a magistrate that would not punish him to the extent of the law. I know that this negro magistrate was much more severe to negroes than any I ever saw, much severer than I ever was.

Q. And if this thing had been brought to the attention of your associates you think you would have known it?—A. I think so.

Q.:

It is a very common practice for the negroes who are employed about our houses to allude to white ladies and gentlemen as men and women, and to negroes as ladies and gentlemen.

A. Well, I have employed negroes all the time and they don't speak to me that way, or to my wife that way. I heard negro children and negro women on the street probably allude to them as "men" and "women," or something of that sort, but they would not be talking to the parties—would say it to each other.

Q. Talking about men and women?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, those Anglo-Saxon words are not forbidden, are they? It is not an offense to call a man a man, and a woman a woman?—A. I think not. I am not the least afraid of the negro men insulting me.

Q. Here is an allegation about the murder of a respectable gentleman by three negro highwaymen, was there such an offense as that?—A. Yes, sir. There were three negroes who waylaid a white man and killed him for his money three miles, I think, from Danville. I know the place well, the very place he was killed. They were carried to Pittsylvania jail, tried and convicted, and hung very quick.

Q. Then justice was swift and prompt to punish them?—A. Yes. In fact it was all done and accomplished in less than a month.

Q. When that was done was there not a mob collected with a view to hanging them?—A. That was common report.

Q. You don't know about it?—A. No, sir; common report.

Q. It is sufficient to say that they were at once arrested and executed according to law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have not negroes always been punished for crimes more than when committed by white men?—A. I don't know of any negroes that have not been punished when it was necessary.

Q. They have been promptly punished?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you to say to the last paragraph on this page:

A few nights ago the negroes were very indignant because they heard of the earnest work that was going on by the whites, to register all of their voting strength, and called a meeting, which was addressed by an incendiary negro, named Pleasants, a postal agent, and one of the town councilmen, hired at the custom-house, and they passed a resolution requesting the governor to have Federal troops sent to our town on election day, to intimidate the white people at the polls.

Do you know of any movement made by the colored people to prevent white people from registering to vote?—A. Oh, that is all humbug—the negroes trying to keep the white people from the polls, or registering.

Q. Could that have occurred there without your knowing it?—A. Well, I belong to that party, but I didn't go to any meeting at all, and I should think I should have probably heard of it. This negro Pleasants was making an incendiary speech. I considered him always a very moderate negro. He is a very smart negro, and makes about as good a speech as most white people.

Q. Did you hear Pleasants's speech?—A. I have heard him make a speech before a Democratic meeting of which I was chairman.

Q. Was he a Democrat?—A. This was called the ward meeting, and I was struck with his speech that night, and I could repeat what he said, a portion of it.

Q. Did he make an incendiary speech?—A. No, sir; just the other way, a very moderate speech. It was the only meeting that the negroes ever attended that the white people called, that I recollect.

Q. And he made a good speech?—A. Yes, sir; and we nominated a ticket together.

Q. Now I will ask you whether the colored people are not as a rule quiet and submissive generally, much more deferential than white men usually are?—A. Certainly they are. There are bad negroes, and some of them will curse white people.

Q. Some of them will lie and cheat like others?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suppose you find some such people as that among the whites too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In respect to being peaceable and quiet, how are they compared with the whites?—A. I think as a race they are peaceable toward the white people. They quarrel among themselves a good deal. This [referring to circular] about Jacksonville, I never heard of that.

Q. There is an allegation here made that the North Carolina tobaccoists would not come to Danville because of what they call negro rule. Now, state what you know in connection with that statement.—A. Well, I have very good opportunities to know in regard to that charge. I was selling guano all through North Carolina by subagents and also in person there in Danville, and I talked with a great many farmers, and I don't believe that through the country where I was classed as a Readjuster, (I never was a Readjuster, but acted with that party; I was always in favor of paying the debt), and I asked a great many parties that live 6 miles, 10 miles, and 12 miles from Danville why they did not bring their tobacco to Danville, and they told me that Durham was paying more for the tobacco.

Q. Durham is a town in North Carolina?—A. Yes, sir; and it is not further from a good many that did not bring tobacco and to a great many it is closer than Danville. It is their own town and State, and one of these parties informed me, I could give his name (W. H. Graves, sheriff of Tazewell County), that the people in his country, that is 13 miles from Danville, were carrying tobacco to Durham because they got more for it; that it was the general impression that Danville would steal their tobacco if it was not for the little town of Durham that advanced the price.

Q. That is, they took it for what it was worth?—A. But they were prejudiced against Danville, and it would be some time before they would bring it there again, and that was the reason they would not bring it to Danville. He gave that as a reason; and I talked with a man named T. J. Taylor, from Hamilton, who stated that the reason he carried tobacco to Durham was because he could get a better price. He would send me checks from farmers, and he never said anything about negro Coalition rule, or Readjuster, or anything of that sort. And W. T. Brown, who lived in Alamance County. His people used to bring a great deal of tobacco to Danville; and I received a good many letters from him saying he was getting good prices in Durham. It was my opinion that there was very little tobacco brought to Danville from Alamance County, and I believed the cause of it was it was a very sorry crop, that was destroyed almost entirely by the frost, and they went to Durham because they got more for it, and I am satisfied they did get more for it. But Danville that year, by the published report of the Tobacco Association which I saw in the paper, if I am not mighty mistaken, stated that Danville had sold 5,000,000 pounds more tobacco that year than it ever had.

Q. That the business of Danville was largely increased. You believe that the reason you give was why some of the North Carolina people would not bring their tobacco to Danville?—A. I do. The farmers—I never heard any of them say anything about negro policemen or negro rule.

Q. I will ask you whether there was any feeling among the Coalition voters, or any portion of them, as to their safety in voting at the last election, as far as you could learn.—A. I was appointed a judge of election after that riot and I declined to act. I knew something then of the feelings of the whites, what they told me, and I knew my own feelings about it.

Q. Well, did you decline?—A. Yes, sir; I told Judge Blackwell the evening before that he had better appoint somebody in my place.

Q. State your reasons for not acting as a judge.—A. One of the reasons was that I saw by the Danville papers and by the Richmond papers that the bitterness and excitement was so great against any white man who belonged to that party that it would not suit me to act. I might get in a difficulty and kill or be killed, and on November 5, the eve of the election, I read a piece in the Danville Register, a communication, I think it was, in which it went on to say, among other things, that if any disturbance occurred at the polls that day, or something of that sort—I cannot recollect the exact words; I suppose the paper can be had—if any disturbance occurred on that day, they hoped that no innocent man would suffer, but that the blood of the leaders should be shed—something of that sort.

Q. And you were looked upon as somewhat of a leader?—A. I was looked upon as somewhat of a leader. I don't know why. I never wanted any office and don't want any. I resigned the one I had, but they said there that I was the only man that ever did resign.

Q. You resigned as a magistrate; you had your own business to attend to?—A. Yes, sir; and I didn't want to act as a magistrate.

Q. As I understand you, you felt if you were there a difficulty would occur and you would be in it?—A. I had a personal difficulty.

Q. I wish you would state any violence committed on you or threatened to you at any time previously on account of politics or your connection with politics.—A. All I have done in regard to politics was I would discuss the issues of political questions with different parties, but I soon found out that would not do; I would not get mad with anybody ; I had no feeling in regard to it at all, but I was liable to get into difficulty about it, and I had finally to stop ; so when—I think it was before the Readjuster party came out—I took a stand with a party of men who called themselves “ward men” in the town of Danville, and we met and nominated a ticket, and on that ticket we put all Democrats, except three negroes, and these three negroes came to that meeting ; we invited them, and this William H. Pleasants, who is spoken of in the circular as making an incendiary speech, rose and made a speech, and said he was glad the people had come together for once ; he assured the people that he recognized the fact that they owned the property, that they had the most intelligence and most interest in the community, and he assured them that the colored people did not want to rule that town, that the laws recognized their equality, and that they only asked to have a small representation upon the council. I was made chairman of that meeting ; there were a good many white people there ; I think probably more than half, and I appointed a committee ; they went out and made nominations, and the Democrats, some who were not ward men, were put upon that ticket and the balance were ward men, but all Democrats ; there was no division then ; there was no Readjuster party then in existence that I know of ; it had not extended there, and I recollect one of the signers of that circular was a Democrat and was put upon that ticket and was elected, and this negro told us on behalf of his party that if we would give them three members of the council they would give us the other nine ; they would give us every other officer in the town, mayor, commonwealth attorney, clerk of the court, and collector, and everything else.

Q. But they wanted three members of the council ?—A. Yes, sir ; and I thought that was very fair of them. I thought they ought to have representation, and I was willing to do all that that meeting agreed to do.

Mr. VANCE. I am just as willing to spend the time this way as any other, but I cannot see what that has to do with this investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. I only want to show the state of hostile feeling.

Mr. VANCE. It seems like he is describing a love feast.

A. Well, this ticket was put in the field, and we carried the ticket, with the exception of those three colored men, I think, and I went to the polls and voted for those three colored men because I knew it was my duty ; that I had made a promise, but some white men must have gone back upon it. As soon as I got back from the polls from voting I was grossly insulted by a prominent Democrat, who lives on the same street I do, and his brother-in-law drew to strike me at the same time that he did, but I got rather the best of them. They made nothing out of it. I was prepared for them and they made nothing out of that.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. That was an evidence of prejudice against the colored people ?—A. Yes ; they denounced me for voting for these negroes.

Q. How long ago was that ?—A. That was, I reckon, four years ago.

Q. I will ask you whether immediately preceding the recent election there was any bitterness or personal feeling among Democrats of Danville and vicinity against the members of the Coalition party ?—A. I was standing in front of my store door one Saturday night talking to a member of the police force——

A. When was this ?—A. That was just before this election, and this policeman that I am talking about, had been a Readjuster, and told me so, but he came out in the paper saying that he was a white man and a Democrat.

Q. Was that this same Lee?—A. No, sir; a policeman; he was talking to me about it and I was asking him about it; if he did come out in the paper; if it was him. A man named F. B. Gravely, who was a next door neighbor of mine, came right by at the time; he could not hear; I know he did not hear a word we said. He remarked to me, he says, "That gentleman's position is the true one." I says, "Yes, it is." He says, "Any man that votes the Readjuster ticket I have no respect for him; any man that votes the Readjuster ticket is a dog." I remarked to him then that he was a past master Mason and I could not strike him. He said, "You are a dog" and struck at me; he struck at me and I resented it.

Q. You had blows, had you?—A. Yes, sir; he struck at me and I knocked him down two or three times, and the police kept him from being hurt.

Q. I asked you generally, without going into particulars, whether there was a state of great excitement and bitterness among the Democrats against Coalition leaders?—A. I never had an idea that it ever could get to that pitch; that was the worst I ever saw in any civilized country.

Q. Did that feeling extend to breaking off personal relations, social and friendly ties?—A. At one time just before the election I was just a private in the ranks, I just took this position from principle I wanted no office. I could live without doing anything and I saw that they were so terrible bitter that I was afraid that I would have to move away from there, and my wife begged me ever since to do it; that was just before the election and immediately afterwards; I thought at one time that there was a great many people that quit speaking to me, but since that time I don't notice now but few that don't speak.

Q. Did you attend a meeting at the opera-house that day, 3d of November? Where were you on the 3d of November?—A. Yes, sir, I attended three or four Democratic meetings.

Q. Where were you on the 3d of November?—A. I was about 50 miles from Danville, on the road. Sycamore station. I came back that night at 8 o'clock.

Q. You say you did attend some Democratic meetings during that canvass?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the condition of affairs in Danville when you arrived on the night of the 3d of November at 8 o'clock?—A. I had heard of this riot at Pittsylvania Court-House, and when I got to Danville I knew there was danger to myself, but I never did stand back for danger. I went to a barber shop, got shaved, and thought it would be said that we were shirking or skulking, and so I went all over town almost and saw the infantry troops, or men armed, and saw them with horses and guns, &c., and I went down towards the depot where a good many colored people rented from me, to see what the state of affairs was down there. It occurred to me that that was the most foolish thing that I ever saw people do in my life, a crowd to patrol that town, when I was satisfied that these negroes were the worst broken up, they were the worst demoralized, broken up, completely crushed; that they had no more idea of raising their arms to do anything against white people—

Q. The white people that had done all the firing were the persons who were armed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you been subjected to any insults or assaults since that time that you attribute to your political action?—A. I had several; just before that they were right bitter against me, but they were right particular about insulting me.

Q. Have they ever shot at you, or insulted you in any way?—A. Oh, yes; I pay very little attention to it. I was shot at. I was building a fish pond at Danville, and on my way back down I rode with a colored man who was working on the house (they are building a house there), and we separated, and I came on one way to town and he the other way, and before we were separated more than a hundred yards, I believe, I passed a man walking rapidly within about ten or fifteen steps of me. He says, "How are you," or something of that sort, and I did not say anything. Just as I had gone about ten steps I heard a shot. Well, I do not know whether he shot at me or not. I never could hear a pistol ball pass anyhow; I am a little deaf; but that sort of made me feel in danger, and I walked rapidly. I thought he may shoot at me. I knew how times were, and I met right opposite Peter Gould's house a white man there, and I got within about 50 feet of his back door, and I heard somebody say, "Oh, God damn you," and I turned to look and saw this man take aim at me and fire. I drew a pistol then and ran after him, and he run. He was on top of a hill, and as he fired he ran.

Q. When was this?—A. I don't recollect the date, but it has been since that election. There were two colored boys who were standing right close by that saw it, and I asked one of them what their names were, and he said Ben and Ned——

Mr. VANCE. Well, never mind.

WITNESS. Jackson.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you ever heard any person at Danville or thereabouts talk about or say they wished every negro and Readjuster in town had been killed?—A. Yes, sir; I heard a man say that one day.

Q. When was that?—A. It was, I think, one or two days after the election.

Q. Was that mere vamping, or was it aimed at you to insult you, or what was the purpose?—A. No, I do not think this man had any intention of insulting me, because he knew better; but that's a small matter. I hear any time such expressions as that from people. I was on the train a few days ago with a gentleman from Danville, and was talking about Sims, and he said that he was the cause of this difficulty, and ought to have been mobbed. He was a deacon in the church there, and I told him I did not believe in mob law, and he immediately says: "He ought to have been murdered; he ought to have been killed." That is what he said.

Q. I forgot to ask you one question about the Sims matter that I overlooked.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Let's have that man's name?—A. Stephen E. Adams.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How did Sims speak of the signers of this paper, that they had signed a false statement, or were individually liars? How did he speak of them?—A. He said that they were "damn scoundrels and damn liars."

Q. Those who signed this paper?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose this man, Stephen E. Adams, might be brought here to prove this; and if the Senator wants to know what else he said I would say it but I dislike to. He said in regard to other gentlemen being killed——

Mr. VANCE. I did not ask you anything about him at all, I just asked his name.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Sims said that these men were liars, &c., because they signed this paper, but did he say anything about them except because they signed this paper?—A. He said a number of Democrats, reading each section—he said they were damn liars and damn scoundrels, and called them by name.

Q. Called them by name?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think they were falsehoods?—A. Well, I said in my deposition that they were not true. I do not think these men knew that they were not true, because there are men on there that I have liked all my life. I considered it a political document. I do not think they would say on oath that it was true.

Q. You believe they regarded it as a political canard with a view to frighten the white voters in Western Virginia?—A. Yes, sir; some of them never read it when they signed it.

Q. Did you ever see the resolutions adopted by the Democratic meeting on the 3d of November?

Mr. VANCE. I have a copy of those resolutions, if you wish.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I would like to have them put in evidence; you may as well do it now.

Q. This speech of Sims's was, you say, violent. He denounced these men as scoundrels and liars. Was it any more violent than Democratic speeches? You say you heard Democratic speeches made that year?—A. A good many violent speeches made by Democrats, but I never heard them single out anybody by name and call them damn liars.

Q. In that respect it was different?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the usual mode of speaking of Coalitionists and negroes? Did they class them with negroes?—A. Yes, sir; they seemed to think they were in favor of miscegenation, and putting negroes in office all over the State, and I know they had no such idea.

Q. In other words, they made the race issue wherever they could, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. I will ask you only a few questions. You heard Mr. Sims in his speech take these men, man by man, and denounce them as liars and scoundrels?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With a prefix which you need not repeat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know most of these men [handing witness the circular]?—A. (After examining the circular.) Yes, I believe I know all of them.

Q. Do you recognize any of them as being entitled to that appellation?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Well, when Mr. Sims affirmed that of them he did not affirm the truth, did he?—A. No, sir; I said at the time that he ought not to have called them damn scoundrels.

Q. A good many of them are old men, are they not?—A. Yes, sir; very nice gentlemen I always considered them.

Q. Good citizens; good business men?—A. Good citizens; good business men, all of them.

Q. Well, times were pretty hot, and I reckon both sides exceeded what they thought proper when they got through.—A. No, sir; I do not think—I have an idea that the Democrats were about ten times as bitter as the Republicans or Readjusters ever had been.

Q. I did not ask you which was the bitterest, but I asked you if both sides did not exceed what was right after reflecting over it?—A. Sims was the only man that I knew that over stepped the bounds, the others were moderate. I had nothing against any man on account of politics, and have not now.

Q. Well, I will not go over this circular with you. You made one statement I want to ask you about. You thought that the Coalition rule—the laws and regulations of the Coalitionists when they had control of the city, was superior to that of the Democrats previously?—A. Yes; I thought they did a little better than the Democrats did.

Q. Well, the test of the excellency of the rule of a party within the corporate limits of a State or county is the result isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever know of this rioting or bloodshed while the Democrats were in power?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had nothing of that sort?—A. We did have. Well, the town has been governed, you may say, by the negro vote, even since the war, but they elected Democrats.

Q. Well, they elected Democratic agents to control the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suppose you mean that the colored people have had a majority all the time?—A. Yes, sir; had the majority all the time.

Q. On the day of election did you go to the polls?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You did not vote?—A. No, sir; I did not vote.

Q. Well, I presume you did not vote because you were afraid to go to the polls?—A. I was not afraid, but I knew there was extreme danger.

Q. Well, you did not shrink from that danger?—A. I never shrink from danger. No, sir.

Q. What influenced you not to vote?—A. Well, these pieces I saw in the paper; what I had seen in different papers in regard to it, and these difficulties and bitterness: and I knew it was very easy for me to get into a difficulty, and I never did take an insult without resenting it, and people had begged—near friends of mine, my wife, begged—me not to vote, and another thing influenced me was this, that I knew a great many colored people who were away and could not vote that day; they had left town. I knew of instances, and heard of a good many others, and I talked with the colored people and did not advise any of them not to vote. I soon found out that they were afraid to vote, and I thought it was best not to have anything to do with it. If I had thought that my vote would do any good I would not have regarded danger; I would have gone and voted if I had been killed.

Q. I will ask you if you did not hear some of your party leaders—if it was not discussed, was not understood, that by refraining from voting at all the election in that county could be set aside?—A. We had a meeting at Danville—the Coalition judges did—but there was no combination of action at all in regard to it. There was one Republican judge who did not give any reason; he said at once that he could not act. There was another judge who is postmaster there; he said he could not act—never gave any reason. Well, this Republican never gave any reason, but the postmaster—I think his reason was that he could not leave his wife; I think that was the reason, although I am not certain. His wife was sick and he could not leave her.

Q. Now, was the policy of refraining from voting, and having the election of that county thrown out, discussed among you?—A. It might have been, but that is a point I do not recollect. I know that that did not cause all the judges not to act.

Q. That did not decide your conduct?—A. No, sir; because—

Q. But you think it might have been discussed?—A. I think all of them had decided before they met.

Q. Were not the preparations made to preserve the peace on the day of election sufficient to reassure all that wanted to vote?—A. I saw all those papers, but did not regard it as reassuring, because the men who had been charged with being in the riot were upon the police.

Q. But there was a military company from Richmond, was there not, sent by the governor?—A. Well, that did not reassure them, because it was generally understood that they were all Democrats. The only things that would reassure them were the blue jackets, some call them United States troops.

Q. Do you mean to say you had no confidence in the law-abiding character of any man there?—A. No, sir, I do not; I would not say that.

Q. Don't you think there were Democrats there, in both companies, that would have done their duty fully and kept the peace?—A. They might have, I think, kept the peace, but might not have kept some from being killed.

Q. Well, you could not kill a man without committing a breach of the peace, could you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it not understood that a good many of the Richmond soldiers were Coalition men?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Don't you know that, knowing their votes had to be lost, that before they left Richmond they selected an equal number of each party, so that the loss would be equal on each side?—A. I think they selected boys that could not vote; I noticed that the company seemed to be pretty nearly all boys except the officers.

Q. You spoke of being chairman of a Democratic meeting on one occasion, the first time you heard Pleasants make a speech.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were at one time a Democrat, then?—A. A Democrat all the time.

Q. Do you profess to be one yet?—A. I do not profess to be one now since the riot. I was a Democrat up to the riot and told everybody that I intended to vote for Colonel Cabell, but it didn't do any good because I did not go with them against the Readjusters.

Q. What party do you profess to belong to now?—A. Well, I have not exactly decided. I will await events.

Q. What particular events are you looking out for?—A. Well, I am awaiting the investigation and whether the Democrats will go for free trade or for protection. I am for protection.

Q. Well, I reckon all the people about the time of the riot wanted protection, didn't they?—A. I suppose so; I did not care anything about it.

Q. You said one time, rather broadly, as I thought, that everybody in Danville was armed, and you added almost———A. Almost everybody I see is armed.

Q. Were you armed for one?—A. Yes, sir; I have been shot there in Danville in my store, my arm broke, and I have been shot at since, and I was attacked on the street.

Q. The man who shot you in the store; was he a Democrat?—A. That was not about politics. I accused him of certain things.

Q. And he shot at you?—A. Yes, sir; and I went for him with a bowie knife.

Q. Does that statement that everybody was armed, almost, include any of the colored people?—A. I have seen colored people armed since the riot; I think there was a good many colored people armed since the riot. A colored man came to my house with a pistol right out where everybody could see. I have seen numbers of them since that, but never saw it before the riot.

Q. Do you know that any were armed before the riot?—A. I never saw it.

Q. When you stated almost everybody was armed, did you mean that to apply before or after the riot?—A. I meant that almost every white man was armed; I did not know about the negroes. The negroes may have been armed, but I did not see it to that extent, but I saw a great many pistols about.

Q. What was the name of the colored man who came to you the other day with a pistol displayed?—A. Well, that might be used against him there. It was not concealed though. It was a negro named Sim Brandon.

Q. You have mentioned a good many white men here.—A. I haven't mentioned any names.

Q. What was the definition you gave Senator Sherman of a carpet-bagger?—A. I have always understood that a carpet-bagger was a man that came from the North to the South and went into politics on the Republican side, and expected or desired an office, and did not come to go to work and go into business.

Q. Did come as a bona fide citizen?—A. Yes, sir; or did not come as a bona fide citizen.

Q. Well, that is a very good definition. That term of reproach is not applied as a general thing to people who come down and buy property and settle in the South, is it?—A. I think when persons oppose the Democratic party they are bitter against them anyway.

Q. Don't care where he comes from, or what he comes for, or what amount of capital he brings with him, nor where he settles?—A. I have had relations in New York. One of them wanted to come down there to be a physician. I told him if he would come as a Democrat he could get along first rate, but could not say if he came down as a Republican and took part in politics.

Q. When there were so few offices, not enough to go around, do you blame the Democrats for not wanting anybody to come in?—A. I am for the Union. I am for peace and harmony and everybody carrying out the Constitution, and all its amendments. I am for every man having representation in the Government.

Q. I will ask you in all seriousness if you do not know many Republicans who are doing business, and voting, and exercising their principles freely, and who are welcome among our people?—A. I speak of Danville, and I do not think a man in Danville voting the Republican ticket is thought a great deal of.

Q. Do you know Mr. James Wood?—A. Yes, sir; I know him pretty well.

Q. Is he a Republican?—A. I could not call him a Republican.

Q. What should you call him?—A. I should think he was a Democrat now.

Q. How long since he was a Democrat? Wasn't he a Republican when he first came there?—A. Yes, sir; he was a Republican a long time, attended negro meetings, and was very much censured for it, and he is the most consistent Republican we ever had, and is one of the best men.

Q. How is he esteemed by the Democrats?—A. He is more thought of than any man that ever has settled there, but it is because he was such an excellent man and he is a Virginian, and he was a Republican up to a few years ago.

Q. Well, if he was a native Virginian, that is not the class of men I am asking about?—A. Yes, he is a native Virginian. He was nominated for an office by the Democrats there.

Q. You say the colored people generally are very peaceable except among themselves; they quarrel among themselves?—A. Yes, sir; they fight a good deal among themselves.

Q. But they don't often have rows with the white people?—A. No negro was ever brought before me for fighting a white man; it very seldom occurred.

Q. You say Mr. Sims denounced that portion of the circular which alleged that ladies had been pushed off the street, and white children struck, and ladies called liars, by grown negro women, &c.; that he denounced that as a lie?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Although the circular professes to give instances which he did not see, he pronounced it a lie on general principles?—A. Yes, and I never heard of but one instance, and that was a man named Comb said a colored woman pushed his wife off the street; that is the only instance I ever heard of.

Q. You stood by and heard Mr. Sims's speech that night; I will ask you if it was not well calculated to inflame the white people of the city?—A. Well these parties that signed the circular I thought that some of them would attack him.

Q. Would it not inflame all their friends and relations?—A. I don't see why it should.

Q. You don't see why it should? Well, I did not expect that answer from a man of courage like I take you to be.—A. I will explain to you. Sims said he held himself personally responsible, and all he asked was that they should not shoot him in the back.

Q. That was an invitation to fight, was it not?—A. He knew that he had insulted them.

Q. And then the insulting intimation that they were capable of shooting him in the back, that made it still worse, didn't it?—A. I say their friends and relatives should not be insulted by this. They were well known in Danville; they were very wealthy men, and their character was above reproach. As to telling or swearing to a lie, it was impossible, and that is why I don't think their friends ought to have been inflamed by it, because I don't believe that Capt. W. T. Clark would tell a lie, and I don't think these parties on that circular would.

Q. You think from the very falsity of the statement it ought not to have inflamed anybody?—A. That is my idea exactly.

Q. Would not it be calculated to inflame them?—A. I read it and thought these business men had signed it without knowing what was in it.

Q. If you had the speech to make you would have made that apology for them?—A. I would have said that the report was a lie from beginning to end, but these people must not have read it, could not have known what was in it; that they signed it without knowing it.

Q. How long have you lived in Danville?—A. thirty years.

Q. Have you ever since colored people were given the right of suffrage known any violence or illegal means by the Democrats to prevent them from voting their sentiments up to this time?—A. I have never known any illegal means, I don't think.

Q. Have not known any?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, that would include violence?—A. Yes, I have not known violence.

Q. In voting didn't they all go up, whites and blacks, every way; any way they could get up to the polls?—A. The whites went up one side of the steps at the place where I voted, at the court-house; the whites went up one side in at the common door; first one goes in and then the other. Sometimes, though, one party will take possession of the polls to the exclusion of the other by crowding. I have known one time when two hundred negroes could not vote, but it was done by not having enough precincts; that was before this division was brought about.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I will ask you if Sims denounced them for that particular act as liars and scoundrels; that they had signed what was false?—A. Only as to that act.

Q. As to that particular act; that they were liars and scoundrels; that they made a false accusation?—A. He knew they were good business men, and knew they were highly thought of in the community.

Q. Do you think his purpose was to single these men out and say they were liars? That they would lie in their business matters?—A. I do not think he meant that.

Q. He simply meant that they were liars and scoundrels so far as this political document was concerned?—A. This political document.

Q. I supposed that was it. I don't want to add either to the offense of Sims or these men, that he would not denounce a class of men as liars because they signed a political document. That is the way you understood it?—A. Yes, sir; the balance of them would pay no attention to it, knowing their character was beyond reproach, and no one would think anything of it and they would not attack him, but I thought probably two or three on there might attack him.

Q. I will ask you whether Sims at that time gave any incendiary advice to the colored people to do any act of violence?—A. No; he asked them, "Do you want to fight the white men," and every negro hollered out "No, no, no," and he advised them to go to the polls, and vote the whole ticket; he wanted to bring out the whole ticket.

Q. But he gave them no advice to resist?—A. No.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. He did not make any explanation of that sort, though; that he only referred to this individual transaction?—A. No; he did not make that explanation; that he referred to it.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25, 1884.

The CHAIRMAN. Before examining any witnesses I wish to call attention to a paragraph I saw published in The State, a paper published in Richmond, Va., in which, speaking about the colored people, the following remark is made:

These congregate about the committee-room door daily, but Mr. Sherman is stringent in his orders to let no negroes in who cannot show a summons.

I wish simply to say what is well known to all of us, that no such discrimination has been made. We have admitted all witnesses without respect to color or condition, and as many more people coming first as would fill the sitting capacity of the room. The only orders, and they were made by the committee without dissent, were that we would not allow a greater number of outsiders here than the room would comfortably hold. We have made no discrimination on account of color against any one.

Mr. VANCE. That has been my understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish to say that in justice to the committee.

Mr. VANCE. The room has been too full to be comfortable to me all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The only purpose is, not to exclude any one, but simply to make it bearable to go on with the testimony.

Hon. J. S. WISE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Were you a candidate at the recent election?—Answer. Not at the recent election, but I was a State canvasser.

Q. For what party?—A. The Readjuster party.

Q. I wish you would state the political issues between the two parties, as you understood them, from your stand-point, in the recent campaign.—A. In order to understand the issues of the recent campaign it will be necessary for me to devote a very brief space to the two preceding campaigns.

In 1881 the canvass occurred between Cameron, the Readjuster nominee, and Daniel. The proper issues of that campaign were upon the State debt question principally; upon the administration of State affairs by the party then in power at that time, called the Conservative party; upon the condition of the eleemosynary institutions of the State; and upon the subject of education. I am not going into the details of these controversies, but I assert herethat, even in that canvass, the Conservative party—which we designated as the Funder party, and frequently as the Bourbon party; the three terms are synonymous—I assert that the party continually and unremittingly sought to make the race issue an immediate issue of the canvass. It was contended that we were the negro party; we were referred to as a combination of poor white trash and the negroes, and that was the most familiar and apparently the most grateful description of us to the average Bourbon speaker. The canvass, even then, was carried on in a temper of violent assault upon every man who did not belong to the Bourbon party. Not only the public character, but the private character of every individual in our party was completely at the mercy, apparently, of its assailants. In 1881, in the canvass in which Cameron ran against Daniel, the effort was made to make this race issue. I think that probably the best way to illustrate that will be to file some exhibits. The committee will readily see that our party could never afford to make the race issue. The census of Virginia shows that there were 206,000 white voters and 128,000 blacks, and the man who would endeavor to make an issue between the races and expect to win on the black side would be an idiot. So, if we had no better motive than success, we would have been fools to have inaugurated a race issue; and therefore, on the one hand, we eternally and continually protested that there was no issue of race, while, on the other hand, the Bourbon party insisted upon it. As an illustration of the way they insisted, I file now with my testimony a cut from the Richmond State, published June 6, 1881.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Chairman, I suppose you are aware how wide this opens the door of the investigation?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but it seems to me that, while it might be carried to some length, a statement on both sides of what they claim to be their respective issues would be desirable. As a matter of course, you can follow it with yours. It seems to me it is proper to give the state of feeling and subsequent contest of the parties, and I called Mr. Wise as the representative man of one party, and he can file his exhibits.

The WITNESS. I now file, as an illustration of the assiduous efforts of the Bourbons to make this a race issue, a cut from the Richmond State of June 6, 1881.

THE LATE CONVENTION OF WHITEWASH.

Just hold still, my man! A few more applications of this lovely whitewash, and the last remaining point of difference between us will be entirely removed.—Whig.

General Mahone may be said to have introduced the cause of the Readjuster party of Virginia into national politics, and in so doing he has openly allied himself with the Republicans of the North.—New York Times, June 4th.

The ticket is evidently made up with a view of securing Republican support.—New York Tribune.

I also file as a proof of that fact a circular which I picked up in the county of Carroll, which is a white county. You will see by the census that Carroll County has a very large white population, and that it has but 63 negro voters in it. The white population of Carroll County, according to the census, is 2,521 white voters and 63 black voters. Here is the method of the Democratic or Bourbon campaign in 1881. Here is a circular which I picked up there which was distributed by them even then.

PAUSE, VIRGINIAN!

READ BEFORE YOU VOTE.

Remember, if you vote the Cameron ticket this day—

1. You vote yourself and your State a repudiator.
2. You vote for mixed schools now and mixed marriages in the future.
3. You take the African side in Cameron's war on your own race.
4. You vote that maimed Confederate soldiers must be kicked out of office to make room for negroes.
5. You vote to perpetuate strife in Virginia.
6. You indorse Mahone's treason to the National Democracy last year, and to Virginia this year.
7. You endorse his destruction of more than six and a third millions of Virginia property.
8. You vote for Conkling and Dawes, who persecute Virginia against Bayard, who loves her, and Hampton, who fought for her.
9. You turn your back on the National Democracy and embrace your enemies.
10. You belie your vote of last November.
11. You indorse the infamous political record of John F. Lewis.
12. You vote against three as gallant Virginians as live.

If you vote the Daniel ticket this day—

1. You vote to end the debt question honorably, without adding a cent to your taxes.
2. You vote for peace between the races; but, if Cameron's war comes, you stand by your blood.
3. You vote against wearing Mahone's or any man's collar.
4. You vote to stand by your friends and against your enemies.
5. You vote on the side of every Democrat in the Union, in office or out of office.
6. You vote for separate schools and for the purity of your homes.
7. You vote against turning Virginia over to a repudiating Republican party.
8. You vote that maimed Confederates have still some rights in Virginia.
9. You vote to keep the judiciary out of politics.
10. You repudiate John F. Lewis and all who support him.
11. You stand by your principles for twelve years past, and by your year for Hancock.
12. You vote for three gallant Confederate soldiers and upright

I want that filed as an evidence that the Bourbon party as early as 1881 began this race issue.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Do you know of any authority that issued that circular? I don't think a mere anonymous circular ought to be put in evidence.—A. I know that it was distributed by Democratic authority throughout that county.

The CHAIRMAN (to witness). You had better when you introduce these papers as evidence of the opinion of the Democratic party state whether the papers are the recognized organs of the party.

The WITNESS. The State is a recognized organ of the Bourbon party, and that circular speaks for itself. It was distributed in the county. I am not sufficiently in their secrets to know who put it there.

I now desire to file as an evidence of what I say an extract from a speech of John W. Johnston, a Senator of the United States, delivered at Newbern, Va., September 5, 1881, in which he speaks of Mr. Cameron. Governor Cameron had used a sententious expression in regard to the charge that they were going to carry the war into Africa upon the debt question. He said, "They say they will carry the war into Africa; I propose in this canvass to carry Africa into the war." It always seemed to be a fixed purpose of the Bourbon party to endeavor to fix the race issue upon us. Governor Cameron repudiated indignantly any such idea, but the newspapers insisted that that should be the issue. This is an extract from Mr. Johnston's speech, in which he said—

Mr. VANCE. I desire to enter my protest against this whole examination. I think it is out of all character as matter of investigation. Mr. Wise is proceeding in his speech in favor of his party, which I would like to hear at the proper place, but I don't think it is proper for an investigating committee concerning the matter at Danville.

Mr. LAPHAM. If this is designed to illustrate the condition of things last fall it seems to me it is proper.

The WITNESS. I propose to show that this Danville emeute was the immediate result of a long-continued effort of the Bourbon party to inflame the whites against the blacks, because they had despaired of meeting our party upon any other issue, and to do it by documentary evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me that is proper.

The WITNESS. I file this extract from Senator Johnston's speech at Newbern:

When Mr. Cameron talks about carrying Africa into the war, does he wish or intend it to be understood that these things are to be changed, and he will try to have it done? That he wants to see a tender little Anglo-Saxon girl flanked on her bench at school on either side, by "African" youths? That a white woman shall be led to the marriage altar by a dusky groom? And that, finally, he wants the colored race to rule and dominate in Virginia and put their feet on the necks of the white man?

If he don't mean these things, he means nothing, and his declaration is a senseless and foolish threat.

Now, I also file, to show that our party repudiated any such purpose and intention, an extract from the speech of Senator John F. Lewis to the people of Virginia, our candidate for lieutenant-governor:

My fellow-citizens, I warn you to beware of these Funders, whose only hope lies in their ability to hoodwink you by introducing into this canvass side issues. They will talk to you about the danger of "NEGRO RULE," and when they do so ask them how such a thing is possible in Virginia when THE WHITE VOTERS ARE IN A MAJORITY OF OVER FIFTY THOUSAND, and have nearly all the property and all the advantages of a superior education. To admit the danger of "negro rule" under such circumstances is a palpable admission of the inferiority of the white race.

But I say, to the credit of the colored people, that their every action shows their determination not to make a race issue, as is particularly evidenced by the action of the Petersburg convention.

I also ask leave to file the editorial of the Norfolk Landmark upon this subject of the race issue.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What kind of a paper is that?—A. It is a leading Bourbon journal.

THE ISSUE STATED.

[Norfolk Landmark.]

Colonel Cameron has a fine talent for phrase-making, and we doubt if any man in his party could have stated the real issue in this campaign in fewer words than he employed, when he said "I do not intend to carry the war into Africa, but Africa into the war."

Under this neat, epigrammatical phrase there lies a meaning the repulsiveness of which no glitter of words can abate or modify, for it means just this, Colonel Cameron and his party intend to lead the negroes, ignorant and unfit for self-government, in a "war" against the white debt-paying Democrats specially, and against all debt-payers in general.

Under this fine and compact expression we find "war" of the illiterate, non-tax-paying element of our population against the "white folks" proclaimed without reserve; and it is because of this that the negroes and people of color are anxious to follow just such a leader as now presents himself.

Seeing this, we ask the white Readjusters, the bone and sinew of the party, the men who are sincere in their convictions, and who do not hunt after office, we ask them what they are going to do and where they are going to march when Colonel Cameron "leads Africa into the war?" Will they stand shoulder to shoulder?

Now, I will not detain the committee with any further illustration of the issues sought to be raised in the campaign of 1881, but suffice it to say that the result of the election was that Mr. Cameron was elected by 13,000 majority nearly; not only elected, but elected by an immense white vote. I will illustrate the vote he received by the tables from the ninth Congressional district of Virginia. In that district the whole voting population was 28,385 whites and 4,391 blacks. In other words, out of 32,700 votes there was a white majority of 24,000. When the vote was announced from that district Cameron received 14,447 votes and Daniel received 7,478, Cameron's majority in the district being much larger than the whole black voting population of the district. Thus matters stood when Governor Cameron was elected. What his views were upon the subject of the blacks may be seen by his message to the general assembly. I think it is unnecessary to file it, but suffice it to say that he repudiated and scouted the idea of mixed schools. Then came the canvass for Congressman-at-Large. The election took place between Massey and myself, and again it was demonstrated that the Readjusters polled a large vote in the white districts of the State. In the election between Daniel and Cameron, Cameron had carried forty out of sixty of the old Democratic counties of the State, as appears by the following table. Of the ten counties which gave the ten leading old Democratic majorities eight had gone for Cameron and but two had gone for Daniel, and those were the only two counties of the ten that had a negro majority. On the other hand, out of the ten counties which had given John W. Daniel the ten largest majorities seven were old Know-Nothing counties; and it so happened that the four counties of Virginia which had given John W. Daniel his four largest majorities were the four counties of Virginia which in the election between Henry A. Wise and Flournoy had given the four largest Know-Nothing majorities.

Of the ten counties and cities giving the highest Democratic majorities in 1855 eight went for Cameron and two for Daniel, as follows:

		Majorities.
		Wise.	Cameron.	Daniel.
1	Rockingham.....	2,090	496
2	Shenandoah.....	1,846	389

And it shows that of the ten counties and cities giving the highest Know-Nothing majorities in 1855 seven went for Daniel and three for Cameron, as follows:

		Majorities.
		Flournoy.	Daniel.	Cameron.
1	Loudoun.....	1,325	898

And it further shows that of the ten counties giving Cameron the highest majorities eight out of ten gave Democratic majorities in 1855, as follows:

		Majorities.
		Cameron.	Wise.	Flournoy.
1	Mecklenburg	1,561	394

* The voting population of Dickenson is included in those of Wise and Buchanan, from which it was formed since census.

On a vote of 33,000 I got 18,997 votes to John E. Massey's 14,168. I called his attention, as I now do yours, to the fact that the foregoing twenty-four counties constitute one-fourth in number and considerably more than one-fourth in area of the State of Virginia; that one-fourth the white voting population reside within their limits, while only about one-seventeenth of the blacks reside therein; that the white vote therein is over seven times as great as the black, and that in a vote of 33,000 my majority over you is 5,000, and that my vote in those counties is about one-fifth my entire vote, and that these counties embrace five of the twelve counties in Virginia.

Now, we come, without dwelling longer on that, to the last campaign. I assert here under oath that time and time again representative Bourbons had stated in my presence that until they could draw the color line their party had no hope of defeating ours. I assert here, moreover, and file the evidence of a purpose to draw the color line. I will take, in the first place, an extract from the conservative address of 1881, in which it says, after discussing other issues:

Higher, in our judgment, than any other issue that can be presented to our people is the preservation of their civilization and the maintenance of white supremacy in their government.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Who are you quoting from?—A. I am quoting from the conservative address signed by A. Koiner, chairman, and countersigned by J. Bell Bigger, secretary. I then quote from the Richmond Dispatch of February 8, 1881:

The address is brief. It is elegantly and eloquently phrased. It accentuates the importance of keeping the government of Virginia in the hands of her real people, and deprecates any movement which could by possibility place the offices in the hands of ignorant negroes not qualified to exercise aright the privilege of voting, much less to tax the property of the whites and control the government of the commonwealth.

Now, after this the race issue somewhat subsided until May, 1883. At that time Governor Cameron, for reasons best known to himself, appointed two colored men upon the school board of Richmond. The public schools of Richmond are administered by nine trustees. The school population, if I state it correctly, is about 7,500 white children, and about 6,000 blacks. Hitherto and since the formation of the school system, the blacks had had no representation upon the school board. Governor Cameron, for reasons best known to himself, appointed two negroes; I know them both. The appointment was not an innovation. The official records show that three of his predecessors, Governor Walker, Governor Kemper, and Governor Holiday had, during their terms of office, appointed negro school trustees in various counties of the State, but his appointment of these two was seized upon as the pretext for inflaming this race issue, and without reading them or detaining the committee with them, leaving them to select such extracts as they see fit, I desire to file before this committee the comments of the Virginia press upon that occasion.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will you read some of the paragraphs illustrating their character?

The WITNESS. Yes; I will read from the Danville Times and the Halifax Record.

Destroy and trample these race issues.—Halifax Record.

There is no use talking that way—the Mahoneites band the negroes together to beat us, and we must unite the whites to meet them. Do that and we can always carry enough of the colored vote to elect our ticket.—Danville Times.

The white people would rather that negroes should teach negro schools; and, if it were possible, that negro trustees should be appointed for negro schools; but the white people of Virginia, representing the wealth and intelligence of the State, very reasonably and justly demand not only that the schools shall be under the control of those of the same race, but that every department of our Government shall be in the hands of white men, and those, too, who do not favor appointments such as Cameron made in Richmond. The fall election will prove this.—Franklin (County) Gazette.

The Richmond Dispatch will not tell us why it did not raise a row when Walker, Kemper, Holliday, and other Conservatives placed colored men on the school boards of Petersburg and elsewhere.—Marion Patriot and Herald.

The Richmond Dispatch has published Mr. Farr's letter, and that of his clerk, giving a history of all the appointments alluded to by the Herald. At the same time we made all the comment which we thought the point raised by Cameron's friends demanded of us. Gilbert C. Walker, William H. Ruffner, and James C. Taylor made the first of such appointments, and made them under peculiar circumstances. We are not at all afraid that the people of Virginia will be confused by the facts of the case.—Richmond Dispatch.

Negroes to control the schools to which your little children go. That is Mahoneism. Remember it, white people, when you come to vote.—Lynchburg News.

The Dispatch and State have lashed Cameron, Farr & Co. well for appointing negro trustees. That's right; cry aloud and spare not.—Danville Times.

Come, Governor Cameron, acknowledge your error, and, for the sake of your race if not your party, correct it. You can easily induce Paul to step down and out. The people of this city are in earnest in this matter. Ask the white members of your new school board.—Richmond Dispatch.

The New York World commends "Toeny" Cameron for appointing negro school trustees in Richmond, but such a sentiment does not commend the World to the favorable attention of the Democracy of Virginia.—Franklin (County) Gazette.

THE RACE QUESTION IN VIRGINIA.

There is no one who has a kindlier feeling for the colored people of Virginia than we have. No one in the State, unless he be a carpet-bagger or scalawag, can but help liking them and be willing to extend to them a helping hand whenever it is within their power. But no true friend of theirs will advise them to become the shuttlecock between two contending factions in this State. He who to-day would make the colored man a politician is an enemy to him. When such a net is weaved for him we feel sorry for the race.

But these traitors who have deserted the party and gone back upon the principles of the party now propose to shove forward the colored man in order to make him bear the brunt of their fight for plunder in the State. What care they for him if they get the lion's share, even if they let him have the offal?

As we have said, we feel sorry for the colored man; but they have no one to blame but their allies.

Cameron has placed two negroes upon the city school board of Richmond. They, as trustees, are to pass upon the conduct of the schools of the city, and the qualifications of its public school teachers. They are to say how the taxes raised in the metropolitan city of the State for free-school purposes are to be disposed of. In Danville there are colored policemen and magistrates; in Norfolk district colored men have been nominated for the county offices; in Albemarle a colored man was nominated for one of the clerkships; in Washington County there are put seven or eight colored men upon the committee by Fowler, Wood, &c. We know what this means. It is for the purpose of getting their votes. They care not as much at heart for the interests of the colored man as others do, but they wish to use him. What do the men we have mentioned, and others of the same stripe, care for him?

The question is, where is all this to lead to? If Mahone appoints two negroes in Richmond because of a failure of the trustees to qualify in thirty days, what will prevent him from appointing a negro in any school district in any county in the State? Under the recent decision of his court he can do it. If seven or eight negroes are put upon the committee of Washington County by Mahone & Co. because of their political strength, how long will it be before that strength will demand that it will be recognized in the shape of nominations for office and election to office?—Abingdon Virginian.

If the colored men choose to allow Mahone to wield their votes against the white men of the State, it is all right. The white men will know their duty, and that is to crush Mahone and Mahoneism to atoms. Unless this is done by the people of Virginia, you may bid farewell to the prosperity of our free schools, which have such a strong hold upon their affections. He who would indorse Mahone, Cameron, Blair, and Farr in their recent conduct is an enemy to the public-school system of our State and to popular education.—Abingdon Virginian.

It may be true that these appointments of blacks are the result of a pressure from this class of ignorant voters which the Coalition leaders cannot resist, and a vanity which they must, to retain their political power, cater to; but that very truth makes the situation all the more grave, and should operate to bind the intelligent white men of the State together in self-defense. It will not do to puff away the mixed-school specter as thin air; you must look at the progress of events. The blacks of Virginia of this generation, while not specially ambitious to qualify themselves to fill offices, are certainly developing an excellent appetite for them, and there is as strong a development of yielding to it by the Coalition leaders.—Staunton Vindicator.

And what will our honest white Readjusters say now when they see to what complexion Mahone and Mahoneism would bring them? Negroes appointed by Mahone-made Governor Cameron on the school board of the capital city of Virginia, and two negro candidates for public office in our own county! Is this the beginning of the end? Are our children to sit at the feet of black Gamaliels, who cannot spell their own names, in the public schools? Is justice to be meted out to white men by negro magistrates?

And yet all this is but a small part of what Mahoneism means.—Orange Virginian.

The Constitution guarantees to the colored man the right to vote, and no one de-bars him from this privilege. Self-preservation, the supremacy of peace and order of society, demand that the superior race shall see that the offices are filled and justice administered, not by ignorance and depravity, but by intelligence and respectability. The colored race throughout the State, from the results of recent elections, have commenced to realize this fact for their own interest and protection.—Clarksville Virginian.

How Mahone's penny-whistles dodge the question of indorsing the appointment of the two negroes on the Richmond school board is truly pitiable.—Fredericksburg Star.

The people won't let the candidates for the legislature dodge the question when these ask for their votes next fall.—Richmond Dispatch.

"You bet."—Fredericksburg Star.

Oh, how the Coalitionists love the public schools, which, they say, the Democrats were trying to strangle! So well do they love them that they go among the negroes to select their trustees.

Consider, honest Readjusters, what a combination for evil are ignorance and vice—fitly typified in the negroes and Mahone!—Orange Virginian.

THE SPIRIT OF THE STATE PRESS—"CAPTAIN" PAUL.

As respects the two mulattoes the governor has placed over the white children of our public schools, it is believed that Forrester, who was once elected to the council from Jackson ward by negro votes, will not presume to push himself forward or become obnoxious by officiousness. He is a modest colored man, and one who knows his place. While in the council we have never heard of his acting in any other than a deferential manner towards the white members and officers, to whom he always gave proper recognition as his superiors. And although the insult and indignity intended by Cameron, Blair, and Farr to be put upon the white people of Richmond, and through them upon all the white people of Virginia, is none the less flagrant on this account, yet it is some gratification to know that one of the instruments they have selected may not prove so pliant in their hands as they desire. But the other fellow, "Captain" Paul, is of an entirely different breed. He is a very impudent and forward negro, who pushes himself everywhere, and who by his officiousness and persistent demand for recognition has rendered himself very offensive and annoying, though not daring to put his nose in where he would be apt to get it damaged. We have been informed by those who know that when he was first appointed messenger in attendance on the governor, he answered readily to the name of "Paul," or "John," or "Richard," or whatever his name might be, for really we don't know; but it was not long before he "began to stand upon his dignity," and when addressed after that manner declined to respond, telling those requiring his services that he was "Captain Paul, and he desired everybody in future to address him by his proper title and treat him with the deference due his rank as an officer of the Virginia military organization and his position as aid to the governor."

In this little episode we have set before us the real character of the negro who has been placed at the head of our school board; at the head we say, for the resolution he introduced at the first meeting and the impudent sarcasms he indulged in at the time, coupled with his lofty and patronizing air of granting a favor to our people, plainly showed that he fully understood the weight of his position, knew his power and its source, and felt every inch "the boss of that concern," as he undoubtedly is and was intended to be by those who appointed him. The only wonder is that the white members of the board should tolerate such insolence.—State.

THE WORLD AND THE NEGRO.

The New York World only gets deeper in the mire of its profound ignorance of matters in Virginia and the South in its efforts to extricate itself from the blind plunge it made last week when it assumed the self-appointed office of censor in our political and social affairs, and undertook to applaud Governor Cameron for his liberality in appointing negroes as trustees over our white schools and white school teachers. The surprise with which our people read the first article of the new editor of the World was reflected in an article in our columns the next day. Taking this as its text in its issue of Saturday, and vaunting its self-importance as a representative of the opinion of the world at large, it insists upon its right to criticise the methods of the Democracy of Virginia in dealing with the negro problem, and thereby but increases the enormity of its offense. Our opinion of Pulitzer's unwarranted meddlesomeness was freely given Saturday, and when it has replied to that we shall be in a better mood to take on hand its new assault. But, once for all, we will warn the World that the negro question here is not one to be settled according to the views of the people of the section it represents, but is entirely with the South itself, which, wearing the shoe, knows exactly "where it pinches." The editor of the World may have no objection to the negro and may look upon him as his equal, regardless of color; and he has a perfect right to do so; but here in Virginia we have never and never will place the white race on the same level with the negro, save in matters of common humanity. Socially and politically we do not admit his equality, but insist upon his inferiority and the superiority of the white race.

As to "hating the negro," or being prejudiced against him in the South, Mr. Pulitzer is altogether mistaken. We do not hate him nor have we any prejudices against him. We only demand that he shall keep his place and not intrude where he does not belong; that he remain where nature intended him to remain, and fulfil the purpose of his creation. This is all, and this is the logic of the situation that the North must recognize and govern itself by if it would have peace between the two great sections of our common country. [Remainder of article illegible.]—Richmond State.

No one knows better than General Mahone that the negro can find equality only in the negro's fatherland, and that he can rise to the full dignity of manhood there only after the habits of servitude die with the man whose second nature is servile. The negro may imagine he is a free man here, but in verity he is the obedient servant of the white man, who flatters his vanity. The Moses of Ham has not yet risen. When he appears he will be of the negro race, and his objective point Africa.

Frauds like Mahone do incalculable hurt to the peace and material welfare of communities peopled with superior and inferior races by encouraging hopes in the one race never to be realized, and arousing prejudices in the other that will not down at the bidding or law of charlatans; and the sooner the negro cuts loose from self-seekers and learns once for all that this is the white man's country, and that he will rule it, the better for all concerned.—Warrenton Virginian.

There is a good deal of silly talk by the Mahone papers about the "right of the negro to hold office." Pray who, since the negroes were made citizens, has ever said that they have not the right to hold office? They have quite as much right in that respect as the whites. These papers, in common with the South-hating journals of the North, profess to consider it a gross violation of the Constitution because a negro is never elected to office when the whites can possibly prevent it. This sort of talk is absolutely ridiculous. If negroes were put in offices, not because of their qualifications, but simply because they were negroes, it would be quite as contrary to the Constitution as if they were defeated for that reason. They have a perfect right to hold any office to which they can be elected.—Culpeper Exponent.

The proposition already under discussion by papers of the State for the maintenance of entirely separate school systems for the whites and blacks, each race to support its respective system, in all probability will bring Sambo to a realization of who his real friends are in this political squabble. He must either be content to retain his just subordinate position or pay for his own school. The white people of the State will never agree for an inferior race, in most cases a non-tax-paying class, to manage the intellectual welfare of their children.—Blacksburg Times.

Mahoneism claims to be the friend of free schools, and at the same time strikes a vital blow at the efficacy of the system by putting it in charge of negro partisans. Mahoneism claims to be the friend and upholder of the poor man, and yet they make it necessary that he alone shall send his children to schools under the supervision and management of negroes and unclean, unscrupulous, and ignorant partisans. Mahoneism claims to be the promoter of the negroes, while in truth they deceive him in his ignorance, and cause hostility between the white and colored race, which must end in nothing but destruction and degradation to him.—Blacksburg Times.

Mahoneism may vaunt as much as it chooses, but Cameron's dusky school trustees in Richmond will hardly strengthen the cause in the fall campaign.—Manassas Gazette.

Destroy and trample these race issues.—Halifax Record.

There is no use talking that way. The Mahoneites band the negroes together to beat us, and we must unite the whites to meet them. Do that, and we can always carry enough of the colored vote to elect our ticket.—Danville Times.

Governor Cameron isn't in the least degree sorry that he insulted the people of Virginia by appointing two negroes upon the school board of Richmond. Oh, no! Not he. But then watch him closely and you will not soon hear that he has appointed any more negroes to supervise the work of white people.

We know well enough how even the white Coalitionists must look upon this matter. Governor Cameron knows also. The Coalition candidates for the legislature will tell the story next fall.

Governor Cameron constantly receives letters from his party friends all over the State. Let him publish one from some candidate for popular favor who approves his course in this matter.—Richmond Dispatch.

ADVICE TO THE SCHOOL BOARD.

Some men like to hold an office, no matter how they get into it, whether with or without the approbation of their fellow-citizens, hence the school board for this city, though they came into office in opposition to the wishes of the legally constituted authorities of the city, and also in opposition to a large majority of the people of the city, accepted their appointments and are performing the duties of school trustees. If they would only consider the facts as they should, that they were not appointed because of any superior ability to the old board, but simply because it was thought they could be used to carry out a purpose; that they were not appointed by the people of this city or its representatives, the council, but by a body foreign to the city; that the people who pay the bulk of the money contributed to the support of the schools have no representatives on the board, a proper feeling of self-respect would prompt them to resign.

There is another view to take of the matter. The authority to control the appointment of school trustees is vested by law in the city council, and the State board can appoint only when the council fails to act within a certain time. The council of Portsmouth did not fail to act within the sixty days because of any want of interest in the schools, but because it did not have its attention called to the law on the subject; hence when the State board took advantage of a quibble in the law and appointed a board which was selected on account of their political views, the council could not but regard the act of the State board as a usurpation of their rights and its appointees as a hostile body, hence there cannot be true harmony between the two bodies, and as such a state of affairs is not conducive to the good of the schools, we suggest that the members of the school board resign. It would be more proper for them than the council to resign, because the council was elected by the people as their representatives, but the school trustees represent only three men, Cameron, Blair, and Farr, none of whom have any interests in Portsmouth. The members of the school board say they desire to act for the good of the schools. They have now an opportunity to prove the sincerity of their declarations by resigning. Nothing that they could do would be of more benefit to the schools.

Any system which will cram an official down the throats of a community against the will of a majority of its people will not be productive of much good. The people possess the inalienable right to select their own officials.—Portsmouth Enterprise.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Let me ask you, in passing, was the objection made to those two colored men an objection to the race or an objection to the persons?—

A. Objection to the race.

Q. What kind of men were they? You say Mr. Paul was one.—A. I have known Richard Forester since the time I was ten years old. He was a free man in the days of slavery, and a more thoroughly gentlemanly man does not live in the broad limits of the United States to-day in everything of kindness, good feeling, and affectionate respect for everybody, white and black. Paul I don't know so well personally, but he is, I think, unusually intelligent, and qualified to be a trustee. As you see from these editorials, the gist of it was that they were blacks, and that it was an outrage upon the white people of that city that their white daughters and white children should be subjected to the supervision of a negro.

Now the canvass came on for the election of a legislature.

Q. That is last fall?—A. Yes, sir; last fall. The Bourbon party had now begun calling itself the Democratic party. It was formerly called the Conservative party. It has lately taken on the name of Democracy. When it met, a large element, as will be seen by the Richmond Dispatch here, of those in attendance, was in favor of incorporating the color line in its written platform. There had been a letter published by Mr. A. M. Keiley, the chairman of the executive committee of the Bourbon party, in which he had said that he regarded the negro question higher than the debt question or any other. Here is the letter, dated the 16th of February, 1883. It may be taken as a fair specimen of their sentiments. It was addressed to the editor of the Scott County Banner. He spoke of the long and unsuccessful fight over the debt question, and then said :

There are other things even more valuable to me personally than the rights of creditors. I do not own a State bond, and never owned one. But if I owned thousands I would regard my interest in the supremacy of the white people vastly more valuable than my interest in the public securities.—Extract of Keiley's letter.

The Conservative address which convened them spoke of a malign influence, which had drawn the color line, and appealed to them to rally upon it when they met. When they met in Lynchburg the 25th of July, the Richmond Dispatch discussed what would be done, and says:

Before another issue of the Dispatch reaches the public the Lynchburg convention will in all probability have finished its work. * * * The only matter of difference, developed by a canvass of the delegations, is regarding the advisability of drawing the color line. The Richmond delegation remain practically unanimous in the opinion that it should be drawn, and are, it will be seen, sustained by some of the strongest men in the party. * * *—Richmond Dispatch, July 25, 1883.

They then went on and adopted resolutions in which they stated they were opposed to mixing the whites and blacks in schools. Our party was as much opposed to that as they were, but they, as usual, sought to leave a contrary impression.

The temporary chairman, Mr. Corbin Rennolds, said on taking his seat:

Gentlemen of the convention, you have been selected by the white people of all Virginia to represent them, &c.

The convention did not draw the color line in the written platform. I believe that Woltz and Beckley, two straight-out Republicans, I saw in Lynchburg, came up and induced them not to incorporate the color line into their written platform, so as to give them (Woltz and Buckley) an opportunity to persuade the blacks to vote the Bourbon ticket. The Dispatch, in commenting upon it, on the 27th of July, said :

It leaves no room for any Virginian who believes in the supremacy of the white race, and the rule of honesty and intelligence, to entertain a doubt as to his duty.

And the Dispatch's correspondent, in describing the feeling about the platform, said, "Colonel Fulkerson, who was a strong color-line man, said this morning that he liked it very well" notwithstanding it had not drawn it. Then they went into the canvass, and from that time out I have the notes of my discussions with their speakers. I assert that on every stump the deliberate purpose was displayed to draw the color line. It was not with the purpose of intimidating the blacks; it was for the purpose of rendering the coalition party so odious to the ignorant whites as to band them together. This is evidenced by this circular, which is addressed to the people of the valley in the southwest. The manifest purpose of the campaign throughout was to array the whites against the blacks, and to make it so odious to the whites, that they dare not go into it. A campaign document called "The Democratic Campaign" was started in the city of Lynchburg. If the files of that paper were here I would not have to make any other statement. From the day it was published to the day of the election, it was filled not only with all sorts of scurrilous denunciation of every member of our party, which was sufficient to make every man who had not made up his mind not to fight a duel embroil himself with its editor, but every paper contained cuts of the negro and the white man arm in arm, and of the negro and the white mixed in schools. As the canvass went on such documents as this were distributed:

It came from a gentleman in the county of Tazewell, which is a white county. If you will turn to Tazewell County you will see that the voting population there is, whites, 2,253, and blacks, 337. Documents like that were used to inflame and excite the whites. This represents a little white child being whipped by a black school teacher. It was represented to the blacks, for example, that I was a son of the man who hung John Brown. I do not think it had a very powerful effect, as I was elected by 101,000, of which I should say nearly 60,000 were blacks, while a black man ran and in the whole State he never received but about 4,000 votes.

But I charge here that the Democratic, or Conservative, or Bourbon, or Funder party, or whatever it is, deliberately, continuously, unremittingly, in Virginia, sought to make the race issue and to band the whites in solid phalanx, and in support of that I file the Danville papers I have here in this book, and have culled them for the purpose of showing the animus of that neighborhood; the editorials of the Danville papers—the Pittsylvania Tribune, the Danville Register, and the Danville Times.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. All Democratic papers?—A. All Democratic papers. I will give you a specimen of my greeting in Danville. I wish to state in this connection, and it is a time when a man may be pardoned for vanity, that the records of Accomack County are among the few that have been preserved, and there will be seen the fact that the first man of my name came to this country from Gravesend, England, on the 4th day of July, 1636, and that they have lived in that State until now; that my great-grandfather was major of the Ninth Virginia Regiment at Brandywine, and was promoted to colonel and general for gallantry at the hands of George Washington himself; that my grandfather was one of the first speakers of the house of representatives of Virginia; that my father was a member of Congress for eleven years, minister of the United States to Brazil, governor, and general in the army; that I fought for Virginia and was wounded in battle before I was of military age; and yet this is the greeting in the town of Danville that I received on the morning I reached there. It was but yesterday that I had appeared as the orator at the unveiling of a Confederate monument, when I received a tribute as handsome as man could receive. In the intervening space if I had said or done aught to reflect upon my manhood or my love of my State or her people, I did not know it. In the mean time I was raising a family there, and that I expect to reside there as long as I live, and I am yet to see the man who has cast any aspersion upon my manhood or character, or permanent interest in that community; and yet this is the reception that a man who dared to differ with the Danville Bourbonism received when he went to Danville. It appeared on the morning I was to speak there:

LET THEM ALONE.

The white men of Danville owe it to themselves, their race, and party to stay away from the Radical gatherings and speakings of the Mahone party. The speakers whom Mahone sends among us come solely for the purpose of arousing the negro voters and banding them solidly against the white men of our town. They come to organize in our midst negro rule, with all the direful consequences of such rule to the interest of whites and blacks alike; and they deserve and should receive the condemnation of every good citizen. Let them understand by the absence of every white man from their assemblies that no true Virginian will countenance them in their unholy work; that when they deliberately desert the whites and join the negroes they must speak to their party friends alone; and shame will soon drive them away from their black allies. Remember that these men come to speak to the negroes and let them have their audience, which they have chosen for themselves.—Danville Register, September 27.

WHAT WE EXPECT.

"Do you think you will change any of the white Coalitionists by your course?" a weak-kneed friend inquired of the editor of this paper.

"Oh, no," we replied; "they are all either in office, or think they stand some chance to get in, and nothing can change them."

"Don't you think you will make them worse by your editorials?"

"Certainly."

"Then, what do you expect?"

"We expect to keep others from following their example. The devil himself is made worse, in all probability, by the preachers abusing him so."—The Danville Times, Friday, August 17, 1883.

ITS CONSEQUENCES.

Not every one considers the consequences that are wrapped up in this election. Let the Democrats carry this county and State this fall, and we will right our town next spring. The State, too, will then be safe for the Democratic ticket in the Presidential election of 1884. But if we lose our county and State in November the Mahoneites will run riot worse than ever, and the chances of freeing ourselves from their dominion through the ballot-box will be smaller than ever. What is more, the State, in that event, will be turned over by Mahone to the Republican candidate for President in 1884, and may decide the national contest.

There is a great deal at stake, and if we lose the white people of Virginia will be thrown back where they were in the dark days of the Black Crook convention, when Hunnicut and Lewis Lindsey and Specs Hodges held sway and lorded it over the good people of the commonwealth.

Let every Democrat be brought out.—Register, September 13.

A part of General Early's resolutions, passed at Lynchburg November 5, 1883.

Resolved, That we heartily sympathize with our fellow-citizens of Danville in their struggle against the domination of the negro race, under the lead of renegade white men, whose hearts are blacker than the skins of their unfortunate dupes, and we assure our said fellow-citizens of the white race, not only of our sympathy with them in their present struggle, but of our material and physical support whenever that becomes necessary.

Resolved, That Virginia is, and of right ought to be, a white man's country and ruled by white men, and we are determined that our mother State shall not be ruled by thieves, liars, and cowards with white faces by the aid of their allies, the colored people.

The white men of Danville owe it to themselves, their race, and party to stay away from the Radical gatherings and speakings of the Mahone party.

Let them understand by the absence of every white man from their assemblies that no true Virginian will countenance them in their unholy work; that when they deliberately desert the whites and join the negroes they must speak to their party friends alone, and shame will soon drive them away from their black allies.

Remember that these men come to speak to the negroes, and let them have their audiences, which they have chosen for themselves.

It will not be long before you will see the Coalitionists advocating the repeal of the law forbidding the intermarriage of the two races.

They will say, Why should not a white man marry an African if he wants to? And they will insist on arguing with you on a question you have instinctive horror of. If the Mahone party had succeeded in all their measures in the legislature and were to elect the county officers, the time is near at hand when a negro will attempt to escort a white man's daughter from church, and should the white man knock him down he will be fined and imprisoned. And things would get so intolerable under their rule that the whites would rise up against it, as they did in Vicksburg.

It is time for all men who have firm convictions to speak out.

If you want to protect your wives and daughters and keep off bloodshed you must stand up like men for your race and your civilization.

Everything will "look like Africa."

A black boy will wait on the ladies at the different post-offices. A black boy will search the records for you in the clerk's office. Your bench of magistrates will be "half and half." Your commonwealth's attorney may be a negro, and a negro will surely visit your houses collecting your taxes.

The white man who cannot see it, is blind, insensible, lost to the feelings he used to have, of superiority over the African race, and, like one who has swallowed an overdose of laudanum, needs shaking up. If there be any such men in your neighborhood, friend, rouse him from his lethargy; tell him the enemy are advancing and ask him if he is not in favor of meeting them."

[Page 39.]

A card.

DANVILLE, VA., October 23, 1883.

I wish to inform the people of Danville that I am a white man and a Democrat and I am not a new convert. I have been a Democrat all the time and I have never pretended to be anything else but a Democrat.

W. A. COOK,
A Policeman.

[Page 40, Danville Register, October 13, 1883.]

There was a large turn out at the meeting of the Democratic club of the second ward last night, president R. C. Herndon in the chair.

A capital speech was made by Dr. T. W. Keen, which excited much enthusiasm. The doctor, who has been canvassing through the county, said in the course of his remarks that our Democratic friends in the country manifest increased interest and exhibit a stronger feeling about the canvass since they have learned how the white people of Danville are working to carry the election. The right spirit is abroad.

We talked this morning with a gentleman who had just returned from the northern part of Pittsylvania, and he reported the Democratic canvass there as in first-rate shape. The whites are almost solid, and more united and determined than they have been for many years.

The white people of Danville now see how they can control this town, and take the taxing of their own property into their own hands. This thing they are going to do.

Are there any white men in this town who propose to vote against their color? If so, we would like to know what they think of the above. We imagine it is just as mean for a white man to vote against his color as it is for a negro.

[Danville Register, October 30, 1883.]

To the public:

I desire to say that, notwithstanding I have been heretofore classed with the Readjuster party (which charge I do not deny), I am a white man, and shall in the future act with the Democratic party in all elections, as I consider the question of readjustment settled.

Respectfully,

R. E. LEE.

[Page 42, Danville Register, October 5, 1883.]

BARKER'S NOTICE.

"I now take my stand in the Democratic party to uphold its standard against the black flag of Radicalism, as I ever did even when in the Readjuster party. I cannot be led into the Radical ranks under the name of Readjuster. I am no Coalitionist. I believe that the white people will rule Virginia. but Radicalism will not have it so."

Every white man in the county who has been a Readjuster should follow his example.

[Page 43, Danville Register, editorial, October 30, 1883.]

The canvass is remarkable also for being practically a race issue, to determine whether the white people, who founded, built up, and maintained this Government, are to continue to control its destinies or to surrender it to their former slaves. But perhaps the most remarkable thing about the whole matter is, to find the negroes banded together and led on by white men against their own color and race.

MR. EDITOR: If any proof were wanted to the fact that all classes of white men in Danville are thoroughly aroused in this campaign, it was furnished on the night of the 16th, when Colonel Peyton and Maj. Baker P. Lee addressed them at Star warehouse.

The canvass goes bravely on. Everywhere white men are aroused and everywhere they evince a determination to do all by word and work to advance the cause.

Your white brethren of Danville call upon you to come to their rescue. They have suffered and are suffering under negro rule. They are aroused and intend to throw off the yoke.

Your gentle wife, your children, to whom you must bequeath a country blessed with good government or cursed with bad, call upon you to arouse and go forth to the battle. The great questions, shall white men rule; shall civilization be preserved, and our society protected, are before you. How will you answer?

The Campbell County Record, published in county adjoining Pittsylvania, in its issue of November 9, 1883, contains the following local items:

A TRAITOR.

A gentleman from Castle Craig gives us the following note:

"Castle Craig gave a solid vote against Tyree Callahan, and all the rest of the negroes."

We learn that this man, his two sons, and a son-in law voted the Coalition ticket. These are the only renegade white men yet heard of in this county. We believe that the severest condemnation should be put upon these traitors to their own people and their country in its hour of peril. Keep them spotted.

That was the temper and language that they used.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. When was that?—A. That was on the 27th day of September, 1883, and under oath I moreover say that I predicted this from the temper of the white men of Danville that the slightest provocation would make bloodshed there. Danville and Pittsylvania County, to my knowledge, is the most lawless and violent community in Virginia, and the adjoining county of Caswell, in the State of North Carolina, also where the Ku Klux formerly resided.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. That is a large Republican county.—A. Yes; and wherever there is a large Republican vote, in that neighborhood there will be a large number of Bourbon shot-guns.

Q. Yes; and there will be a great many men go to the penitentiary wherever there is a large Republican vote?—A. Yes; and a great many will go down to death at the muzzle of Bourbon shot-guns.

Q. I don't know as there is any necessity for you to assail North Carolina here.—A. I do not assail the people of North Carolina; I believe that the best people of both Virginia and North Carolina reprehend this state of things as sincerely as I do. It is only that they are made drunk by these inflammatory appeals to them by politicians who fear the loss of their power and so have no way of rehabilitating themselves except by raising this color line. I assert, and am prepared to prove that no community of that commonwealth was so fitted for this outbreak. I have in my possession the evidence of well on to a hundred murders, hangings, and maimings committed in the neighborhood of Danville within the last fifteen years. I can produce now the evidence of where a brother killed his own sister in Danville in a disreputable place; where a man killed another in Pittsylvania County about a puddle duck. I am prepared to prove mob after mob. To show where a man killed his son-in-law at the breakfast table in presence of his own daughter, the man's wife; where two daughters cut off a father's head with an ax; where a white man killed a black man there and put him in his store and set fire to it to get the insurance on his own life. In speaking of it to a leading citizen of Danville, his answer was: "We tried to make the negroes mob that man and hang him but the fools wouldn't do it." I could name many other crimes equally hideous. I assert that no place in that commonwealth could have been so susceptible to these inflammatory influences as the community of Danville. When I spoke at the town of Chatham—I will let their own paper state what occurred.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was Chatham in the same county?—A. The county seat of Pittsylvania County. Here's what they said. Here's their own county seat that gives you the character of the reception to a man that differs with them. It represents me as a very violent man. I will read what it says:

Mr. Wise in conclusion was very much excited. His remarks were almost entirely of a personal character, delivered in a bulldozing manner and not all courteous, and but for the cool manner in which Mr. Munford received them a difficulty would certainly have arisen, which would have caused deep regret. During Captain Wise's first speech the people had stood back, but when he spoke the second time the stand was now crowded; knives were drawn, hands on pistols, and had the slightest motion been made a horrible row would have ensued, in which, of course, Captain Wise would have fared very badly, as the crowd was thoroughly incensed against him.

We cannot see that either side made or lost anything by the discussion, as we have not seen or heard of a man that was converted either way.—Chatham Tribune.

I am fortunate in not knowing the intense peril in which I was until I read it in that paper. Now, I assert here and file in proof of it these editorials.

Q. Are there any particular clauses which you desire to have embodied in your testimony; as a matter of course, we cannot place that whole document in except as an exhibit?—A. I ask leave to select and file from these editorials from the three papers, the Register, the Times, and the Chatham Tribune.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Printed at what time?—A. Running through July, August, September, and October. I wish to file also in this connection, as corroborative of the temper and spirit which I say existed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What paper is that?—A. The Danville Times of the 22d of February, 1884.

Q. Last Friday?—A. Yes, sir; I would like to file an editorial of the Danville Times.

Q. Read that editorial from the Danville Times of February 22, if you please.

Witness read as follows:

STEAM UP.

A short while ago the Democrats of Danville were a unit and red hot. Young and old, rich and poor, all were up to fever heat.

It is time now to steam up again for another fight. The object will be to rid Danville of every vestige of negro rule. One more effort of the great Democratic stomach will throw up every particle of Radical stuff which was left after the great upheaval in November last.

Let's go to work, right away, friends, and, if necessary, let us make it hotter than it was before.

I wish to say, moreover, that when I visited that section, by the manner, by the signs, by the utter withdrawal of the whites, by the inflammatory harangues of their journals, and by my knowledge of the lawless community, I was prepared for and expected from the time I went there in September the occurrence of exactly this thing, and I regard the attempt to put it upon Mr. Sims's speech as simply a subterfuge. It was the result, I assert here, the legitimate result of the inflammatory efforts that had been made, and the appeals with which these people had been plied and infuriated from the time of May at very least, when Governor Cameron appointed those negro trustees.

Q. Is there anything else you desire to state as bearing upon the cause of the Danville riot?—A. Yes, sir. I am glad you asked me that question. When I was in Danville, in September, I was visited at my room by white men who had been there before when I was a canvasser there. Among them I recall the names of John A. Smith and Robert F. Jennings.

Q. Were they Democrats or Readjusters?—A. Mr. Jennings had been a Readjuster. He represented to me that at heart he was as much a Readjuster as ever; that his heart was with us, but that he was afraid to open his mouth; that the Democratic party had waited upon his employers—he was in a warehouse—and told him that unless he joined a Democratic club, or they discharged him, their discounts should be cut off at the bank and that tobacco would not be sent to their warehouse. Up to that time he had been able to resist it, but before election day Mr. Jennings was a member of a Democratic club. I say that I can only gather these things from Readjusters. No Democrat would have told it to me, because I suppose he would never expect to get me into a Democratic club; but that was the statement of Mr. Jennings himself to me, and that was corroborated—that species of public feeling and coercion and ostracism and all sort of violent methods was corroborated to me by statements of the leading Readjusters of our party there in a way that I had no reason to doubt it.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Were there any business advertisements there pointing to this condition of affairs?—A. Yes, sir. I desire now to file what I have cut from the Danville papers. I will take the advertisement of Tyack & Co. Mr. Tyack was a member of the committee of forty. Mr. Tyack was a member of the grand jury, and Mr. Tyack was also a hardware dealer in the town of Danville. I file here the Danville Register, and wish it to be printed as it appears.

Q. What is the date?—A. September 26, 1883.

Q. Are there any business advertisements in the papers about that time warning people about trading with Readjusters or anything of that character?—A. No, sir; I don't know of any such thing in the papers.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. The burden of your remarks, Mr. Wise, was to prove that the white people, or Funders, or Democrats, or Bourbons, or whatever you term them, were to blame for trying to raise the race issue in Virginia?—A. Undoubtedly, sir.

Q. Now, I will ask you what is the colored vote of the State of Virginia?—A. One hundred and twenty-eight thousand. I will give you the exact figures. The colored voting population of Virginia, as appears by the census of 1880, was 128,257.

Q. Now, please, if you have it before you, give us the white vote.—A. Yes, I have that also, 206,248.

Q. Now, can you give us the vote between Mr. Cameron and Mr. Daniel?—A. Yes, sir; the vote between Cameron and Daniel was as follows: Cameron received 113,473, Daniel 100,758.

Q. Now, can you draw any idea from that—have you the means of drawing any deductions from that as to the number of colored votes that were cast for Mr. Daniel?—A. Not from these tables.

Q. What do you suppose the percentage will be?—A. My impression was that Governor Cameron in that election received about 60,000, from 60,000 to 65,000 blacks, and the balance of his votes, you may say 50,000, it might be, whites. And that Mr. Daniel received about 90,000 whites, from 90,000 to 93,000 or 94,000, and that he received from 7,000 to 10,000 blacks.

Q. Then you would put the percentage of black votes cast for Mr. Cameron at about 60, would you not?—A. About 61.

Q. About 61 per cent. And the percentage of colored votes that were cast for Mr. Daniel about 6 or 7?—A. Yes; Mr. Daniel never received in Virginia over 10,000 black votes in any event, I am satisfied.

Q. Then it follows naturally that the blacks are more firmly consolidated than the whites?—A. I think they were.

Q. There is no doubt about that, is there?—A. No doubt about it.

Q. Now, I will ask you a general question: If there is not a very sharp and rigid ostracism among the colored people against any one of their number who votes the Democratic ticket?—A. Well, sir, I have heard more of that here than I ever knew before. I have never mingled with them in such a way, because political affiliation does not mean a knowledge of their social life at all, although the Bourbon party has endeavored so to represent it. I have never had an opportunity to observe their social relations, to judge whether there is any truth in that or not, but I have no doubt that the vast majority of them being Republicans use every reasonable effort to make their associates go with them.

Q. Mr. Wise, have you not knowledge—and when I say knowledge I mean such as you derive from observation—that you would rely upon of many instances where they have beaten men of their own color and exercised violence toward them for voting the Democratic ticket?—A. I am fully aware of my oath in that regard, and must answer that I never heard of an instance of that sort in my life, that I recollect, in Virginia.

Q. You seem to be pretty well posted about what took place in Danville; the course of their politics there; do you not know that the Democratic club there issued an address, in which they offered to protect from violence any colored man that would vote the Democratic ticket?—

A. I look upon that exactly in this manner. I have seen a hawk scatter a covey of birds, and then sail over the field hanging over them, and if he should drop from his talons an assurance that if the birds came out he would not strike them, I should think it would be just as reassuring as the assurance of these white men that they would not kill the negroes after they had spent the evening on Saturday doing so.

Q. Unfortunately for the beauty of your figure my question did not refer to any effort on the part of the Democratic club to protect the negro race generally; but it was issued, as I understand, before the Danville riot, offering to protect the colored man from violence by his own race if he was inclined to vote the Democratic ticket.—A. I didn't see that address. I have no doubt they made such an offer if you state it, and were fully able to carry it out.

Q. I have seen the paper but don't remember the date, and may be in error in stating that it was before, but I think it was. Now, in the election between Cameron and Daniel, it appears from the statistics which you have given us that scarcely one-half the legal white votes were cast?—A. Less than one-half if you observe—no, I am wrong, the legal vote was 335,000; the actual vote was 213,000.

Q. That is less than one-half isn't it?—A. No; 213,000 is more than one-half of 335,000, it is about 66 per cent.

Q. Mr. Daniel's vote was less than 100,000?—A. No. 100,758.

Q. And the total white vote displayed by the census is over 200,000?—A. Two hundred and seven thousand.

Q. Now you said that this color line was drawn not for the purpose of intimidating the blacks, but to consolidate the whites?—A. Yes; and I will say to you here, I say that—

Q. Well, I was just quoting your statement?—A. Here is an editorial from the Danville Times of August 17.

(This editorial is already in evidence.)

Q. Exactly; now, then, I was correct in quoting what you said?—A. Yes, the purport of it was to inflame the whites to make them think there was a war of races. This Danville massacre was made to appear as an uprising of the blacks against the whites.

Q. Now, the colored people were consolidated to the extent of about 93 per cent. of their whole number, only leaving about 7 per cent. that voted the other ticket?—A. Probably so; I have not calculated the per cent.

Q. Well, I am only speaking approximately of course. I can't take time now to make the calculation; and the white people were divided almost in two, half and half. Now, do you think it unfair, according to our notion of politics, that the party that was in the minority should use means to bring up their voters that had not come to the polls by appealing to them on account of their race?—A. I not only regard it—

Q. In the face of the almost consolidated vote of the other side, do you think that is fair?—A. By any legitimate argument which would appeal to the intelligence of the community, I recognize it as the right of any party to avail themselves of it, but I speak with a knowledge not only of what was said but how it was said. The Bourbon party of Virginia never made the appeal otherwise than by the denunciation of every white man, his public and his private character. There was no relation of his life that was too sacred for their abuse, vilification, and denunciation, and as to the blacks the effort was made to band the whites against them as if they were with torch in hand and blade at their breast going to kill them, unless they rose up banded against them. I assert that throughout the State of Virginia it was more like war than peace, through the efforts of the Bourbon party, and I don't claim to be a particularly brave man or admit that I am a particularly cowardly one, but I say in all sincerity, and under the solemnity of what I have sworn to, that never since the war, or even in the war, had I a more serious sense of personal risk than I felt during the last three weeks of the last campaign.

Q. Well, with all due respect, I don't think that fairly answers my question.—A. Well, I mean to say this, that admitting as a general proposition, that any civilized and legitimate appeal is admissible; I say that the appeal made by the Bourbon party of Virginia in the last contest was barbarous.

Q. It was not fair?—A. It was not fair; it was not civilized; it was not human, and not worthy of the nineteenth century.

Q. That is your opinion?—A. That is my opinion, and it is under oath.

Q. Now, if a man was to get up on the stump in Virginia out in that campaign and appeal to white men, and say, here you see the negroes are nearly all solid for their side of the question, I appeal to you because you are white men to become solid also, would that have been unfair?—

A. I think it would have been untrue, because I don't think that they were banded upon any race prejudices.

Q. Well, they were all together?—A. They were supporting white men themselves. It could not have been that they were making a race fight. They were fighting for white men in nine cases out of ten. They had just voted, about 60,000 of them, against a negro, it could not have been race prejudice.

Q. Certainly, but they looked upon you as their man?—A. I don't suppose they mistook me for a negro, though.

Q. At the same time, though, they looked upon you as their candidate; the man to carry out their principles that they believed in, I suppose, didn't they?—A. Do you know that the negroes have a great deal more intelligence than your party is wont to give them credit for in politics. You would be astonished to find how universal their favor of the doctrine of protection is.

Q. You don't give that as an evidence of intelligence, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That they would prefer high goods to cheap ones?—A. I am not going to discuss with you about the doctrine of free trade or protection.

Q. You alluded to it?—A. We don't agree about protection; Know-nothingism, or anything else.

Q. Yes; we do agree about Know-nothingism?—A. No; when I first knew you you belonged to the K. N., Know-nothing party; and now you belong to the N. K., negro-killing party. The principles of your two parties were the same.

Q. I think that is going rather too far. Then you were a secession Democrat.—A. No; I was only nine years old at that time.

Q. Well, whenever a man pleads the infancy act I am off.—A. No; I don't think you have changed base at all; Know-nothingism is based upon ostracism.

Q. If, at that time, I was opposed to this country being ruled by respectable white foreigners, I am opposed now to its being ruled by negroes. I suppose you are opposed to negro rule, are you not?—A. I am not aware that that is an issue.

Q. Do you think that in Virginia or in any other State negroes ought to be admitted to a share in the rule of the country in proportion to their numbers?—A. I don't think that that is a question which addresses itself to my judgment. I was a Confederate soldier and a slave-owner. I never agreed to the emancipation of the negro; I never agreed that we were not out of the Union, until I got licked out of these notions. You ask me what I think they ought to have.

Q. No; I asked you if you thought that the colored people ought to bear their proportion of their rule in this country in proportion to their numbers.—A. I don't think what they ought to do; I know what they are entitled to, and what we have sworn to give them. We have accepted the constitutional amendment which makes them free, which gives them the franchise, and a man who draws nigh unto that with his mouth, and presses it with his lips, while his heart is far from it, is as great a hypocrite as I know. We have sworn to recognize the political equality of these negroes, and they have the same rights as the white man, and whenever his vote cast it should be honestly counted.

Q. That still brings my question back; are you in favor of giving them a share of the offices of the Government of the country in proportion to their numbers?—A. Not in proportion to their numbers at all; I don't think the proportion of numbers has anything to do with it. I am in favor of recognizing his political equality in proportion to his intelligence and capacity. If he is the fittest person for an office he ought to have it, if there is but negro in the community; on the other hand, if there are ten hundred thousand negroes and but one white man, and the white man is more fit for the place than the negro, the white man ought to have it.

Q. Has that been observed in Virginia since your party has been in power there?—A. I am not prepared to say to what extent it has been observed; I can only say this, that it has been demonstrated that that is the feeling of the negroes in the town of Danville itself, where they have always had a majority, and yet there has always been a majority of the white men in the administration of the Government.

Q. I ask you if that has been observed by the authorities of the State of Virginia since your party have had power there?—A. Perhaps if you would specify what your direction is, I might answer more definitely.

Q. You have stated in that proportion to their intelligence, and the number of their intelligent men, and their upright men, &c., that they ought to have a share in the Government. I ask you if that has been observed by the Readjuster authorities of Virginia?—A. I think the effort has been made to observe it; I think that the Readjuster party is by no means without its faults and its shortcomings.

Q. They have not done their full duty, then, by the colored man any more than other parties?—A. Yes, sir; they have done a great deal for the colored man. In the first place the Readjuster party repealed the poll-tax law enacted by the Bourbon party for the distinct purpose of disenfranchising them; I think that is a pretty good thing for the colored people.

Q. Didn't that also disenfranchise any white man who did not comply with its provisions?—A. Yes; it was a very bad piece of political machinery, intended to put power into the hands of the dominant party.

Q. You think so, but at the same time, whilst the dominant party were in power and that law was enforced, your party got the upper hand of it?—A. Yes; because our party was overwhelmingly in the majority, and is now, really, and nothing but this race-cry ever defeated it.

Q. Yes, and after the law was repealed, your party still being in power, the Democrats regained control of the State.—A. The Democrats regained control of the State originally by a very base appeal to race passions.

Q. So you have stated.—A. And they have since then stolen a two-thirds majority of the legislature by the most shameless proceedings that have ever disgraced this country.

Q. That is your opinion.—A. That is the opinion of their own people, a good many of them.

Q. Now, you know that many States in the North prevent a man from voting until he pays his taxes, don't you?—A. Yes; and I am too good a Democrat to sanction any such subterfuge.

Q. Then the injustice, if it be an injustice, in that respect was not confined to the Democrats of Virginia?—A. Not at all. I believe there are other bad men in the world besides Virginia Democrats; I take a broader view of life than that, I hope.

Q. Now, referring to your contest with Mr. Massey, of which you have given us a brief history.—A. No, sir; I only referred to statistics to show where our vote was.

Q. Now, I ask you if it is not charged that a great number, if not enough to unseat you, of votes were cast in that election on fraudulent certificates of taxes having been paid?—A. Oh, yes, it is charged. For example, Massey charged that I received 20 illegal votes at every precinct in Clarke County, but in one of them there was not a vote cast for me, in another only 8, and in another 14. He can charge anything he chooses, but he can't prove it.

Q. I think he can a good deal, can't he?—A. I consider my case stronger now than when we started. He has not proved anything, and I have proved some seven hundred perjuries and forgeries in Richmond for his benefit.

Q. And has he not proven as many cases of illegal votes as he claimed to?—A. I think I can't answer that question better than by saying what he charged, and what he proves by this. It is about like a fellow who claims a foreign minister's place and winds up with a pair of old boots. He started with a tremendous charge, and his evidence proved little or nothing. I will add, moreover, that Mr. Massey was the original inventor and discoverer of the special tax receipt. His argument in favor of it was the strongest I have seen.

Q. Now, I want to ask you what is the process of collecting this tax in Virginia? When a man fails to pay his taxes at the regular time what then befalls him?—A. When a man fails to pay his taxes he is returned delinquent; that is a long story and a rather tiresome one, I am afraid. In the first place, to be delinquent he must be assessed; if he is not assessed of course he does not appear on the delinquent list. Now, a man may be in default, you see, without being delinquent. Sometimes he is delinquent and sometimes he is not. There are two ways of being in default.

Q. Well, it will answer my purpose if you will pursue the history of a delinquent tax-payer.—A. I was going to show you. They are all called delinquent, although technically they are not delinquent; but when a man's tax has not been paid for the preceding year, but had been assessed, he was returned delinquent. If he had not been assessed he was not returned delinquent, but had to be assessed and pay. In either event he had to have a receipt. If he had been assessed he found a delinquent tax receipt in the hands of the county officer, if he could find that county officer, and he paid him for it and got his receipt. If on the other hand he had not been assessed he had to seek an assessing officer, be assessed, then take his assessment to the county officer and pay it to him. A great many men were omitted from assessment, I have thought, intentionally, so as to hedge about the trouble of their qualifying themselves. Those on the other hand very frequently who were returned delinquent found great difficulty in finding the officer just before election, provided they did not agree politically with that officer.

Q. What was done with the list from each county when the county treasurer or sheriff—who collects your taxes? What county officer?—

A. The treasurer, I take it, collects the taxes.

Q. Then, when he settles with the State treasurer, what did he do with the delinquents?—A. He returns his delinquent list to the State treasurer.

Q. Don't he also return to the clerk's office?—A. One copy to the clerk's office to illustrate it. In our town Tinsley is the treasurer and Jenkins is the clerk and Allen was the auditor. The tax-list is sent to the treasurer and after a time specified for him to collect he returns his delinquent list in duplicate, one to the clerk of the hustings court, the other to the capitol. Then a person owing taxes and on the delinquent list can pay at the office of the clerk and get his receipt. The person who has not been assessed can go to the commissioner, be assessed, and he takes that to the treasurer.

Q. Now, suppose the list is all returned and the time has passed, what does the State treasurer do?—A. Suppose the list is returned?

Q. Yes; from all the counties.—A. Well, I don't remember the exact phraseology of the law, but it requires him to send it out and put it in the hands of the enumerated officers, among others a special collector. He is allowed to send the list to any sheriff, sergeant, or constable, my recollection is; any bonded officer already in existence in the county, or to a special collector. If you are interested in that subject I can get you—

Q. I don't want the law itself. You have given the outline of it, I have no doubt.—A. I can give you Mr. Massey's statement of the law if you want it.

Q. I will not ask you for it now. I will ask you now if the treasurer of the State in the late election did not return this delinquent list?—A. The auditor of the State.

Q. The auditor, to the various counties to a collector of his own appointment instead of to the sheriff?—A. Not in the late election.

Q. Didn't he do that?—A. Oh, no, that is all over now. We repealed a poll-tax law in 1882; there was no poll-tax in the late election.

Q. I mean in your election?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't he send these returns to collectors of his own appointment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Instead of to the county officer?—A. There is a special section which allows him to select and appoint special collectors.

Q. Do you know why they were so sent instead of to the regular officers of the county?—A. Because, in the first place, it does not pay as a general proposition to collect those little amounts. There is, too, a great deal of trouble about it, collecting a dollar and five cents from each tax-payer. There had been a very general neglect of it. I will give you the reasons better here than I can give them myself. I read from John E. Massey:

Into whose hands ought the auditor to have placed these delinquent lists?

He ought, beyond question, to have placed them in the hands of those who were most likely to collect and pay into the treasury the largest proportion of the amounts placed in their hands.

To have placed these lists in the hands of the sheriffs of the counties and the sergeants of the cities would have relieved the auditor of much labor and care, and been the easiest method to him of disposing of the whole matter.

Would that have been best for the Commonwealth?

Let us see: The delinquent lists for 1877-'78 were placed in the hands of sheriffs in nearly every county in the State. They seem not to have been sent to any one in some of the counties. If they were, there is no evidence of it in the auditor's office.

Many of these lists have been returned without one dollar having been collected. Only sixteen of all the sheriffs and constables appointed report any collections whatever.

The delinquent lists sent out exceeded $75,060. They have been out more than a year; and all the collections reported from the counties of the State amount to the pitiful sum of only $224.64. This is the entire amount.

How was it in the cities?

The delinquent list of Norfolk was $3,033.10. This was placed in the hands of the sergeant of Norfolk City, and was published in one of the newspapers there at a cost to the State of $1,501.50. The entire amount of collections reported by the sergeant is $53.71. After deducting 20 per cent. for collecting, the State received $42.97, and paid for printing the lists $1,501.50!

The delinquent lists of Richmond amounted to $9,017.62. They were placed in the hands of the sheriff of Richmond City, who reported collections amounting to $400, which he paid into the treasury.

No collections were reported from the cities of Alexandria, Danville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg, Manchester, Portsmouth, Staunton, Williamsburg, or Winchester. (My appointee in Alexandria has already paid $300, which he collected, of the delinquent taxes of 1879-'80.)

The delinquent lists of Petersburg amounted to $3,780.09.

Andrew Dunn, who was neither sheriff, sergeant, nor constable, was appointed to collect these lists of 1878-'79, precisely as I have appointed him to collect the lists of 1879-'80.

He collected and paid into the treasury $1,200. Here was one single "collector" who paid into the treasury very nearly twice as much as all the sheriffs, sergeants, and constables in all the other cities and all the counties of the State combined!

With these lights before him, into whose hands ought the auditor to have placed the delinquent lists of 1879-'80? Would he have used the discretion given him by the law wisely if he had again appointed those who had returned the entire lists of 1877-'78 without collecting a single dollar, as many of them did, or those whose collections were a mere bagatelle?

Ought he not to have selected men whose time and attention were not engrossed with other official duties which they regarded as of paramount importance—men who desired employment, and were willing to devote their time and attention especially to this work?

The statement of these questions suggests the only sensible answer.

The auditor answered them by deed instead of word.

That will do as a sample of how it was done. Well, now he says:

The object of the laws enacted for the collection of revenue is to secure from each citizen and property-holder of Virginia all the taxes with which he may be properly assessed, so that each may bear his just proportion of the expenses of the Government. Hence the legislature has provided ample means for their collection, and made it the duty of the auditor to see that these means are properly used. While this is imperatively demanded of him, he is given large discretion in their selection and use. This is very manifest in the law under which he appoints collectors of delinquent taxes.

That law is as follows:

"A certified copy of the first and third lists heretofore returned (that is, the personal property and capitation lists) shall be placed by the auditor of public accounts, within sixty days after receiving the originals, or as soon thereafter as practicable, in the hands of any sheriff, sergeant, constable, or collector, for collection; the same to be accounted for within one year thereafter—said officer to have the same power of distress as treasurers, and shall account for the same in like manner; and he and his sureties shall be subject to all such remedies as are given to the commonwealth against treasurers for failure to pay; and his compensation shall not exceed twenty per centum of the amount collected and paid into the treasury. * * * But in no case shall such delinquent lists be placed for collection in the hands of any officer who has returned the same."

This law makes it the imperative duty of the auditor to place the delinquent lists in the hands of somebody, but it leaves him to determine whether that somebody shall be a sheriff, a sergeant, a constable, or some one else. The only restriction upon his selection is that these lists shall not "be placed for collection in the hands of any officer who has returned the same."

And the auditor said with these lights before him that he believed the special collectors would make a specialty of this, would be better, and they would be more successful, and they would not be out of the way on purpose.

Q. That was in 1882 that the auditor of the State issued all these delinquent lists to special collectors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those special collectors were all Readjusters, were they not?—A. I think they were for the most part, probably.

Q. It was upon that that the frauds were alleged to have been perpetrated, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; alleged.

Q. That these special collectors appointed by one political party issued receipts where money was not paid?—A. Yes, sir; but that was proved to be false.

Q. Well, I did not ask you if it was proved false. I want to ask you if that was not the allegation?—A. There were $16,000 of cash in the treasury of Virginia from these poll taxes collected by these special collectors, so that the pretense that they were issued without money is all nonsense. The receipts are filed in the collector's office. I filed the receipts of each county, and as fast as Massey charged that the receipts had been issued without the payment of money for them I would file receipts showing that a dollar and five cents had been paid, and that the money had been paid in the treasury before Massey's notice to me had been served in many cases.

Q. You spoke of Mr. Tyack's advertisement here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Guns and stoves and stew-pans, and so on, and so on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you suppose that that gentleman had those guns there for the purpose of bringing about that riot and killing the colored people?—A. No, sir; but I suppose that gentleman found an unusually active traffic in guns just before this time; in fact, I am satisfied of it.

Q. Do you know where those guns were made, for instance?—A. No, sir, but I expect to prove it by him.

Q. That they were made where?—A. I say I expect to prove where he got them from by himself.

Q. Well, he could purchase them in the markets of the country?—A. I suppose so.

Q. You don't suppose that they were manufactured in Massachusetts for the purpose of shooting darkies in Danville?—A. No, sir; I fancy not. We used to accuse the Massachusetts people of bringing the slave here, but I have not heard such a charge about guns to kill the negroes.

Q. They made them for sale, I suppose, and Mr. Tyack bought them for sale in the same way. How often were you in Danville in the last canvass more than September?—A. Twice, I think; not to speak but once, though my impression is that I visited there on my way to Franklin Court House, and spoke there when I came back; possibly twice or thrice.

Q. Now, you have told the committee that Sims's speech had nothing to do with the excitement.—A. Not at all; I did not know how much Sims's speech had to do with the excitement.

Q. I mean with the riot.—A. I said that it was nonsense to say that Mr. Sims's speech was the immediate cause of it.

Q. It was what the doctors call a remote cause—a proximate cause.—A. Well, you hear that in murder, too.

Q. Don't you understand that Mr. Sims's speech was a proximate cause of the outbreak?—A. I don't see what Sims's speech had to do with these men going there to whip that negro next day. He never insulted them, on their own statement, for anything that Sims had said, and they never whipped him for anything Sims had said.

Q. Then do you think that the proximate cause of the riot was that fight between Lawson and Noel?—A. I think that the facts of the Danville massacre may be exaggerated, but the import and the animus of it cannot be exaggerated. It was but the mere outcropping of one of the most inflamed and outrageous canvasses I ever knew, and that was a fitting place for it to culminate.

Q. In all candor, if it was an inflamed and outrageous canvass, was not Mr. Sims's speech one evidence of inflammation and outrage?—A. I am not Mr. Sims's explainer or apologist; he can do that himself. He will be upon the stand.

Q. I understand that, but I want your opinion of it.—A. I will say this, as a general proposition, that it is bad taste, bad manners, and no proof of pluck for a man to get on the stand and denounce man after man as a liar, scoundrel, &c.; but you must wait to hear Mr. Sims's reason for doing so before you judge him, and I decline to judge him in advance. He will probably give you a statement of palliating circumstances and provocation which I don't know.

Q. Now, Mr. Sims's speech shows for itself. Didn't you and other orators of your party return not good for evil, but evil for evil, and reviling for reviling with compound interest in all that campaign?—A. I have never had a difficulty in a political discussion in my life. I am aware that I was represented as probably having a forked tongue with both ends loose. The nearest I ever came to a difficulty was at Halifax Court House. In my speech I had stated that my last visit was as a ragged boy bearing dispatches. Mr. Berkley was my opponent, and when he rose after I had made a speech, which I thought was proper, he struck a dramatic attitude and said, his first sentence was, "But what would your old commander think of you if he saw you to-day leading on the black hordes of this county against their decency." I arose, tapped him on the shoulder, and said, "Stop, sir; I have never done ought in my life that my dead commander would reprehend or my loving children be ashamed of, and the man don't live that shall say so to my face." He disclaimed any personal allusion, and we agreed most pleasantly afterwards. That was as near to a personal difficulty as I ever had. I will add, however, that I don't claim to be exempt from the infirmities of men; that I, generally, if anybody hits me with a brick try to hit him with a bat at least.

Q. Well, my question embraces not only you but the orators of your party.—A. I heard very little of the discussions.

Q. They didn't go through the canvass tamely, submitting to everything, did they?—A. No, sir; in the canvass preceding Mr. Riddleberger had two duels in one day, and I took a turn at the bellows myself in the preceding canvass, but I wish to state here to-day that, after mature deliberation, having arrived at the age of thirty-seven years, with five living children and a growing family, and with, I hope, rather a broader view of life than I had, I made up my mind that no provocation whatever would ever drag me into a duel, else I would have been involved in forty duels during the last canvass.

Q. Have you any extracts from newspapers showing where Democratic orators were made to submit to castigation and abuse?—A. Well, no; I have not. It was a very common expression in accounts of meetings that somebody was "skinned alive."

Q. Did you ever hear it asserted on the stump or see it asserted in the papers that if the Democrats carried the election the negroes would be put back into slavery?—A. Oh, I have seen in Democratic papers that such statements had been made.

Q. What papers, do you recollect?—A. No. I think I have seen the statement in the Dispatch, or in the State, that such appeals were made to them.

Q. I am informed that the files of the Dispatch can be produced if you think you could show any such articles.—A. My particular allusion was, if I recollect correctly, to the State of a day or two ago, which published a card either purporting to be a circular by Norton and Griffin, in which the colored people were warned that the Democrats were trying to turn them, and that if they vote for the Democrats they would be put back into slavery, &c.

Q. I have that before me and will put it in evidence, with the permission of the committee.—A. That is the thing published in the State; I would like to see it.

Q. I will read it:

CAUTION! BEWARE!

Let all true Republicans look out for Democratic tricks.

It is known that Straightout leaders will try and get you to vote the Democratic ticket.

Vote the TRUE REPUBLICAN-READJUSTER COALITION ticket for

D. M. Norton and

R. G. Griffin.

Vote for your freedom!

Save your free schools!

Save your free ballot!

Vote for low taxes!

Spurn Democratic money, which will be offered to enslave you and your children!

When the shackles are once on you will be lost forever!

The Readjuster party is the POOR MAN'S party!

Don't believe Funder lies and listen not to their promises!

Now, let fair-minded men, without regard to party, repel the charge that the white people of Virginia raised the race issue.

A. There is not in that an allusion to black or white in any way. It appeals to them as true Republicans and as poor men to fight for their freedom, but it does not appeal to them as black men or white men.

Q. Then you understand that the poor white men were in danger of losing their ballot too?—A. I regarded the Bourbon party as the worst enemy the white men of Virginia have ever had.

Q. Is it true that the Coalition party was a poor man's party?—A. Yes, sir; and it is also true that but for the money of the Bourbon party, which it has in vast preponderance, they would never have to make the fight.

Q. Do you know of any money having been sent from Washington for the use of the Readjusters?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any being levied on the office-holders in the State of Virginia?—A. I know nothing whatever of that, if it was done.

Q. You heard it was done, did you not?—A. I heard more from the Bourbon papers than anything else that it was done.

Q. That assessments were levied upon the office-holders in Virginia?—A. That is false, I am satisfied.

Q. You saw the statement made, did you not?—A. I saw it in the Bourbon papers. I saw it also said in the papers that I said that John Brown was a better man than any Bourbon in Virginia, and that was a lie; and I had got to be rather incredulous about what I read in Democratic journals in Virginia.

Q. There is a Straightout Republican party in Virginia, is there not?—
A. No, sir.

Q. There is not?—A. No, sir. There is a party there that is a Straightout; a fellow by the name of Dezendorf.

Q. What has become of the Republican party in Virginia?—A. The Republican party of Virginia is now, I hope and believe, united with the Readjuster party for the purpose of extirpating Bourbonism.

Q. Then there is no old-fashioned Republican party in Virginia?—A. No, sir; I don't think the old-fashioned Republican party exists, but it is a new-fashioned Republican party that exists there. Every old Know-Nothing is running with the Democratic party. You came there to teach us debt-paying and Democracy when you had repudiated your own debts and were a Know-Nothing.

Q. I beg to say that is not a correct statement.—A. It is proximately.

Q. No, sir, it is not proximately; I made some speeches in Virginia for the Democratic party, but I expressly declined to say one word about your State debt question, alleging that it was a matter of entire State interest, and I only appealed for the Democracy of the State of Virginia in a national point of view.—A. You were a North Carolina Know-Nothing and a National Democrat.

Q. I was a Democrat, and any man that says that I interfered with the debt question of Virginia does not tell the truth.—A. I hope you don't mean to be rude, governor.

Q. I do not mean to be rude, Mr. Wise, but I only want to repel that intimation that you made once before.—A. I only want to say that you made a very strong speech for Mr. Daniel. I was speaking for Cameron, who was a Readjuster, and you were speaking for Daniel.

Q. I think you are mistaken; that was in the campaign of 1880.—A. I beg your pardon if I am mistaken in the year. We met at Harrisonburg, and I remember you were speaking for the Democratic party of Virginia.

Q. Certainly, and if you had inquired of any dispassionate man you would have found that I said I sympathized with the Readjuster party of Virginia on the settlement of the debt question.—A. We have not called for sympathy.

Q. I know, and if that is the kind of sympathy that killed your party last fall, I hope you may have more of it. But that is all aside from the question. You have taken several opportunities of making personal flings at me which I think you are not justified in doing.—A. Certainly they were not ill-humored. I never intended to be rude; I can say that.

Q. It is well known that I was at one time a member of what was called the Know-Nothing party. I have never denied that. It is also well known now that I am where you used to be—that is, a Democrat.—
A. Never; I never was where you are.

Q. You never were a Democrat?—A. I was a Democrat, but when Democracy means negro killing I am not one.

Q. Well, I have never killed any negro myself, and I hope you never have.—A. No, sir; and I hope you will never be the apologist and defender of them.

Q. I have always been the defender of my own race when it comes into conflict.—A. And so will I. Whenever there is a legitimate conflict between the whites and blacks, as sure as God made me white I will be with the whites; but whenever I see the whites making a false issue I intend to declare war to the knife and knife to the hilt upon them.

Q. Do you think that the great majority of the Democratic party in Virginia had anything to do with this fight in Danville?—A. No, sir; but the great majority of the Democratic party of Virginia, unless they had been deceived and inflamed and infuriated to it would have reprobated this thing as much as I do, and I believe that the campaign pursued by the leaders of the Democratic party was the cause of it.

Q. You believe that that was the cause of it?—A. And I have no doubt that thousands of that party have been driven from it by the outrageous campaign that was waged. The people of Virginia are a conservative people and a brave people, and no conservative and no brave people would ever descend to the methods of the last campaign, or sanction them.

Q. Then they are neither brave nor conservative.—A. Who?

Q. The people of Virginia.—A. Yes they are; but they were deceived and lied to and practiced upon by a gang of scheming politicians who had no hope of being rehabilitated save by a false race issue.

Q. I think I understood you to say, or rather to admit, that there was a great deal of vituperation on both sides.—A. Undoubtedly there was. "E'en the poor wren, the most diminutive of birds, will fight, her young ones being in the nest, against the owl," says Shakespeare.

Q. Do you think the occurrence of Danville was the cause of the defeat of the Readjuster party in Virginia?—A. I have not any more doubt of it than that I am sitting here. It was represented all over the State as a negro uprising, and men were caught by the collars and asked, "Are you a white man or a negro? Don't you see the negroes are putting us to death? Now is the time to decide whether you are a white man or a negro."

Q. Is that result produced by the intimidation of the black race by white men?—A. It was produced by lying to the white men.

Q. You may have it that way if you desire, but I want an answer to my question, if you please. Not as to the means that were employed, but were the negroes by the Danville riot kept from the polls in the State of Virginia, or were the white people incited thereto to go to the polls?—A. Danville speaks for itself immediately. Now see: In Danville in the vote as between Massey and myself I received 841 votes, and he received 663. In 1883, at the election that occurred three days after the riot, there were but about twenty-seven negroes, I think, voted in the whole of Danville. I need not answer your question, therefore, as to Danville. I do not think the negroes of the State generally were intimidated, nor do I think that was the calculation. The Danville riot was not used to intimidate negroes; it was used to intimidate and deceive white men. The circular was addressed to the valley and the southwest, where it was distributed. The minds of those people were prepared for just such a thing as this by the circular. It was not used about Danville, or the black section; so when the killing occurred the facts, as will be shown here by telegrams, were sent forth representing it as a negro uprising, to tell these ignorant whites in remote districts that the negroes were on the war path; that they were tomahawking and scalping these whites. Telegrams came, "Save us; here we are standing in our doors with our guns in our hands to protect our wives and children from the negroes."

Q. Have you any extracts from newspapers, saying that?—A. I have a publication of saying that telegram was received there.

Q. Was not that praying them to save them from negro rule, not massacre?—A. No, sir. "Here we are standing in our doors with our guns in our hands to protect our wives and children from the negroes; we cannot vote; if you don't vote, we are irretrievably lost. It was represented everywhere, and used as a negro uprising, and an appeal was made to the white men that now was a war of races, when they must decide for themselves whether they would side with the whites or blacks.

Q. Do you think that reached all over the State in those four days?—

A. I not only think it, but know it; I know that all over the valley—I have circulars printed in Waynesborough and the southwest, and they were sent out by riders of the Democratic clubs, out into the mountains, and a man that had not been out of his county for twenty years was astonished by the news that the negro was killing the white people at Danville, and now was the time to come out.

Q. That, I suppose, you have no personal knowledge of; that is hearsay.—A. That is hearsay, undoubtedly; because I was in Richmond.

Q. I will ask you if the vote of your party was not greater at the last election than it ever had been before?—A. Yes, sir; the vote of the State of Virginia was 70,000 more than it had been before.

Q. Of which increase you received how much?—A. The vote for Cameron was 113,000, and our vote last time was 126,400. The vote for Daniel was 100,000, and the aggregate vote of the Bourbons last time was 144,000.

Q. Well, Mr. Wise, am I to take the constant repetition of an offensive term for your political opponents as an evidence of a desire for peace that your party exhibited?—A. No, sir; I do not want peace. I do not come with peace but a sword. My war against Bourbonism is as long as life lasts. I do not come here with kid gloves to say what I think of that party.

Q. And yet you complain of violence?—A. No; not of violence at all, but the unmanly, uncivilized, and false canvass, that is what I complain of. Do not mistake me. I do not ask quarter, and do not want any, and do not think I will give any on sober second thought. What I complain of is killing innocent colored men for political ends.

Q. Do you think this circular which I have just read was true?—A. What circular?

Q. The one I have read here, "vote for your freedom; vote for your free schools; vote to save your free ballot."—A. Yes, sir; that is true.

Q. You think if the Democrats carried the election all those things would be lost?—A. Why, governor, the proof of the circular is already at hand. The Bourbon party has already, to-day, placed the ballot in Virginia as a mockery. They have appointed their own commissioners and judges in every county of the State.

Q. Did not your party have all the judges?—A. We did not. The majority of the judges of Virginia were Bourbons at the time of the last election by actual fact, and I am prepared to produce, precinct by precinct, the name and politics of every judge in Virginia, to show that the Bourbon party had a majority in the State, that they had them precinct by precinct, and county by county.

Q. You think, then, that the freedom of this people would have been lost and their schools destroyed?—A. I regard that expression "freedom" as a figure of speech. It does not refer to whites or blacks; but it means this, that up to the time the Bourbon party were ousted the people were under thralldom; it was a political expression.

Q. Then that is not strictly true?—A. No; no expression about your freedom is strictly true, because we are all free, and nobody can take it away from us. A man that would have his freedom taken away from him don't deserve it.

Q. "Do not believe Funder lies and listen not to their promises."

That is a tolerably rough expression to be used to a man's political opponents.—A. Yes, that is rough; but when our party was called the shirtless riff-raff and niggers on every stump we could not help calling the other liars now and then.

Q. Now, what proportion of the taxes does the Readjuster party pay in Virginia?—A. I cannot answer you that question except in a general way. I am satisfied that in large sections of Virginia the Readjuster party pays the great bulk of the taxes. I will take, for example, the county of Tazewell, which is one of the Readjuster counties in Virginia, where I received 1,000 votes to Massey's 300, and the white population is almost solidly Readjuster. We carried the counties of Rockingham, Shenandoah, and Page, the old tenth legion of Democracy, where there are no negroes and the small property-owners pay the taxes. I have no doubt the Readjuster party pays a very large proportion of the taxes, although in a city like Richmond and a city like Danville, where the great majority of the white people and property-owners are Bourbons, the Readjusters pay nothing by comparison.

Q. Well, in a general way, could you state about what per cent. of the taxes are paid by each party?—A. I could not, because there is no tabulated statement of the politics of tax-payers.

Q. Of course not.—A. But I undertake to say that in the counties of Rockingham, Shenandoah, Page, in the county of Tazewell, and in counties of that sort, in Wise, Dickenson, Buchanan, Scott, that the Readjusters pay the majority of the taxes. I will not apply that to Shenandoah and Rockingham.

Q. Still you cannot say which party pays the taxes?—A. Yes; I unhesitatingly say that take the whole State through the Bourbons pay the large majority, but I never heard that our form of Government was a moneyed aristocracy. I thought it was a free Democracy, and I never heard that in time of war a poor man was any less exempt than a rich man.

Q. But in answer to this charge that it was a combination of riff-raff, &c., could you make no allowance for that being a figure of speech as well as the other?—A. Yes, I made allowances for that, but in my experience I confess I became very much embittered for myself personally. I do not claim to be more nor less than mortal, and I think it hard for a man who has lived in the State as I have, and who has tried to live and have lived as honorable a life as any man in Virginia, to have it made a hell on earth, as it has been for the last three years, where no relation of life has been sacred from the breath of Bourbon calumny and falsehood.

Q. But you admit that you have contributed your share to this bitter state of feeling?—A. I admit that I have stood my ground, with my back to the wall and sword drawn, and said that I would cleave the man who came in reach of it from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot; and there I stand now.

Q. Did you hear of any violence whatever on the day of election in Virginia?—A. No, sir; I did not. Richmond was singularly quiet where I was. I had intended to speak in Manchester the night before, but I was warned that there would be a riot, and telegrams came up from Norfolk two hours before the meeting requesting that the particulars of the riot be sent to the Bourbon paper there when it occurred, and I thought I would not go. I did not care about being killed in Manchester. I would not mind dying in some places, but I rather preferred not to die there.

Q. Did you see those dispatches?—A. I have them.

Q. Those that were sent up from whom?—A. From the editor of the Norfolk Virginian, and not only that, but they had a procession after their victory, in which they had a transparency, "It is a Wise man that knows when to come to Manchester." It was all arranged. I have no doubt we would have had a very disgraceful scene if I had gone over there.

Q. Did you hear of any weapons being displayed in Virginia on the day of election at the polls?—A. No; I was at one precinct in Richmond where there were twelve policemen; in the black precinct; the Jackson ward. I had a weapon that day; that is the first time I carried a pistol for many years by day, I think. I did not know what was going to turn up, and I did not want to be shot without having some share in the sport. It was singularly quiet in Richmond. The people of Richmond are a very well-behaved people, and it is a very orderly town. There is a great deal of political bitterness, but it is not a violent place at all. It is a very decent community; no better anywhere. You never hear this sort of thing there.

Q. You say you have those telegrams?—A. I have not got them here. I have them so I can produce them if you want them.

Q. I will be obliged if you will produce them.—A. I have a statement here of the occurrence from the editor himself, who admits that he sent the telegram, but he claims he heard it from a man who came down on the Chesapeake and Ohio train from Richmond. I will produce them. I have got the printed account, but not the telegrams.

[From the Norfolk Virginian.]

On Monday night, November 5, a gentleman who had left Richmond in the afternoon of that day by Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, called at the office of the Virginian about 10 o'clock, and asked if any news had been received from Richmond. He said that when he left Richmond there was a great deal of excitement on account of an expected difficulty at Manchester, because of the report that Capt. John S. Wise proposed to go to Manchester at the head of the procession of negro Coalition clubs, in order to address a meeting at that place. [What egregious nonsense.—Whig.] We immediately telegraphed our correspondent:

"Understand disturbance and riot expected in Manchester to-night if John Wise speaks. If any, send particulars as early as possible."

We received in reply, in connection with other news items, the following:

"There is no chance for a row in Manchester, or anywhere else to-night, apparently."

We have no disposition in the world to question this statement, and we give it place to speak for itself. However, both on Saturday afternoon and Monday night it was the subject of much comment in this office how anybody in Norfolk was so well apprised (apparently) of matters of which we had just received a rumor, in one case, and of which we had not heard at all, in the other.

Q. You used an expression, I believe, in reading your extracts, about the malign influence of the papers?—A. Yes, sir; that is Mr. Keiley's address.

Q. I ask you if that was not a quotation?—A. No, sir; I have not designed to put it in as a quotation. I am not aware that that was a quotation, and I don't believe it was [examining extract]. No, sir; it is not a quotation.

Q. I will ask you if that is not well understood to have been the language used by Mr. Cameron, now governor, while he was editor of a newspaper at Petersburg, toward Mr. Mahone?—A. I don't think that that is so. I think you are confounding two or three different things. Governor Cameron, some fifteen or sixteen years ago, was editor of a Petersburg paper, in which, in a sentence about a railroad fight, I recollect he said, "A malign influence has operated upon the railroads of this State," but in this it says, "A malign influence has drawn the color line openly and plainly." Now, the expression of a "malign influence" in regard to a railroad was used by Governor Cameron. Anybody can speak of a malign influence, but in this connection Governor Cameron certainly never used any such expression.

Q. I will ask you, though, if that was not a phrase that had been accepted by the public and used without quotation, as we quote from Shakespeare or Milton?—A. Not at all. There was a railroad fight and Cameron was opposed to Mahone, and he referred to Mahone as a malign influence, and I have heard that thing quoted.

Q. Now, was not that expression used there toward the same man, meaning the same man, "a malign influence?"—A. I cannot attempt to be the interpreter of the Bourbon party; that professes to be a party that cuddles negroes with one hand and cuffs them with the other; a party that is debt-payer one day and head of repudiation the next; that boxes the political compass on every occasion, and does not hesitate to stultify itself on any, is certainly beyond my finding out. I know they intend this: I know they mean to get all the offices they can, and hold on to them as long as possible.

Q. I asked you a simple question, to which you might have said yes or no, and you have given us a stump speech.—A. Yes; but stump speeches are good sometimes, governor. I have heard you make some excellent ones.

Q. I think so.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You said something about the steps taken by the legislature of Virginia recently to defeat the freedom of elections and equality, &c., or rights; what steps do you refer to?—A. They have adopted an electoral commission scheme. They have three men of the selection of this legislature in every county, and those three men are to pick out the precinct judges. You observe that a partisan caucus of a partisan legislature selects partisan commissioners, and partisan commissioners are going to select partisan judges in each county, and by the time they get done by this arrangement they will have any sort of a vote they want.

Q. Are these three men selected in each county?—A. I saw a list of them in to-day's Dispatch.

Q. Are they all Democrats?—A. In the whole State I recollect two Readjusters—Statham, of Lynchburg, and Ross, of Gloucester.

Q. How have they been divided among the parties heretofore?—A. They have been appointed heretofore by the judges and county authorities [?], who are supposed to be more or less unpartisan, whether they are or not.

Q. They are required to be of opposing political parties?

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. The law requires that?—A. Yes, sir, as near as possible. In our town, for example, when there was a Bourbon judge, he appointed two Democrats and one Readjuster or Republican. Since we have had our judge he has appointed two Readjusters and one Democrat. Always under that system there is a man there of each side to watch and catch, even if he cannot prevent, cheating. They are passing a law now which allows these Bourbon members of the legislature—and a more violent and revolutionary body never was assembled—they have picked out who shall be county commissioners, and are passing the bill now, and will before they adjourn put the election machinery of the State completely in the power of the Bourbon party.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What other measure is there that you think has a tendency to do what you said, and perpetuate the rule of the Bourbon party?—A. Why they have turned out fifteen members of the legislature; every one members of our party; they have never turned out a Democrat yet. They have turned out every man that was necessary. They have turned out a Readjuster and put John Callahan in the senate without his making a contest, serving any notice, or taking any testimony, in order to preserve the two-thirds.

Q. You spoke of telegrams. I wish you would point out the published statement of the telegrams.—A. I will have to take some time to hunt it up.

Q. I will be very glad to have you look it up.

A.:

DANVILLE, November 5, 1883.

For God's sake help us with your votes to-morrow. We are standing in our doors, shot-gun in hand, trying to protect our families.

See these precious morsels from the "high morality dish" (Lynchburg News' supplement), cooked by the Democratic State committee of Virginia, on Sunday, the 4th, and served to the people of Southwest Virginia on Monday, the 5th day of November, 1883:

"RIOT IN DANVILLE.

"Mahoneism has worked out its legitimate result in Danville. Riot and bloodshed have come to pass. Inflamed and crazed by the diabolical speeches which have been addressed to them by the Mahone nihilists, the negroes have precipitated the bloody issue. * * * But how can those be fittingly characterized who have brought about this hellish business? * * * The horrors of the inquisition would be too good for them. * * * Let the incendiary devils be crushed beyond the hope of resurrection. * * * People of the valley and the southwest, the east calls upon you to come to its rescue; to help beat back the black wave which threatens to roll over it. * * * Arouse ye, and to the polls!"

"DEMOCRATS MAKE IT HOT.

"Make it hot," &c., says Fred. Douglass; and why have not Democrats the same right to 'make it hot' for white men, renegades from and traitors to their race, who vote with the negro party to-morrow?"

And again:

"A RIOT IN DANVILLE.

A negro mob fires on white men."

Q. You spoke something about the constitution giving the colored people equality of privileges.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You meant political, civil privileges I suppose?—A. Why of course.

Q. Has there been any effort on the part of Readjusters to interfere with social relations?—A. On the contrary, quite the reverse. The social problem is as distinct from the political problem as two things possibly can be. I have never had a negro to presume socially upon my political affiliation with him. I have always treated the negroes as they expect me to treat them. The fact that I agree with them politically does not mean that I invite them to my house socially. I could not do such a thing in Virginia and maintain my social standing, and there is no such condition there. Black members of the legislature have come to consult me as to politics; they go to the kitchen and send up their message and I went to the back yard to see them. There is no such thing as social equality in Virginia, nor can there be under our system. I take it Mr. Tilden does not invite into his parlor in New York all the wharf-rats and Democratic shock-heads who sustain his ticket; nor do they expect it. I have stood in the presence of immense throngs of negroes, where there were very few whites, and asked them the question: "Do you apprehend the character of this movement as one which seeks to mingle your blood with the white race? God has made you black and us white, and I take it for granted he understood what he was about when he did it, or he would have made us all yellow. Now I am in favor of leaving God's work as it is, and do you expect it to be otherwise?" The invariable cry was; "No, no, no; we don't expect it and don't want it." I have never seen in my experience in Virginia any effort on the part of negroes to assert social equality; and I will say this for the negro, that it is the humblest, the gentlest, the most tractable and least obtrusive race, in my opinion, under God's round sun to day; and the negroes of Virginia to-day if they had not been harried and badgered for their political affiliation by the Democratic party would not have been banded together. They are herded by the crack of the Democratic whip, and I hope to live to see the day when parties will exist there; when blacks and whites will be divided between the parties; but it never will come while this eternal ostracism exists. It is not worth while for this Congress to attempt to pass laws to punish this thing. The jury system of the United States is such that you only get two ward meetings in a jury box, part Democrats and part Republicans. And it is not worth while for the Government of the United States to send troops down there. The only hope for the alleviation of this is to hold these blackguards and murderers up to public reprobation and make them odious in the eyes of the nation.

Q. Now, there is one other point. I will ask you what is the position of the Readjuster or Republican, or whatever party you choose to call it, as to the rights of the negroes to free ballot and fair count and protection in their civil and political rights? What has been the position of the two parties?—A. The profession of the Republican party has been to desire that every vote in Virginia that was cast should be counted honestly, and that it should be put in without money and without price. They have claimed to be the peculiar champions of that. The other side have always denied and gainsaid it, but attempted to say that they were. But the Readjusters so far have been successful in holding that place in the minds of the colored people.

Q. They would have fair play and equal rights, so far as political rights were concerned?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Upon the debt question, is it not the fact that the Democrats have now adopted the precise ground taken by the Readjusters?—A. It is; they are better Readjusters than we are.

Q. Well, they adopted en masse the whole financial theory?—A. En masse, they have adopted the Riddleberger bill and have passed resolutions declaring it a final settlement. I have a curious piece of inconsistency by General Wickhan. In 1881 he had been a Republican, but came out and said he was for Daniel, because of his views of the debt question, as an honest man, and the Riddleberger bill was a piece of thievery. He went into that party and now he has made a speech on the floor of the senate acquiescing thoroughly in the Riddleberger sentiment.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. I will ask you if the Democrats do not put their acceptance on the ground of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States?—A. Ostensibly they do; but I have heard a great many of them say that they have played debt payers until they were sick of that, and would be whipped as long as they were debt payers and were perfectly willing to accept it.

Q. And that is simply ostensible that they put it on the ground of the Supreme Court decision?—A. Oh, yes; they said it was a matter of conscience, and it seems that the Supreme Court has furnished them with a corrected conscience.

Q. Well, there is about as much conscience among those men who wanted to pay it in whole as among those who repudiated it?—A. Yes, I suppose they have struck a general average; they paid about $20,000,000.

Q. Let me ask you one question about this new law relative to the method of conducting elections; does the law change the method or just the appointing power of the judges?—A. It changes the method.

Q. Of the election itself or of the appointing of the judges of the election?—A. It changes the source of the electoral machinery.

Q. Where was it under the old law?—A. In the possession of the judge; but he was directed how to appoint the judges.

Q. Who appoints the judges of election now?—A. Three commissioners of the county.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Selected by the legislature?—A. Selected by the Bourbon caucus of the legislature.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. With reference to the action of the legislature, which you have criticised to some extent, I will ask you if it did not seat Mr. Callahan?—A. They did.

Q. What is he?—A. He is as pure and simple a Bourbon as any man in Virginia, but he is sailing under the false colors of Republicanism.

Q. Well, he calls himself a Republican; you say he is?—A. Yes; he might stick a feather in the back of his head and call himself a bird of paradise, but that would not make anybody believe it.

Q. He has claimed to act all the time with Republicans?—A. No; he has acted with Dezendorf.

Q. Does not Dezendorf claim to be a Republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does General Wickham?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Now, in the Norfolk district were there not some Democrats put out?—A. Yes, sir; we elected two members of the house, and they turned them out.

Q. I say, was not a Democrat turned out?—A. No, sir.

Q. From the Norfolk district?—A. No, sir; who was the Democrat who was turned out?

Q. I don't know; I ask you the question.—A. No, sir; nor any one else; there has not been a Democrat turned out by this legislature.

Q. Was not there a Readjuster seated from King William?—A. No, sir; he had the certificate and was seated, and the man made a contest, and the only reason in God's world he was not turned out was that the man had not taken his depositions in time, and upon examining they found two other cases where our men had not taken the depositions in time, and they thought they would turn out two and let one stay.

Q. On however ridiculous ground, they decided in favor of the Readjuster, did they not?—A. Yes, sir; it was not any contest. Nobody thought anything of it.

Q. Did they not do the same thing with reference to the member from Gloucester?—A. Yes, sir; the man made a contest, but I suppose there is a limit to everything; those were such flimsy and absurd cases, and they had enough besides to turn out.

Q. At all events, in those cases, however contemptible the excuse, the men were not unseated?—A. No, sir.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 4, 1884.

Hon. J. A. WISE recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. You have stated to me that you desire to change your testimony in regard to one paragraph, which I will now read as it is written out by the reporter, and let you make your statement of corrections as you see proper. As reported you say:

The fact that I agree with them politically does not mean that I invite them to my house socially. I could not do such a thing in Virginia and maintain my social standing, and there is no such condition there. Black members of the legislature have come to me to consult me as to politics; they go to the kitchen and send up their message, and I go to the back yard to see them.

Now you can state any explanation you wish.

The WITNESS. I wish to say, in regard to that, without raising any point with the reporter upon the question, because I do not consider it material, that if I was represented as speaking in the plural the statement is incorrect. The reference that I made was to one individual, and the purpose of the illustration was to show that their being in official position did not turn their heads or make them demand more than when they were in private life. The instance that I referred to was this: My cook is the mother of a colored member of the legislature, and he came to visit her, I suppose, and I received a message that he wanted to see me. I went down to see him as described, and talked politics with him.

I wish to add to that statement that my testimony has been misapprehended in so far as it has been construed as attempting to make any reflection upon the colored people. They all know, and know very well, that, both officially and personally, my conduct has always been deferential and considerate with them.

Mr. LAPHAM. Your object was to show, if I understood you, that the blacks did not claim the right to ordinary social equality?

The WITNESS. Exactly. I wish to add moreover that, immediately upon reading the report of the testimony I saw the misapprehension that it was calculated to excite and came down here for the purpose of making my testimony conform to what I intended to testify, and the idea I intended to express. I have noticed that that has been represented as some effort to cook the testimony, and I am perfectly willing to stand upon the statement of facts with all the odium that the other side can make out of it.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Wise, in the National Republican, of this city, on Wednesday morning, the 27th, a reporter says that you acknowledged to him that the official report of your testimony was correct. Is that statement correct?

The WITNESS. No, sir. The reporter called to see me at Chamberlain's, where I was. He said that the National Republican had sent him to inquire whether I wanted to make any statement in regard to my testimony. At that time I had not heard that there was any controversy or excitement about it, and I said, "No, I do not." He didn't explain anything. And I said I suppose that the official testimony there will show what I said. I desire, however, to add in that connection that in looking over my testimony there are numerous errors of expression in other places, and it is the case in every report. I think there are not less than twenty places where, to make sense, I found it necessary to insert a word where words are missing. But at the time he asked me this question I hadn't seen—indeed the reporter had not written out his notes at all. But I didn't want to be interrupted at the time, and used the expression, "I suppose the reporter's notes will show what I said."

The reporter's notes, when I examined them, did not convey the idea which I wished to express.

Q. When did you see your notes and ask the reporter to make the correction?—A. I think it was on Wednesday morning. It may have been Thursday morning, because I never heard that there was any controversy as to what I had said until that time. The reporter had not written out the notes. The first that I saw of the testimony was when he wrote it. I think he wrote it out on Saturday. It was a very long testimony. When I testified I expressly asked the reporter to let me see my testimony as soon as he wrote it out and let me incorporate into it the tables and statements which I made, and that was the understanding from the beginning.

Q. One more question, I believe, is all I want to ask. How are we to understand you in relation to this correction? Do you say that the original statement which the reporter has is not what you said or that it is not what you wished and intended to say?—A. I say this: I don't care to make an issue with the reporter as to whether he took my exact words or not. I say that I don't believe he did. At the same time, pursuant to what had been the understanding from the moment that I testified, what he wrote down could never be my testimony until I had revised it, for the reason that before I spoke a word, as the reporter will inform you, I told him I desired to revise the testimony, to put in the tabulated statement, and that was the understanding.

I wish to add to that that I published a statement, which did not purport to be a copy of my testimony at all, or quotation; it was a general recital of the tenor of what had occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps I ought to say, in justice to Mr. Wise and myself, that when he first applied to me, I think it was on Thursday or Friday, I——

The WITNESS. It was Thursday, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. When he first applied to me I told him I thought he should be allowed the usual privilege of a member of Congress to revise his testimony in a matter of form, &c., but I didn't feel disposed to act upon it without the consent of the committee, and he then dictated what he wanted to say and what he wanted substituted, and I spoke to Governor Vance about it, and upon the suggestion of Senator Vance I concluded to put in what the reporter had given as your testimony, and allow you to make the correction and have both go together.

The WITNESS. The reporter will remember, doubtless, that from the beginning I expressed a desire to revise my testimony and put in the documentary evidence I referred to.

Mr. VANCE. Do I understand you, Mr. Chairman, to say that a member of Congress who becomes a witness before a committee is entitled to any privileges that any other witness is not entitled to?

The CHAIRMAN. No; but what I say is, it has been usual in all examinations that I have participated in, and in one or two in which I have been a witness, to allow a member of Congress to look over and correct phraseology or grammatical expressions; and as a member of the committee I have allowed that to be done, although as a matter of strict right, the ordinary way is to take the testimony as it has been given, and let the witness correct it afterwards. I will say that this course has been frequently followed by the Committee on Finance and other committees on which I have served, as a matter of justice to all witnesses, not only to members of Congress, but to others.

Mr. VANCE. Your experience has of course been greater than mine, and we might consent that any witness might correct a mere verbal inaccuracy, but where it was a change that changed the meaning in any way, it is necessary to come before the committee to correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. I will also say that when I was Secretary of the Treasury I was frequently summoned before the House and Senate, and I was allowed to take the testimony and examine it and revise it so as to be exact. That was not only for my protection, but for the protection of the Department.

Mr. LAPHAM. The rule in chancery was this: when testimony was taken "the foregoing being read to the witness he desires to state by way of explanation," and he made all the corrections he wished to make so as to have his final testimony express what he designed to say. That was the common law rule, well settled.

The WITNESS. I would like to add there one sentence. In so far as my testimony is sought to convey the impression that I made a discrimination between colored and white members of the legislature as a rule in their communication with me, it does them and me injustice. I have always treated an official call upon me by whomsoever made without any discrimination whatever, and always expect to do so.

J. D. RAULSTON sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What office do you hold in the Government of the United States?—Answer. At present I hold the office of collector of internal revenue.

Q. Since when?—A. Since the first of March, 1883.

Q. How long have you lived in Danville?—A. I have been in Danville about seven years.

Q. Are you a native of Virginia or from the North?—A. I am a native of New York.

Q. When did you first move to Virginia?—A. In 1865.

Q. Have you been identified in interest, in property, &c., with them since; did you marry there?—A. I married in Danville. I have been a resident of Virginia constantly since 1865, was engaged in mercantile and manufacturing business in Petersburg, Va., for ten or twelve years, and have been a constant tax-payer and bona fide citizen of that State.

Q. You went to Danville about six years ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your business in Danville before you became collector; were you engaged in mercantile business there?—A. No, sir; I was never engaged in any mercantile business in Danville. I was deputy collector there.

Q. As such, did you become well acquainted with the people of that vicinity?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask if you at any time became a member of the municipal government of Danville; if so, when?—A. I was elected a member of the common council in May, 1882; that council went into office on the first of July following.

Q. Now, I wish you would look at what is called the Danville circular, and with your knowledge of affairs in Danville point out any false statements or errors or exaggerations contained in that circular. Just take them in your own way in the order in which they stand and point out such allegations as you think are false.—A. I have read the circular with some care, and find in it hardly any truth at all. I will go through the statements briefly. The first paragraph:

We, the undersigned, of the merchants and manufacturers and mechanics of the town of Danville, Va., earnestly request that you will permit us to lay before you a few facts from which you can form some idea of the injustice and humiliation to which our white people have been subjected and are daily undergoing by the domination and misrule of the Radical or negro party, now in absolute power in our town, and under the leadership of William Mahone, seeking to extend and perpetuate its power all over the commonwealth.

In answer to that, and as to its being under negro rule, I desire to present the list of the names and politics of the persons who were elected in that election.

Q. That is the election of 1882?—A. The election of 1882.

Q. That council is still in existence?—A. No, sir; I will explain how it came to be elected. If desired I will give the names.

Q. You had better give the names.—A. There was elected at the election of May, 1882, for mayor, John H. Johnston, an Independent in politics, pretending to belong to neither party. James Wood, sergeant, an Independent, as he has voted with both and has run on both tickets; that is an office corresponding to that of sheriff. William Rison, clerk of the court, Democrat. Thomas Hamlin, commonwealth attorney, Democrat. William E. Boisseau, commissioner of revenue, Independent. P. R. Jones, treasurer, Democrat. Walter Luck, justice of the peace, Coalitionist. Wesley Jones, justice of the peace, Coalitionist. W. P. Robinson, justice of the peace, Democrat up to that time.

Q. State in regard to those persons when you come to them any that are colored.—A. Only one was colored whose name I have reached, and that is Wesley Jones. Members of the common council: J. D. Blair, Democrat; Albert Gerst, Democrat; John C. Goarrent, Democrat; T. N. Jordan, Democrat; R. A. Arrington, Independent; E. J. Beckner, Independent, elected by Coalitionists; John S. Robertson, Democrat; J. R. Raulston, Coalitionist; D. F. Batts, colored, Coalitionist; Pires Lipscomb, Coalitionist; J. W. Payne, colored, Coalitionist; W. W. Swan, colored, Coalitionist; making a total, as will be seen, of 8 Democrats. That is, the common council is composed of 8 white men; 4 were declared Democrats, 3 had been generally known as Independent, but were put upon the ticket by the Coalitionists, and therefore so far as I know members of the Coalition party, 1 white Coalitionist, and 4 colored Coalitionists, so that the council stood 4 Democrats, 3 Independents, and 5 Coalitionists. I will say that one of these Democrats was upon the Coalition ticket also. This common council elected as its president, with power to appoint all the committees, J. D. Blair, a Democrat; Albert Gerst, president pro tempore, a Democrat; John A. Smith as clerk of the council and auditor, Coalitionist; Dr. Paulus Irvin as city physician, a Democrat; C. A. Ballow, city engineer, Democrat; J. D. Blackwell, city attorney for six months, Coalitionist, the remainder of the term R. W. Peatrof, Democrat; Benton Fields, colored, clerk of the market, Coalitionist; Squire Tolliaferro, colored as scavenger, Coalitionist; George Watson, clerk of the water committee, a Democrat; John C. Cox, chief of police, Coalitionist. The police force consisted of 9 members. The chief of police, whom I have just mentioned, was a Coalitionist; that left 8 privates, of whom 4 were Democrats and 4 Coalitionists, one of the Coalitionists only being a colored man, making 1 colored man out of the 9 policemen. There was 1 keeper of the white cemetery, Coalitionist; 1 keeper of the colored cemetery, Coalitionist, colored; R. W. Boisseau, constable, Democrat, making the total number of officials in the city, under the organization of that administration of municipal affairs, 44, of whom 20 were declared Democrats, 6 were Independents, 18 were Coalitionists, 35 were white, and 9 were colored. I will say that in the organization of the council under this administration there was appointed by its president: chairman of the finance committee, a Democrat; chairman of the gas and water committee, a Democrat; chairman of the street committee, a Democrat; I mentioned these as the three principal committees, as most important; the other chairmanships were divided miscellaneously; but the majority of all the chairmen were Democrats. I state this to explain the status of the common council; it is alleged here that it is now absolutely under Radical rule.

Q. Was that a majority of the officers, and an effective majority of the committees of the council were practically Democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they had the control?—A. They had practically the control at all times of the city government. "Now in absolute power in our own town, and under the leadership of William Mahone seeking to extend and perpetuate its power all over the commonwealth." I will say that I have good reason to believe that General Mahone knew nothing about even the political complexion, had no knowledge whatever of our municipal affairs. I have no reason to believe he had the slightest knowledge of it.

Q. Did he ever offer to interfere in your affairs in any way?—A. He has never been in Danville to my knowledge.

Q. You, as a member of the council, would have known it?—A. Yes. I have met General Mahone in Washington and other places, but have never heard him mention the municipal government of Danville. Next it is stated:

By the census of 1880, Danville contained 7,526 persons, of whom 4,397 were colored and 3,129 were white. The population of the town has increased greatly since that time, and the proportion between the number of whites and blacks has also increased, there being a much larger proportion of blacks now than in the year 1880.

I believe that paragraph is true. I believe the colored people have had a majority in that town for many years, and it was entirely in their power in the exercise of their right, if they had chosen to elect every officer in the town, but there never has been a time when they have chosen to exercise any such power.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Have they ever attempted it?—A. No sir. The next paragraph says:

The taxes actually paid by the inhabitants of the town for the year 1882, upon property, exclusive of license taxes for its corporate uses, exclusive of taxes paid to the State, amounted to over $40,000 in round numbers, of which only $1,206.63 were paid by the blacks, making $38,894 more of money paid for the support of the town by the white people than was paid by the negroes. Out of the total sum derived from taxation upon property, $2,000 were appropriated to the education of the negro children of the town—a sum, it will be seen, $794 more than the entire amount of tax paid by the whole negro population. So it appears that the negroes of the town do not contribute one single dollar to the use of the town, towards paying the interest upon its corporate debt, the improvements of its streets, the maintenance of its public works, the pay of its officers, and its incidental expenses of government. But, on the contrary, every dollar, and much more besides, paid by the members of that race in the nature of taxes is returned to them and applied to the education of their children.

I will say of this paragraph, that it conveys an erroneous statement of affairs. It misrepresents facts in this that the colored people pay their share of the taxes into the general fund. I have a list of the colored people and white which shows the exact amount of taxes paid by either, but every one of the colored people in the council was the owner of real estate that have paid their taxes as other people had and it goes into the fund. They don't pay the tax as a school fund separately. I have here the official report of the mayor, for the year ending 1882, showing that there was expended for schools in the town of Danville $3,015.10. It is alleged in this statement that two thousand of that was paid for the colored schools. It has never been the character of the legislation in that section that the colored people got even half, much less two-thirds of the proportion for the schools. I know that during the time of the administration of this council there were expended for the schools, or for the improvement of school property rather, an appropriation of approximately $30,000, of which $23,000 was expended in improving the school-houses that the white children attended and only about five or six thousand upon the colored school. I will say it was the intention further on to make a like improvement in the colored school but preference was given to the white and every improvement made upon their school-houses first although the chairman of the school committee was a colored man.

Q. I will ask you if the great body of the laboring men who do the factory work is not generally all colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do they not indirectly pay the taxes that are paid by the white people by giving them the means to pay taxes with?—A. Certainly.

Q. The effect of their labor, is to give value to the factories, and all the property on which they labor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the white people have acquired wealth, and it is the labor of the colored people that produces all this wealth, is not that so?—A. It is especially true of Danville, a manufacturing town.

Q. They do all the work in the tobacco factories, do they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any white men employed in the factories?—A. Only as managers and supervisors, not as laborers. The next paragraph states:

Up to the session of the last legislature the town was not divided into wards but voted as a single precinct; and in that way the council was generally kept in the hands of the white people. But the negro party, desiring to get complete possession of the town government, that they might share in the offices as well as levy upon the treasury of the whites whatever they thought proper, applied to the legislature and obtained an amendment to the town charter requiring that the town should be divided into three wards, and that four councilmen and one justice of the peace should be elected from each ward. From the localities in which the negroes had herded themselves, it was totally impracticable to so run the ward lines without creating two wards in which the negroes had a large majority, and this they and their white leaders knew. The result was that they elected seven out of twelve of their candidates for the council and their candidates for justice of the peace from each ward.

You see the fallacy of this is apparent in the first paragraph. If it was true that the colored people, with the Coalitionists, had a majority in the entire town, and voted in one precinct, it could not have been to their advantage to divide the town into wards, in such a manner, that by any possibility the other party could have got either of them, because they could have elected the whole at one precinct. It is true though that the colored people and the Coalitionists were not responsible for the division of the town into wards. The measure was adopted by a previous common council; a Mr. W. T. Clark, the first signer of this circular, offered a resolution in the previous council, Democratic, of which he was a member, urging that the members of the legislature from that district be urged to secure the passage of an act by the legislature dividing the city into wards, and that was unanimously adopted by that council, and urged and conducted throughout by the Democrats, the Coalitionists having no organization or undertaking in connection with it whatever.

Q. Then the statement that this was a scheme of the Coalitionists was false?—A. Entirely untrue.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Before passing that, and when the town was all one precinct, was not the vote too large for convenience for voting, was not the division necessary by reason of the large vote?—A. Oh, yes; and I think the adoption of the ward system is a much better one. I only say that the inference created by this paragraph that it was a scheme of the Coalitionists is not true. I will approve that paragraph, but I find no truth in it as it is.

Then began the deeds which have so humiliated us in our own estimation, and made our town, once so noted for wealth and enterprise, a byword for shame and reproach from one end of this land to the other. Wherever it was possible for anything to be done by the council or its magistrates that would irritate and wound the pride of the whites it was executed with the keenest relish.

I have never heard of any such action or intention on the part of the council, or any member of that administration. Indeed I will say that from the beginning until now I have never yet heard of one single specification of injudicious extravagance, or unwise legislation, or of any action of that common council save the one act of electing for the first year, electing one colored man on the police, and the second by the electing of two colored men.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That was the only point of objection ever made?—A. That is the only one I have ever heard from any source as to its conduct of its municipal affairs by the common council that they had one colored man for the first year; but here is the way they represent it:

Out of nine policemen—

It is alleged here—nine, the number is correct—

four negroes were chosen—

The fact is that for the first year one negro was chosen, and for the second year two negroes were chosen out of nine—two of them acting not only as policemen, but one as a health officer.

That is not true that we have elected a health officer from the colored police. The health officer is Dr. Irving, a white man, and a physician.

Q. Then there were not two elected out of the nine?—A. No, sir; there was but one elected out of the nine. And the other is weighmaster at the public scales, and clerk of the market. Now I will explain that that possibly is what is called here the health officer. He must be, before he can occupy that position, a physician in good character.

(The committee here took a recess and reassembled at 2 o'clock.)

By the CHAIRMAN.

Q. You will please proceed Mr. Raulston.—A. I stated that out of the nine policemen it was alleged that four were negroes. This is not true. For the first year one was chosen; and the second, two. It is said that two of these, one was elected as health officer, which is not true. The other weighmaster and clerk of the market. I will say that the clerk of the market, who is nominated in the council for the office to which he is selected, was nominated by one of the Democrats and that neither he nor the scavenger I suppose may be alluded to as one of the colored policemen; they are not policemen in the proper sense. It is true that in connection with their office it has been the custom to give them police powers, so far as the duties of their office are concerned, but they don't serve warrants, stand in watch, answer to the call of the mayor, or in any respect perform the duties known as duties of policemen. It is stated that, "Out of the 24 stalls, and stands at the market, 20 are rented out by the council to the negroes." The ordinance of the town required that the stalls and stands in the market shall be put up at auction by the committee on market and hay scales, and shall be rented at auction, and at such auction white and colored and all other classes have an equal opportunity.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. They are rented to the highest bidder?—A. Rented to the highest bidder, and no partiality was shown by the council or committee in this particular.

Q. None could be, could there?—A. None could be.

The scenes about this important and attractive institution (attractive in all cities) will give any person visiting the town a fair idea of the general state of the government under the negro rule. The market, once occupied in all its stalls by polite white gentlemen, with their clean, white aprons, and the most enticing meats and vegetables upon their boards, is now the scene of filth, stench, crowds of loitering and idle negroes, drunkenness, obscene language, and petit thieves. The white men have been driven out and forced to take up private places for vending their meats and vegetables, and the public market, erected by the money of the white people and intended to be occupied by men at least courteous and cleanly, has been converted to the use of squalid negro hucksters, and presents a spectacle of loathsomeness positively repulsive to any person who has the least idea of how a market should be kept.

I will say that I have visited many cities and many markets, and I have never known one better kept than that of Danville, so far as my observation goes. It is thoroughly swept and cleaned—washed with water—the stalls and ground. This was required to be done by the clerk of the market, who had supervision. I am informed by the clerk of the market that his records show that during the time the Coalitionists are charged with being in charge of the council, from July, 1882, up to the 3d of November, 1883, that there were as many white butchers as there ever were at any time before, and all the butchers in the market who had butcher stalls were white, the colored people having a majority of the stands for the sale of vegetables.

Q. That paragraph, then, you characterize as wholly a misrepresentation?—A. Wholly a misrepresentation of the facts.

Q. And wholly unjustifiable?—A. Unjustifiable entirely.

Q. Let me ask one question before passing that. Is there any point upon which that circular could have spoken, better calculated to produce excitement than a statement of that character?—A. Probably not, because the market is an institution patronized and attended by many citizens of the town—nearly all. They go there to get their supplies, and a market to be kept in that condition, as it is represented here, would be an outrage upon the community, and if these facts were true the community would be outraged.

Q. The health and comfort of the community are involved in it?—A. Yes, sir.

The whites of the town are powerless to prevent this outrage upon their rights.

In the first place, I allege that it was no outrage; no outrage existed. As to their power to prevent it, the majority of the officers of the town were white, and there was no legislative power in the town, except four colored men against eight white ones.

Q. All the capitalists would have to do to obviate that, if it were so, would be to overbid the colored men?—A. That is all.

The council, which has the power of regulating the conduct of the market, is presided over by a carpet-bagger—J. B. Raulston—Mahone's collector of internal revenue for the Danville district, and the patronage of his Federal office enables him to control the council with the same undisputed power that the general does his party. Raulston is exceedingly offensive to the white people, and it is well known he takes no pains to carry out any of their wishes. Two of the negro members of the council hold positions under him at the custom-house, and they are as obedient to his will in the council as they are in the revenue office.

As this alludes to me, as to exactly what estimation these people hold of me, I can only say that, prior to my connection with the Coalition party, I had the honor to be recommended for a very high office, which was signed by almost every business man in town, and my merits were set far above my own estimation of them, and I am sure that personally I have never heard a word said against me. As to being Mahone's collector of internal revenue, General Mahone had very little to do with my being collector of internal revenue. I am informed that I was recommended for that position by the Commissioner as being in the line of promotion in my district, in which I had served as a deputy. I was a member of the council before I became collector, or had any patronage whatever to dispense. The two members of the common council colored were employed by the internal revenue office; were both members of the common council before they were employed in that office. One of them is a clerk competent and efficient, and considered an educated man. The other was not in the internal-revenue office, but held a position as one of the assistant custodians. He was janitor, so designated, and his duties were to supervise the general current of the building and to oversee the labor that was conducted in the building, such as the messengers, firemen, and other laborers.

Q. By whom was he selected?—A. He was designated by me and appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Both of these men I will say were members of the common council before they were employed in that office, were both bona-fide citizens of the town, and both, I am informed, owners of real estate.

Both elected to their offices?—A. Both elected. The next paragraph:

It is seen, therefore, that our town is practically in the hands of and actually controlled by the officers and slaves of the Federal Government, not one of whom has a dollar's worth of visible property within its limits, and this too by the most shameless usurpation; for the constitution and law of the State and the Presidential order by which the Norfolk postmaster was removed, all declare that such officials shall hold no office under the government of this commonwealth. The Federal Government, through its internal-revenue collector and the negro councilmen hired by him to scrub the floor of the custom-house and make incendiary speeches against the white people of the town, make our town laws, levy and collect our taxes, distribute our money, and elect negro policemen to watch our town while its inhabitants are asleep. This revenue collector declared, when he was elected president of the town council, that it was his intention to use the patronage of the council to build up the Radical negro party.

I can find no truth in this paragraph. It is said here, alluding to the Federal officers, "as the slaves of the Federal Government." I think I need not say in this Capitol that the Government has not any slaves of that kind, or any other.

Not one of whom has a dollar's worth of visible property within its limits.

My information is that out of the twelve councilmen, nine of them were owners of real estate. Both of the colored men that were employed in the internal-revenue office were owners of real estate. For myself I own no real estate in Danville, but I have a comfortable home, well furnished, and plenty of visible personal property. It is true that I am not as rich as I was before I went into office, and that is a misfortune which I cannot remedy at this time. It is alleged that

The constitution and law of the State, and the Presidential order by which the Norfolk postmaster was removed, all declare that such officials shall hold no office under the government of this commonwealth.

I have a letter from the highest legal authority in Virginia, the attorney-general, stating that there is no statute in Virginia laws which prohibits a Federal officer from holding the position of member of the common council, and that that office is not intended to come under the purview of the law which provides that an official receiving pay from the Federal Government cannot also hold an office of pay or profit under the State government.

Q. That that did not apply to municipal offices of cities and villages?—A. No, sir; it does not, except those possibly who draw pay.

Q. Do not the councilmen have any pay?—A. No, sir; the councilmen draw no pay.

The Federal Government, through its internal-revenue collector and the negro councilmen hired by him to scrub the floor of the custom-house and make incendiary speeches.

I never heard of either of these men making incendiary speeches. On the contrary, all that I have ever heard them say has been of a very conciliatory character. As regards their own people I have often heard them advise them if even knocked down by the white people to get up and run away rather than to make any resistance and bring on a disturbance. I will further say that under no circumstances and at no time have I ever used or attempted to use my official influence as a Federal officer to regulate or control the vote of any man in the common council.

Q. Or their action?—A. Or their action.

This revenue collector declared, when he was elected president of the town council, that it was his intention to use the patronage of the council to build up the Radical negro party.

No such utterance has ever fallen from my lips. When I was elected president of the council it was in July, 1883. After Mr. Blair, a Democrat, had been president of that council for one year, he resigned from that position. I myself nominated for election every Democrat in the common council, and every white Coalitionist, for the president of the council, not desiring to hold the position myself, and indeed desiring very much to avoid it. It was declined by each of them, and only after each of them had refused did I consent to occupy the position.

Q. Was that before or after your appointment as collector?—A. That was after I was appointed as collector.

Q. Did they all consent to your election?—A. I was unanimously elected.

Q. Did you ever hear any of these complaints until you saw them in that circular?—A. Not one of them.

It was his intention to use the patronage of the council to build up the Radical negro party.

The most that I have ever said upon this subject was, upon one occasion I said to Mr. Blair, when discussing the electing of some parties, that I did not desire that this should be a political matter, this conduct of municipal affairs; but I should, however, regard it as just that that party which is held responsible for the conduct and administration of the town should certainly share the patronage, and that it would be my action if two persons came up equally skilled for the place I should prefer the Coalitionist, but if two persons applied and a Democrat were a better man, and I thought he would serve the interest of the city better, I would unhesitatingly vote for him as against a Coalitionist.

Q. That is, you would not follow partisan dictation or partisan influence in the selection of those municipal officers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Would not be governed by party in that opinion?—A. No, sir.

The police court of the town is another scene of perpetual mockery and disgrace.

I never heard of that until I saw it here.

There the most active justice is a young negro named Jones, who first became famous by seducing a girl under promise of marriage, and was only saved from conviction upon indictment by the evidence of his partner in a junk-shop, who swore that he had had criminal intercourse with her before Jones.

I know nothing of those matters at all. As the man was acquitted I suppose it is like other cases of that kind.

This court which, before the negro régime came into power, was only open a few hours every morning, is now practically open from morning till night, and nothing but actual observation can convey the least idea of the travesty of its transactions. Malice and partiality, whenever there is a motive, and ignorance, in its absence, are the rules of decision. The officials of the court, justices and policemen, co-operate in the work to make fees, and every act, or word, or deed of the citizen, whether atrocious in its character or too frivolous for the law to take notice of, is brought before a justice, and the party, if not fined, is required to pay the costs; and if there is more than one party the cost is doubled, and both parties made to pay costs. White men are arrested for the most frivolous acts by negro policemen and borne along to the mayor's office followed by swarms of jeering and hooting and mocking negroes, and tried, fined, and lectured and imprisoned by a negro justice, and then followed to the jail by the same insulting rabble.

I have never heard of such an instance. I inquired of the mayor and chief of police after seeing this circular whether there was any foundation whatever for it, and what was the custom in regard to the arrest of persons, by the colored policemen. They said that the colored policemen prefer to serve warrants upon persons of their own color only, and that they were never called upon to arrest white people, except in case of absolute necessity. As to the court being kept open at unusual hours, I have understood that it is customary for magistrates of all parties to attend at the court when their services are required.

Q. Now, as to the adminintration of Mr. Jones as a justice; what have you to say to that?—A. I know that he is more than ordinarily intelligent, and an efficient officer. I have never heard him censured by the colored people except the fact that they thought he was more severe upon them than the white magistrates were. I am not familiar enough with the course of his decisions to know whether any of them have been reversed, but I never heard of any that had.

Q. Do you know that the white people prefer to go to him rather than to the other magistrates?—A. I have heard it said by white people that they regarded him as fair as any magistrate in town.

Q. Those complaints were all unknown to you until you read them in this circular?—A. Until I saw them in the circular.

At the October court of this year two of the party magistrates were removed from office by the judge of the hustings court, one for embezzling the money of the commonwealth, the other for "causes sufficient to the court," and one of them has fled the town to avoid indictment.

I will say that both of those men were removed by the judge of the hustings court.

Q. And two Democrats appointed in their places?—A. And two Democrats appointed in their places. That one of these men, the one who fled to avoid indictment, was elected in the third ward of the town, where the Democrats have the majority. The other was never elected, but appointed by the court to fill the vacancy.

The notoriety which this state of things in our town has produced has attracted to the town large numbers of idle and filthy negroes from the border counties of North Carolina, and from Halifax, Mecklenberg, and Charlotte, Va. Although there is a law against vagrants, they are never disturbed. They infest the streets and sidewalks in squads, hover about public houses, and sleep on the doorsteps of store-houses and the benches of the market place. They impede the travel of ladies and gentlemen, very frequently forcing them from the sidewalk into the street.

I will say in general for the colored people of Danville that their conduct and their general deportment will compare favorably with that of the laboring classes of any city I know of. It is true that, in consequence of the preponderance of colored people there, especially market days—Saturday especially, there being a great throng in the streets—it is extremely difficult to avoid sometimes being jostled on the street by them, but no instance has come under my observation in which any intentional insolence, or any insolence or intentional interference with the passage of ladies or gentlemen on the street has occurred.

Negro women have been known to force ladies from the pavement, and remind them that they will "learn to step aside the next time." In several instances white children have been struck by grown negroes. We know of several cases where the lie has been given to a white lady to her face by a negro. It is a very common practice for the negroes who are employed about our houses to allude to white ladies and gentlemen as men and women and to negroes as ladies and gentlemen. This is a practice almost without exception with the negro women. They do it to irritate and throw contempt upon the white race. A short time since, when the town was in great excitement over the murder of a respectable gentleman and farmer of Pittsylvania County, in his wagon, while on his way home from Danville, by three negro highwaymen, a negro man in the town stood in the center of a crowd of his friends, with a pistol exhibited on his person, and with threatening gestures and loud oaths declared that he wanted to "start a row with some d——d son of a b——h of a white man that he might kill him."

I inquired of the mayor and of the chief of police whether or not any complaint had ever been made to them of misconduct of the colored people in this particular. They told me they had never heard of it.

Mr. VANCE. I do not think the answer of these gentlemen is evidence here.

The CHAIRMAN. The chief of police was a Democrat, was he not?

Mr. VANCE. No matter if he was, it is not evidence.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is an official inquiry. I think it is proper; he has inquired of the chief of police for official information. I think it is competent; it is seeking official information; it is not mere hearsay.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is not beyond the limit of a fair statement. The chief of police is a person who could be easily had here if this is disputed, I suppose. Who is the chief of police?

The WITNESS. That is, chief of police at that time; I think he is living there still.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is proper.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You were interrupted. You said you inquired of him?—A. Yes, sir; they both replied to me that they had never heard of such an instance except once, and that was from the editor of the Danville Times, and they inquired of him, and he said he knew it only by rumor on the street. I will say this about a farmer being killed by negro highwaymen is true that a gentleman was killed——

Q. We have got all of that he was tried and hanged?—A. Yes, sir.

A few nights ago the negroes were very indignant because they heard of the earnest work that was going on by the whites, to register all of their voting strength, and called a meeting, which was addressed by an incendiary negro named Pleasants, a postal agent, and one of the town councilmen, hired at the custom-house, and they passed a resolution requesting the governor to have Federal troops sent to our town on election day to intimidate the white people at the polls.

I have never heard of such a resolution nor of such speeches, and in my relations to the party and its management there, it is hardly possible that it could have occurred without my knowledge. I am perfectly confident that no such resolutions were ever passed, and no such speech was ever made.

They have also a scheme to amend the town charter if they elect the legislature this fall, and take into the town a large negro settlement, outside of the town limits, called Jacksonville, by which they will get several hundred more black voters, and then it will be impossible for any white man to hold office in the town. We know this is their plan.

I never heard of such a thing until I saw it in this print.

It is well known that hundreds of the North Carolina tobacco raisers who live within a few miles of Danville, and used to sell their tobacco in our market, now go five times as far to a market in their own State, on account of the negro rule in our town. At the negro meeting referred to above, one of their speakers said they did not want the people of North Carolina to come here anyway.

I never heard of any complaint on the part of the North Carolina farmers, and if they did complain of anything in Danville it is beyond my knowledge. This proceeds :

Now, fellow-citizens of the Valley and Southwest, we cry out to you in our affliction to deliver us from this awful state of humiliation and wretchedness. We know that, as a rule, the cries of the wretched make but little interruption of the general progress of things. The sun rises and sets all the same, and the work of the Government, and the work of the feast and the torture goes on with exactness and tranquillity. But we appeal to you by that sympathy which constitutes the bond of union between honorable men struggling in the cause of freedom, to help us throttle this viper of negroism that is stinging us to madness and to death, by voting against the Coalition-Radical candidates, who are yelling and screaming with delight at the prospect of fastening its fangs into us forever.

I know of no such purpose, but this is characteristic of the speeches and writings of the people of that time. The remedy for all evils seems to be that the people should vote the Democratic ticket.

We appeal to you to say, do you think it is just that we should contribute every cent to the maintenance of our town, pay our town debt, and appropriate not only all the negro pays in the way of tax, but much more besides, of our own money, to the education of his children, whom he raises upon our money to be our bitterest enemies, and then let him have possession of our town government, too? Is it right that the negro should have all this given him, and then be allowed to control our offices and plunder our treasury besides?

If the negroes have controlled the town of Danville it must have been on the theory that four votes can beat eight. There were 8 white men in the common council. If there was any intention on the part of the colored people to rule the town as such, they have never manifested it by any action of theirs.

It is an injustice at which we know your humanity will revolt.

It is the injustice of the frozen serpent, which, after being warmed into life by its benefactor, stings him to death.

Help us, fellow-citizens, by voting for the Conservative-Democratic candidates for the legislature, for unless they are elected we are doomed.

I hold as regards this circular it is simply a political canard. I should be astonished, and was astonished, that any list of names in Danville could have been gotten to subscribe to such a thing. This was not circulated in the neighborhood of Danville, but it is addressed here, published without date or without name, or place from whence published, but addressed to "the citizens of the southwest and Valley," where the population is a great preponderance of whites. That it was never distributed in Danville, and never sent there for a long time except copies which came from remote places, and very rare and difficult to get.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Where did you first see it?—A. The first copy of it I ever saw, it was sent to me from Richmond, with the request that I should examine it and make some answer to it.

Q. What day was that?—A. I think that was on Thursday before the riot. Such was my astonishment—my belief that the people of Danville must repudiate the paper—that I sought to get the document copied as a campaign document for the Coalitionists. I believed it would arouse the indignation of the people of Danville that the town was so slandered, but could not get it printed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you prepare an answer to that?—A. I did.

Q. (Handing a paper to witness.) I will ask you if this is your answer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that printed before the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get that printed?—A. It was printed in the Richmond Whig, and printed in the Spirit of the Valley newspaper.

The paper is as follows:

I observe that the Bourbon howl about "nigger rule in Danville," "Danville ruined by niggers," &c., is being taken up by the Funder press throughout the State; and lastly, I hear that about a car-load of Funder circulars are to be sent out, especially to the "white counties" of the southwest, and there to be suddenly thrown among the people at the polls, with a view to exciting the passions of the voters and securing their votes for the Funder ticket upon the cry of "nigger rule in Danville."

Of course it seems preposterous that intelligent people should be deceived by so transparent a fraud as this reported circular would, by the very manner of its distribution, be proven to be. I, however, think it proper to give the facts as to the "rule and the ruin" of Danville.

In 1882 the registration of Danville stood—whites, 686; colored, 857; colored majority 171, with a colored majority in the First and Second wards, and a white majority in the Third ward. There was elected in the common council from the First ward two white and two colored members; in the Second ward, two whites and two colored; and from the Third ward four whites—the Readjusters voting for three of them, though all were recognized as Funders. Thus you will see that the council was and is still composed of four white Funders, four white Readjusters, and four colored Readjusters—an increase of one colored member only over the number that was in the previous council under Funder rule. The Funders offered prior to the election to put three colored men upon their ticket if they would vote with them.

This common council, during the first year of its rule, elected one colored policeman only out of nine, and for the second year two colored policemen. The people elected one colored magistrate and two white magistrates; and the council one white keeper for the white cemetery, and a colored keeper for the colored cemetery; also a colored clerk of the market. All the other city officers are white, and several of them were recognized as Funders when they were elected, and have continued to act with that party.

So much for "negro rule!"

The charge of "ruin by negro rule" is equally preposterous. The town has never been in a more prosperous condition than it is to-day.

Within the past year and a half there has been more building done here than ever before in the same length of time. Real estate has advanced at rates from fifteen to twenty per cent. in value, and in many instances at the rate of one hundred per cent.

Within the last year several millions of pounds of leaf tobacco have been sold here, more than in any previous year, and at a higher average price than before received. In manufacturing, the tobacco produced here within the past eight months exceeds the amount manufactured in the whole of the previous year. Three large cotton factories have been started here, and business generally has kept pace with this extraordinary growth.

The schools have more teachers, more pupils, and better facilities than ever before. The taxes have been more promptly collected, and the expenses of running the city government reduced. If all this means "ruined by negro rule," Danville can stand it for some time, and I believe that several other cities would like some "ruin" of the same sort.

J. B. RAULSTON.

POSTSCRIPT.

DANVILLE, October 31, 1883.

Editor Spirit of the Valley:

DEAR SIR: A copy of the Funder circular alluded to in my letter of yesterday entitled "Coalition Rule in Danville," has just come into my possession. It is certainly a very extraordinary document, and were I not familiar with the methods resorted to by the Funders here to regain control of our city government, and to assist their party friends throughout the State, I should not have believed it possible that signatures could have been gotten to such a paper. The absolute despotism with which a Funder clique has come, by threatened ostracism, withdrawal of patronage, loss of employment, and even personal violence, to tyrannize over a large class of our people here, is something wonderful, and we need not be surprised at anything they may undertake.

I have only time to add to my letter of yesterday a brief notice of a few of the most glaring misrepresentations contained in the circular.

As to finances, the Funder predecessors of the present council had, by constant and long continued borrowing of money, incurred a bonded debt upon the city amounting to almost $600,000—the maximum allowed under the charter for which bonds could be issued—and had actually offered and paid three per cent. to all tax-payers who should pay their taxes before their term as councilmen should expire, and thereby secured in advance about $40,000 of funds belonging to the income of the succeeding fiscal year. The Readjusters found an empty treasury, and this state of finances to enter upon.

It is charged that the negro party petitioned the legislature for an act to divide the town into wards.

Mr. W. T. Clark, then a member of the council, the first signer on the circular above referred to, made a motion, which was unanimously carried, requesting the senators and members of the house from Pittsylvania County to use their influence to secure its passage.

It is charged that out of nine policemen four negroes were chosen,

The fact is, out of nine policemen, for the first year, four Funders white, four Readjusters white, and one colored man only; for the second year, seven white and two colored policemen were chosen.

The present counsel, as stated in my letter of yesterday, is composed of four Funders white, four Readjusters white, and four Readjusters colored, and yet this council, which is charged with a desire to rule and ruin Danville in the interest of negroes and Radicals, elected Mr. J. D. Blair, a Funder member, as president of the body with, power to appoint all the committees.

Mr. Blair resigned, after holding the office for one year, and I, the writer of this paper, was unanimously elected as his successor, after declining to accept until the office had been offered to and declined by every Funder member in the council.

The chairman of the finance committee for the first year of the present council was a Funder, and he was requested to continue to act in that capacity by the president, but declined.

It is charged that the president of the council is a carpet-bagger.

I have only to state that I have resided constantly and been a tax-payer in Virginia for eighteen years, and for the past six years have resided in Danville.

It is charged that the negroes have monopolized the market.

I am told by the clerk that there is not a colored butcher in the market, and that there are as many white butchers doing business there now as before the Readjusters had a majority in the council.

The stalls in the market are by law rented at public auction, and every man, white or black, has an equal chance to secure them.

It is charged that white men are dragged to jail by negro policemen.

I am informed by the mayor and the chief of police that it is the rule not to send a colored policeman to arrest a white man except in case of actual necessity, and that colored policemen prefer to serve warrants on persons of their own color only.

It is alleged that the police court is a place of perpetual mockery and disgrace.

Two of the three present magistrates are Funders, and one is a colored man, against whom the only complaint I have heard is that he is more severe upon the colored people than are the white magistrates.

Of the two magistrates removed, referred to in the circular, one was elected in the Third ward, where the Funders had a majority; the other was never elected, but was appointed by the court.

It is charged that negro women push white ladies off the sidewalk. I have asked the mayor and chief of police whether any complaint has ever been made to them of misconduct by colored people in this respect. They stated there had not, and had only heard of one such case, and that was reported in the Danville Times, and the editor of the paper on being asked for information stated that he only knew of it by rumor on the street.

It is alleged that a gentleman was killed by three negro highwaymen in the county of Pittsylvania. This is beyond the corporate limits of Danville, and neither of the highwaymen were known in this city. A negro was killed a few days before by a white man, but no one thought of charging the Funder party with the murder.

It is alleged that the colored people passed resolutions, calling on the governor to have Federal troops sent to our town on election day.

No such resolutions were ever passed or offered, and I am told by the colored speakers referred to in the circular that they never made use of any such language as is attributed to them.

If time permitted it would be an easy matter to further refute the wholesale and preposterous statements contained in the circular.

I feel assured that the intelligent and fair-minded citizens of the southwest and valley of Virginia will not permit themselves to be imposed upon by this Funder dodge, which, by the very time and circumstance of its distribution, as well as the inflammatory and fabulous character of its recitals, is proven to be a political fraud of the worst character.

J. B. RAULSTON,
President of the City Council of Danville.

Q. Did you try to get it printed in Danville?—A. I sought to get this original circular printed with a view to letting the people know how they were being misrepresented.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. There was no Coalition paper in Danville?—A. No, sir.

Q. Three Democratic papers?—A. Two.

Q. Do you know whether this original circular was printed at Danville?—A. I have never been able to find out where it was printed, but I have always understood that it was printed in Washington or Alexandria, certainly somewhere out of Virginia. I have never been able, though, by diligent inquiry, to find where it was printed.

Q. It was to all intents then a secret circular?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So far as Danville was concerned?—A. Yes, sir. The distribution was in the white counties, and, so far as I have been able to learn, it never made its appearance in any other section than the white counties.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have already stated that the Democrats did not complain of the city government, so far as you know.—A. No, sir; I have never yet heard a specification urged against the city government.

Q. You were not present on the day of the riot?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you now what was the cause of the Danville riot, so far as you can gather?—A. From the best information, and from my general observation of affairs during the recent political canvass, I have no hesitation in saying that the Danville riot would never have occurred but for the inflammatory character of the speeches that were made by the Democratic speakers, and the character of the articles in the Democratic newspapers. I was also prompted to that belief by report or common information, which will be developed here in testimony, of the preparation for that disturbance, at least of a vast amount, an unusual amount, of arms that were supplied there, by the rumors that were upon the street, by the general apprehension that our people entertained of it; and I will say that such was the state of apprehension among the Coalitionists of a disturbance that on one or two occasions I was called in to confer with some prominent Coalitionists upon what means should be adopted to prevent an attack upon them, either at the polls or prior to it, with a view to intimidate them from voting.

Q. What other evidence of the preparation for riot do you know? What do you know of the gathering of arms?—A. I have no personal knowledge of this, except that almost everybody seemed to be armed and carrying weapons, and as to the accumulation of arms in any given point, or of unusual supplies, my information is that there was a large and unusual quantity brought there, and some of them stored in places unusual for the keeping of fire-arms.

Q. Something has been said about the Coalitionists not voting on the day of the election. I will ask you if you know of any efforts to prevent their voting, on the part of the Coalitionists?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you hear any advice given not to vote?—A. There was none to my knowledge, and if there had been any such plan or purpose it could scarcely have escaped my knowledge.

Q. Were there any demonstrations of violence between the riot and the election?—A. No, sir; I never saw a battle-field more quiet than that town was after the affair was over.

Q. I will ask you whether there was a prevalence of crime in Danville and that county, and had been for years? What was the condition of it as regards crime?—A. I think its general reputation in that regard was worse than that of any community I have known.

Q. Have you seen a list of the crimes and violences committed there?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen such a list approximating eighty or ninety murders, attacks, maimings and all sorts of violences.

Q. As a rule who were those attacks made upon?—A. Well, I knew less of them in former times, but latterly, in the last year especially those attacks have been chiefly upon colored people, Coalitionists.

Q. How many crimes do you say have been committed?—A. I recollect to have seen the list—well, I will be safe in saying seventy, may be.

Q. Seventy crimes or violences? What difficulty was there in enforcing justice there; what did the difficulty grow out of to punish crimes?—A. I think popular opinion and prejudice entered into the mind even of juries, to that extent that fair decisions were not to be relied upon.

Q. Were any efforts made to punish these crimes that you know of?—A. In a few instances, but they nearly all escaped without punishment. I have known many of them not to be arrested, and others to be arrested and escape with very slight punishment, or to be acquitted. Indeed, I think there have been more persons killed or wounded in the immediate vicinity of Danville since the riot than there was during the riot.

Q. You say juries would not convict?—A. They have failed to do so.

Q. What were your previous antecedents in politics?—A. Up to the time of the Garfield and Arthur election, I had co-operated with the Conservative party. That party at the time of my action with it, was named first the True Republican party, then the Conservative party, and then finally the Democratic party, according to the different stages of its history and management, but an element became controlling in it, and I found no person, with the liberal views that I entertained, could find any congeniality of association with it, and I left that party.

Q. When did you act with the Coalitionists first?—A. My first act with that party was to vote for Garfield and Arthur; I became connected with the Coalition party during the campaign of 1881, in which the governor was elected. I for some time took no part in politics at all.

Q. You voted for Cameron for governor?—A. I voted for Cameron for governor, and have voted with the Coalitionists in their general elections since.

Q. Have any threats of violence been made against you that you know of?—A. I only know it by hearsay.

Q. None personally to you?—A. No, sir; I have encountered no personal violence; only hearsay and rumor.

Q. What led you to go to Danville in the first place?—A. I was offered a position in the internal-revenue office and went there to accept it. I will say in that connection, in connection with politics, that I was at that time known as a Democrat, and recognized as such, and it was some time after my going there that I took action with the Republican party. Politics had nothing to do with my going to Danville, as I was appointed as a declared Democrat.

Q. Did you serve in the Union Army?—A. I was commissioned as captain, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel of the Eighty-first New York Infantry.

Q. Did you have a brother also in the same service?—A. My brother was colonel of the Twenty-fourth New York Cavalry, which was in the Army of the Potomac, afterwards the Army of North Carolina, and so on; became a prisoner of war; was at Danville, and during an attempt of the prisoners to escape by overpowering the guard, the particulars of which I have never been able to get satisfactorily, he was killed, or at least he was wounded and died several days afterwards.

Q. That was during the war?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. I understood you to tell Senator Sherman that there were no white laborers in any of these factories?—A. No considerable number, as I am informed; there are white foremen and managers, but I think nearly all of the labor, the real manual labor, is performed by colored people.

Q. You do not say now that there are no white people?—A. No; but the large majority, the great bulk of the laborers, are colored.

Q. You think, then, it is to them that is due all the prosperity of the town?—A. I don't think the town could have prospered without the labor.

Q. Without some sort of labor?—A. Some sort of labor, and they have been the laborers

Q. Could it have prospered unless some men had had capital there, too?—A. They began, very many of them, with very small capital.

Q. They had some though, had not they?—A. Perhaps so.

Q. You do not want to give the colored laborers the credit for all the prosperity of the town, do you?—A. No, sir; not at all; I think there are men of great energy and business capacity, and industry there. I only say that the colored people have conducted largely to the prosperity of the town.

Q. Entitled to their share of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said this division of the wards was not the project of the Coalition party—A. I understood it to have been secured and accomplished by the efforts of the Democratic councilmen and citizens.

Q. That was dividing it into three wards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not Democrats want five wards instead of three?—A. I don't recollect; they may have, I don't recollect that.

Q. Was not that their petition that it should be divided into five wards, and they amended it in the legislature making it three?—A. I do not know the particulars as to the number of wards they desired. I only know it was the Democrats who applied for the ward system, and it was subsequently adopted through their efforts.

Q. You stated, with reference to the charge that not one of those persons, referring to the councilors, owned any visible property. You do not understand the circular to have included all the councilors, do you, but only those described as "slaves of the Federal Government"?—A. In either case my answer would be the same to it, that the majority of them do own property. All owned property that was available for process, and two of them were real estate owners.

Q. Did any of those colored men own property?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, a man would be mighty poor who did not own any property. Did they own any property that would be subject to execution?—A. They owned real estate.

Q. How much real estate is exempt from execution in Virginia?—A. I do not know.

Q. Were there any of them out of whom an execution could have been made?—A. I understood so.

Q. Which?—A. Mr. Swann and Mr. Batts.

Q. Do you know the value of Mr. Batts's property?—A. No, sir; I know he was the owner of real estate.

Q. Do you know whether he had any title for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is it not a fact that he had contracted for property and taken possession of it, but never had any title?—A. I know he was recognized as the owner of real estate and paid taxes.

Q. At what time?—A. I think before he was a member of the council and during the time, up to the time he went away.

Q. What did you say the value of real estate is in Virginia that is exempt from execution?—A. I did not state.

Q. What is it?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Is it $2,000?—A. I think the advantage of the homestead exemption might secure it.

Q. You think that is $2,000?—A. Yes, sir; but I am not aware that either of those had ever availed themselves of such a law; indeed I am satisfied that they have not.

Q. They would not have availed themselves of it unless they had come to sell his property, would they?—A. I think not.

Q. If anybody had come to sell his property, had he over $2,000?—A. I am not familiar with it.

Q. Then you do not know whether he had any visible property, subject to process of law?—A. The property was visible, but whether it was subject to exemption or not, I do not know.

Q. Although it was visible, you do not know whether it was his or not?—A. I presume it was; it was generally stated and understood by all that he owned it.

Q. You do not know that he had a title?—A. I never examined the books. I only know it was stated and denied by none.

Mr. LAPHAM. We understand that they cannot sell real estate on execution in Virginia any way.

Mr. VANCE. I suppose that although an execution might not be available to sell real estate, process would be.

Mr. LAPHAM. A bill in equity, I suppose, would reach it.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What did you have at the time you were a member of this town council?—A. I had my house furniture.

Q. You had no real estate?—No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether you had as much as was exempted by law or not?—A. Well, that would be a matter of estimation. I think I had, probably.

Q. What would your estimation be?—A. Of what the value of my property was?

Q. As to whether you had anything over and above the amount allowed you by law exempt from execution?—A. Possibly not.

Q. Are there not, in fact, some unsatisfied executions pending against you?—A. No, sir: I think not.

Q. Who were the other members of the council now besides yourself, in the custom-house, and yourself who were Coalitionists?—A. There was Lipscombe.

Q. What property did he have?—A. He had some real estate, I understand, upon his making application to the common council for the purpose of changing some wooden buildings on his property.

Q. Do you know anything about his real estate?—A. The same as I did of the others. I do not know anything of the owners of real estate by the examination of the books. I only know it by common report.

Q. The assertion is made by a number of respectable citizens that such and such persons had no visible property; you come here and contradict their statements. Now, do you know anything to contradict their statements?—A. I do know by common report that the persons I have named owned real estate.

Q. You do know by common report?—A. And general understanding.

Q. And general understanding. You do not know it in any other way whether they have the title to real estate or not?—A. I do not know that of any citizen in Danville.

Q. Then you come in here and confidently contradict gentlemen who affirm that they knew to the contrary?—A. Yes, sir; indeed I will say that anybody that signed this circular, I think they could sign such a statement.

Q. And you think, without knowing anything about it, that you are entitled to contradict it?—A. Yes, sir. I do not pretend to know anything about it. I do know that it was commonly conceded and generally known that these people owned real estate.

Q. A man's title to his property is made evidence by record in that State?—A. Yes. I have not searched those records.

Q. You do not know whether any of these men had real estate in law or not? You know that it is stated they own some?—A. That is my knowledge of all the property in Danville.

Q. Do you know the particular property owned by any one of these Coalition members of that council?—A. I have never surveyed any.

Q. Have you ever seen it?—A. I do not know that I have.

Q. Therefore you cannot speak as to its value except by common report and general knowledge. Can you speak by common report as to the value of the real estate owned by one only of these Coalition members of your council?—A. No, sir; nor of any other citizen of the town.

Q. You deny, as I understand, having ever said that you intended to so dispose of the patronage of the city government as to building up a Radical-Coalition party?—A. I never said that.

Q. What was it you did say to Mr. Blair?—A. I said to Mr. Blair—we were discussing political issues and political affairs; it was to the effect that when speaking of electing persons of that party—I stated to him that in the State of Virginia there could not be pointed out a town in which the Democrats had control, in which so liberal a patronage had been given to the Coalitionists as had been given by the Coalitionists in Danville to the Democrats. That my own view was, as far as practicable, we should keep politics out of our municipal affairs, and I stated frankly that my preference would be in case of two persons making application for common office, each equally competent, my preference would always be for the Coalitionist, believing that the party who was held responsible for the government of the town should always have its patronage, but that if two persons came up for an office, one a Democrat and one a Coalitionist, and the Democrat was the better man, and the city would be better served by him, I would invariably vote for him. I have since talked with Mr. Blair and stated that conversation, and he said it was practically as he understood it.

Q. You say you tried to get this circular printed and could not in Danville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You wanted it printed because you thought it would excite indignation and do the Democracy damage?—A. Yes, sir; I believed the people of Danville would recognize in it slander upon their town and repudiate it by their votes.

Q. Then you do not attribute the defeat of the party in Virginia to this circular?—A. I think it did them great good throughout the boundaries of the State, where there was not the opportunity to contradict it.

Q. Do you know where it was printed?—A. No, sir; I have never been able to find out.

Q. Why did you say it was printed in Washington or Alexandria?—A. Because that was generally stated to be so. I only stated it upon report. I do not undertake to say so from information.

Q. Did you try to get any copies of it in Danville?—A. Yes, sir; I have made a great many inquiries even since, and I think I got one copy besides the one that was originally sent me.

Q. Where are political documents usually kept and distributed in a campaign?—A. Those that are for local effect and for local purposes, I suppose are in local committees.

Q. Committees of the party, you mean?—A. Yes; and those that are adopted for use throughout the States, I suppose, are generally circulated from headquarters, as this was. This was taken up as a State document and published as such for the purpose of benefit throughout the white counties.

Q. Did you apply to the Democratic headquarters in Danville for copies of this circular?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you suppose you could have gotten them if you had applied there?—A. I reckon not; because some gentleman to whom I showed the first copy expressed surprise, and one of them frankly stated he did not expect they would be there. He was surprised that I had gotten it.

Q. Did not you issue a reply to this circular?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect the date of your reply?—A. I remember that I heard of the circular, and after diligent effort both in Richmond and Danville, I was unable to get the circular. I heard the general tenor of it, that there was such a one in existence, which was intended to be sent out subsequently and to be spread among the white voters before they could get an opportunity for information to the contrary. I accordingly wrote a letter for publication, published in the Richmond Whig, setting forth what my opinion was, the real character of Coalition rule in Danville, and published that, and then afterwards I received a copy of the circular. Then I answered it in detail in a few hours, before the departure of the next train by which I wished to send it for publication.

Q. When was this detailed answer that you speak of dated?—A. My recollection is it was a day or two before the riot. I think possibly Thursday. I can tell in a moment.

Q. The copy that I have was dated October 29.—A. Yes, I think these dates are correct, the 31st.

Q. You had heard of the circular and had written a general denial before you saw it, and that had been sent to Richmond and been published, and then you got a copy from Richmond and wrote the detailed circular by the 29th?—A. The 31st.

Q. This [referring to paper] is dated the 29th.—A. Is not the detailed answer dated the 31st?

Q. No, sir.—A. It is so in this copy.

Q. To whom was your detailed answer addressed?—A. One was addressed to the editor of the Richmond Whig and the other to the editor of the Spirit of the Valley.

Q. Which was to the editor of the Spirit, the detailed one?—A. Both alike. I mean a copy of the same letter was sent to both of them.

Q. Yes; that is correct. The postscript is dated the 31st. So your detailed answer, being dated on the 31st, would have been Wednesday, the postscript to your first answer, instead of Thursday?—A. Possibly.

Q. Well, that is not material; the date is important. There one is dated the 29th and the other the 31st. When you sent out this answer to the circular and published your answer to it, did you have any other names signed to it than your own?—A. No, sir; there were no other names signed to the circular. I signed it myself and mailed it.

Q. What other document was it that there were other names signed to besides yours?—A. There was a telegram sent to the Spirit of the Valley giving the names of certain persons whose names were published in connection with the circular by the editor of that paper as vouching for its statements.

Q. Can you give me the names of those?—A. I cannot recall them, but if I were to see them, if you have them before you, I will certify whether they are correct.

Q. I have them not before me. Did any of them disavow the authority that you alleged to have in signing their names to the paper?—A. There were cards published by two or three to say that they did not authorize their names to be attached to that paper. I will state the full circumstances in order that the answer may be complete. A friend of mine telegraphed from Harrisonburg requesting the names of some parties. I telegraphed him in reply that while there were plenty of people who would be willing to vouch for and sustain that circular, I did not like to expose them to the ostracism and injury that they would suffer, and there was nobody, unless an office-holder, whose business was independent of that influence, who could afford to sign it, and there were several gentlemen I met in my room that night to whom I showed the telegram for names, and several gentlemen were talked with and some were sent out to ascertain the names, and those names were all reported either by themselves or by some persons vouching for them that it was proper to sign their names, and their names were signed. None of them ever signed the circular.

Q. Were their names not attached by you to this paper?—A. No, sir; I sent the paper by mail. The names were sent by telegraph.

Q. The names were sent by telegraph?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't they appear published as having signed the paper with you?—A. I don't know the phrase. It was written by the editor of the paper. I don't remember the exact language, but it was in effect that they sustained the letter I had written.

Q. But three of them afterwards published cards denying that they had authorized the affixing of their names, and denying the truth of the paper?—A. No, sir; I did not so understand anybody to say. I have no recollection of a card to that effect. My understanding is, and my recollection is, that they denied the authority of placing their names there, and I have stated frankly that I didn't even see them. It was reported either by themselves, directly, or persons vouching for them, and that was the authority upon which those names were telegraphed. I signed the letter, and was the only signer, and sent it without expecting the signing of any other names.

Q. Were not the names that were sent on by telegraph as indorsing that paper employés in your office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not Mr. Lambkin discharged because he disavowed the authority?—A. No, sir. He stated to Mr. Marks, my chief deputy, that he was about to engage in business in Danville, or contemplated doing so ultimately, and he was afraid that if he allowed his name to stand in that connection—this was in my absence—that he would suffer by it.

Q. Did he state that to you?—A. He stated it to Mr. Marks, my chief deputy.

Q. I am asking you for your own knowledge of things.—A. Yes; and he also stated that he didn't expect to be able to retain his position, not in this connection, but the fact that he was an officer who had never been regularly appointed to the position he took, but was detailed for that position especially. His unfitness for the position had been conceded by himself, and I was looking for a substitute. I stated to him in conversation after this occurrence that, as I had learned from Mr. Marks that he proposed to engage in business, and could not stand the ostracism, or words to that effect, which would be the consequence of that—I stated to him in conversation after the paper was issued, that he having been in full co-operation with the Coalition party, as I understood a member of the committee, and actively and heartily co-operating with it, that his name had been affixed to that paper exactly in the sense in which, if a firm had been doing business and one of the partners was to sign a check, that he would not think it necessary to consult the other when he was considered a partner in the business, and expected his name was for use in that connection.

Q. You felt at liberty, then, to dispose of your employés' names politically in any way you saw proper, without consulting them?—A. I stated this: that if he feared the ostracism of people so much in case he should go into business, he would not be relieved of ostracism if he retained his position in the internal-revenue office, and his being in that office would prejudice him just as much; remarking to him, "You know I do not propose to discharge you because you do this act, which I consider very improper, but I tell you frankly, if you remain in this office, the ostracism will be as severe as if you stay in the party, and I would advise you to resign."

Q. And he did resign?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after the issue of this circular was it that he resigned?—A. I told him that if I were he I would resign by the 1st of January. On the 1st of January he tendered no resignation, but did not come to duty, and accepted my view of it and said he thought it was proper.

Q. Did you put any of this conversation or these facts that you speak of in the form of a letter to Mr. Lambkin?—A. No, sir, I did not; it was a matter of conversation.

Q. How long after Lambkin had written the letter, in which he disavowed the authority you assumed, was it that this conversation occurred?—A. I think two or three days, possibly, and that was sometime about the middle of December. He continued in office until the 1st of January. I don't recollect the dates definitely.

Q. You say you think this riot was caused by Democratic orators and newspapers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any Democratic orators speak?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who?—A. Well, I heard Mr. O'Ferrall.

Q. Where did he speak?—A. I heard him at Rocky Mount.

Q. Where is that?—A. It is in Franklin County.

Q. How far from Danville?—A. About 40 miles.

Q. That was the day the riot occurred, wasn't it?—A. Yes; but I speak of the general character of them. I heard very few speeches myself, but I saw them reported in the newspapers and saw the general tone and character of the Richmond Dispatch, Lynchburg News, and Lynchburg Campaign, I think it was.

Q. What was the general tone of the Dispatch?—A. It was less denunciatory than the Lynchburg News.

Q. You mean the Dispatch? I mean the general tone of the speeches you heard.—A. All in general hostile and violent toward Coalitionists.

Q. Is that necessarily calculated to bring on a riot?—A. I think, too, that the resolutions which will be proven by other witnesses; then from information of the general conduct of affairs, the general intense feeling which was engendered in Danville and the neighborhood by the political canvass and by the drawing of the color line, which was distinctly drawn throughout that section, directing the ostracism of all white Coalitionists connected with it, and the purpose of it carried to that extent that I myself, who had no personal difficulties, and don't know of any personal difficulty—I have had hundreds that I have known and accustomed to speak to familiarly that for sometime before election indicated what was their action clearly—what I understood was clearly indicated—that they should neither recognize, patronize, or associate with Coalitionists.

Q. Where was that alleged resolution made?—A. In the Democratic club.

Q. Where?—A. In Danville.

Q. You never had any other knowledge of that, I suppose, than rumor, had you?—A. Well, the rumor was so positive and so undisputed, and the evidence of it so plain, as I was told by men who will be here to testify, as to their refusing to patronize; and it is never denied; I have never known any one to deny it in private conversation.

Q. Do you know of any resolutions on the part of the colored people that they would not have social intercourse with each other when they voted the Democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; I never heard of any such resolution.

Q. What would a colored speaker say about a colored man that voted the Democratic ticket?—A. He would be very apt to say that he had been sold out or had been intimidated in some way.

Q. It was unnatural for a colored man to vote the Democratic ticket?—A. Yes; but I never knew of any ostracism or injury at the polls inflicted upon them for it.

Q. Was there any bitterness on your side; did any Coalitionist ever say anything but fine words, and turn the left cheek if the right was smitten?—A. I have never heard any myself.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Sims's eloquent speech?—A. I did not.

Q. You have heard of it?—A. Yes; I have heard of it. I have heard Mr. Sims's own account of it, and I am almost as familiar with it as if I heard it.

Q. Do you think that speech was calculated to allay irritation or excitement?—A. I should think it was somewhat calculated to irritate the gentlemen to whom he addressed himself as the signers of this circular, but I am informed that he also stated—so far as he addressed the colored people and Coalitionists generally—he said that they should go to the polls unarmed, and if any colored man wanted to vote the Democratic ticket he should do it. I understood his attack to be purely upon individuals, not upon the party generally.

Q. Do you know anything of the social life of the colored people about Danville?—A. Only in a general way. I could see them associate together.

Q. Don't you know that they do ostracise socially any colored man who votes the Democratic ticket?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you not heard that?—A. I have heard that they do; that they thought any man that voted the Democratic ticket had sold himself, but I have never known of any injury either proposed, threatened, or inflicted.

Q. You say also that the riot was expected or looked for because of an unusual number of arms that were brought to the city. Do you know of any unusual number that was brought there?—A. I know it by common report. I suppose there will be men here to testify to that. I did know that from conversation among Coalition leaders, and it was a source of apprehension to that extent that several meetings were called to confer, and one especially I remember was called to confer upon the danger of it; and even the mayor was asked whether this could not be prevented. The mayor said he was willing to do anything he could, but he didn't enter into the apprehension so much as they did. But since that he has told me——

Q. Never mind what he told you. You spoke of the unusual number of arms being brought into the city.—A. It is only by general information.

Q. By personal knowledge you know nothing of that; you have not seen the arms, I suppose?—A. I have since seen great quantities of arms there, but cannot say about as to the numbers.

Q. Where did you see them?—A. I saw them on the street. Also I saw more men going armed Sunday and Monday than I suppose there ought to be guns in the town.

Q. That didn't imply that they were brought for that purpose?—A. No, sir; I don't undertake to prove that.

Q. Don't you know that the hardware stores had more arms than usual on hand for sale?—A. I know their advertisements were more conspicuous.

Q. That is all you know of it?—A. No; I know by common report.

Q. When you hear by common report, do you know that, or do you just know that you hear the report?—A. There are some kinds of reports that become so general and universal that the fact becomes apparent, and we know it to be the fact.

Q. So that without any information you come before the committee to swear to it?—A. I swear to it with the statement with which I accompany it and the manner of my information.

Q. You cannot begin to say, can you, that the sales of these hardware men at that time exceeded the sales at any other time?—A. I have no immediate knowledge of the books, except the general operation.

Q. You cannot have any idea who those weapons were all sold to, can you?—A. Yes, sir; a pretty clear idea. I saw a large number in the hands of people, and it was very clear to me who they were sold to.

Q. Did you see those people buy them?—A. No, they might have taken them without buying them, as I understood from advertisements they did.

Q. So you do not know, except from belief and report, that there was any unusual quantity of arms in Danville at that time?—A. I know from common report, that led me to that belief.

Q. You said also they were in unusual places. What unusual places?—A. My information was direct, and in the same line, that a large quantity were stored in an insurance office just where the riot took place.

Q. I wish you would tell us where you got that information from.—A. The witnesses will be here to testify.

Q. I would like to have their names.—A. I don't think I can call their names, but I know the information has been given me direct by men summoned here.

Q. The information has been given you by men whose names you do not even remember, and therefore you can swear to the fact.—A. No, sir, I am not familiar with the fact myself. I think there would be no trouble in proving by Elijah Cousins, for instance, and several other witnesses.

Q. Do you believe there were arms in Woolfolk & Blair's office?—A. I thoroughly believe it. My information is that they were loaded in the back yard of that office before the riot began in the morning.

Q. You believe that?—A. I believe that, yes, sir.

Q. Now, all this being known and talked about and feared, so much so that meetings were held by your party and the mayor was consulted, why was it that there were so many colored people on the street the day of the fight? And why was it they could not be got to disperse by the officers of the law?—A. My information is that there was not any unusual number on the street that Saturday afternoon. That street is usually thronged with a great number of people, men, women, and children—meetings of that description on that day. I don't see any authority that should require them to disperse any more than the whites. There was no occasion for either of them to disperse.

Q. Is it usual for 250 to 400 colored people to be assembled around the door of Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. It would be if there was a dog fight, or a man fight, or anything of that kind.

Q. But the colored people are not inclined to disperse when ordered by the officers of the law, are they?—A. No, but it would be very difficult for even officers of the law to make them stand back even from a rope or given line—to get them to disperse by shouting to them. It would be an unusual thing, I think, either white or colored people.

Q. You can't give any reason, then, other than that why these people refused to disperse even when they saw danger and saw pistols and heard the officers of the law trying to get them to disperse?—A. I had a great number of them tell me that they thought people were trying to scare them and had no idea they would shoot them.

Q. Notwithstanding this thing had been feared some time before?—A. Yes, sir; and hundreds of people in that crowd had never attended a meeting and were innocently assembled there for their usual marketing purposes ; a large portion of them were people from the country, I am told.

Q. Pittsylvania is one of the largest counties in the State, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not the largest in the State in population?—A. I am not familiar with the relative populations ; I know it is a very large county ; very large population.

Q. You told us you thought you could enumerate seventy murders and outrages in the county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean to leave the impression that those outrages were all committed by the white people?—A. No, sir ; I mean by that simply to say that it was a community in which laws had not been thoroughly enforced, and that the prevalence of crime there had in some measure rendered the people familiar with it, and I have thought that if there was a place selected by a plan or otherwise for an outrage or disturbance of that kind it seemed to me the easiest country in the world to get it up in.

Q. Now, we know who the judge of your hustings court was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was a Readjuster. Who was the judge of your county court?—A. He was sometimes called a Readjuster. I always have considered him kind of a Readjuster. He has not been a politician at all.

Q. He was elected by a Readjuster legislature, wasn't he?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. What are the politics of the sheriff of the county?—A. I understand him to be a Democrat ; declared in a card that his connection with the Readjusters was severed ; received the Democratic nomination and was elected.

Q. When did he publish that card?—A. Before the spring election of last year.

Q. What was the reason that you gave that Readjuster officials, who were, of course, the salt of the earth for all that is pure—why could not they have the laws executed in that county?—A. Well, sir, the judge does not execute all the laws ; they have to have a jury.

Q. Who draws the jury of that county?—A. He does ; and a large proportion of them, I am told by those who have it in charge, a large proportion have generally been Democrats.

Q. You mean to say, then, that a Democrat is a man who is opposed to the execution of the laws?—A. No, sir ; I don't mean that ; I mean that a large proportion of the Democrats are not opposed to the execution of the laws, but I mean a laxity of the laws and a lack of the enforcement of them, as by some facts—the causes I am not able to enumerate—the fact remains and exists that there has been an unusually large number of crimes, or considerably larger number of crimes, committed in that district.

Q. Do you think more than any other county in that State in proportion to the population?—A. I am not familiar with the other portions.

Q. A number of these crimes were committed by colored people, were they not?—A. Some of them.

Q. Any of them by Coalitionists?—A. I suppose probably the black people were Coalitionists. I don't know, though ; I don't know of any Coalitionist committing any crime particularly.

Q. Whose fault was it that the laws were not enforced?—A. Well, I think the common sentiment encouraged a lax execution of the laws.

Q. Common sentiment?—A. I concluded it must be so, else the juries would have enforced severer penalties.

Q. To get these seventy crimes you allude to how far back would you run?—A. It has been a matter of discussion and frequent remark of people, I believe, that it would go back about to the war, or some time afterwards. Recently, you know, I suppose that crimes have been more frequent there.

Q. Recently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, recently, the Readjuster party have had control of everything in Virginia, have they not?—A. No, sir; they have not had control of the juries or magistrates.

Q. Who draws those juries? I asked you that question before.—A. I can't state exactly who draws the juries.

Q. You don't know whose business it is to select the jurors and place their names in a box?—A. No, sir; I don't think I do.

Q. Don't you know that is one of the duties of the judge to select and draw the jury?—A. I am not sure that it is the duty of the judge. I supposed it was the duty probably of the sheriff.

Q. I will ask you if the judge of the county court and the commonwealth attorney and the clerk do not select the jurors?—A. I don't know. I am not sufficiently familiar with the method of drawing juries there to say how they are drawn.

Q. What are your politics?—A. I am a Republican Coalitionist.

Q. Do the Republicans have a surname in Virginia?—A. Well, our Coalitionists include the Republicans and Republicans include the Coalitionists.

Q. So there is no straight Republican party in Virginia, is there?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. It has all gone into Readjuster?—A. No, sir; not exactly; they have all gone together.

Q. The Readjusters have gone into it; which one swallowed the other?—A. Well, they have not been swallowed, either of them yet.

Q. It looked a little that way last fall. Well, I wanted to know whether the Republican party had died and the Readjuster party had administered upon it, or vice versa?—A. No, sir; they are both alive.

Q. And united?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What name do they go by when they go away from home?—A. Well, we are known at home as Coalitionists.

Q. When you get to the Chicago convention, for instance, what name will you be called?—A. We will determine that when we get there.

Q. Do you think you will present yourselves there as Readjusters?—A. We shall all be there and shall present ourselves in a term properly explaining our nature and our character.

Q. Now, is it not a little unusual circumstance in this country where every man is proud to call himself a Republican, or a Democrat, that we find a large party that can't exactly tell a committee what they are or what their names are?—A. Oh, yes; I can tell what we are very easily, but our party comprises elements which have not formerly been known as Republicans, and on the other hand, elements which have not formerly been known as Democrats, and all have come together to beat the beast of Democracy—the Bourbon Democratic party—that's all.

Q. What is the name of that?—A. Ours is the coalition of the Republicans and coalition of the Democrats to beat the Democrats of Virginia.

Q. You have got as many names as the Spanish Infanta.—A. And we have got as many people.

Q. There is a metal we call copper and a metal we call zinc, and the compound we call brass. Here is a party called Republican and a party called Coalition; now what is the compound called?—A. It is called Coalition. All those parties are in coalition—act together.

Q. When did you leave the Democratic party? I understood you once to say you were a member of that organization.—A. My first vote out of the Democratic party was for Garfield and Arthur.

Q. You voted for the Republican electoral ticket or the Readjuster?—A. I voted the Republican ticket straight.

Q. Straight out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Readjuster ticket then was for Hancock, wasn't it?—A. I believe so. I hadn't been taken in with the Readjusters before that.

Q. When did you become revenue collector?—A. My appointment dates the 1st of March, 1883.

Q. When did you first become deputy collector of Petersburg?—A. I think in 1879. I was appointed to an office with the understanding that I was a Democrat. I was not appointed as a Republican, or that I ever had taken action or expected to take any action with the Republican party.

Q. Well, your joining the Readjuster party had nothing to do with your holding an office under the Government, had it?—A. Nothing whatever. My promotion to the collectorship was in direct line of promotion. I was already connected with the office.

Q. Was not there some one between you and the office of collector in the direct line of promotion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was his name?—A. Mr. Marks.

Q. What became of him?—A. He preferred to occupy the position he had. He never made any application; told me he would be better pleased with my appointment than his own.

Q. The council consisted of twelve members, didn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of whom seven were Republicans, or eight?—A. Five, as I understood it, were Republicans.

Q. That would leave the Democrats in the majority, wouldn't it?—A. No, sir; I wish to say, there the coalition comes in again. Four of them were declared Democrats; one of them was upon our ticket, however. Three of them had been known as Independents, and voted in the council at various times with us. There was no caucus during the year of the Coalitionists, and there was no intention of running it as a political party, but these men were always recognized as rather Independents.

Q. Where did the Coalitionists come in?—A. Oh, they were on our ticket.

Q. They acted with you, did they not?—A. Sometimes.

Q. They were to all intents and purposes Coalitionists?—A. They voted independently both ways. They voted for a Democrat for president of the council, and they frequently voted both ways. They were known as Independents and declared themselves Independents. They all voted the Democratic ticket at the last election.

Q. Were they elected on the Coalition ticket?—A. Yes, sir; and so was one of the Democrats.

Q. Now, you were president of that council?—A. I was president from July until November.

Q. Do you recollect Mr. Blair's reason for resigning?—A. Mr. Blair resigned for the reason—I think he alleged—that he thought he could serve his people better on the floor.

Q. Didn't he say he didn't want to be responsible as president for the acts of the council which he could not influence?—A. No, sir. I think he did manifest some displeasure because more Coalitionists—in fact I think it happened that all Coalitionists were elected in July on the police. That action was taken after it had become generally understood and known that an effort was being made to put out every Coalitionist on the police force—to put out the colored men on it. In that instance the Independents joined with the Coalitionists and they elected nine Coalitionists.

Q. Who were the Independent members?—A. Mr. E. J. Beckner, Mr. Arrington, and Mr. Robinson. They voted with the Coalitionists; I call them Independents, because they say they are; they voted with the Coalitionists, and they voted together.

Q. Who were the straight-out Democrats?—A. Mr. Blair, Mr. Garrett, Mr. Guerrant, and Mr. Jordan.

Q. Now, I ask you if you and the men that you could control, and did control, did not have a majority of a quorum of that body?—A. In the first place, I had no special control over anybody that I exerted; at times I used all the influence I could upon all.

Q. Now, you have said that you regarded these men in your employ the same as the junior members of a firm, and felt that your act bound the firm even to signing that circular?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it not the same way in the council?—A. No, sir; Mr. Lambkin was my partner in political matters. This was not a political council. I did not consider myself at liberty to do that. On the contrary, I think the records of the council will show that they voted against me as often as they voted with me. Indeed, I think they took a little pride in doing it.

Q. On small and insignificant matters?—A. I don't recollect the magnitude of any particular matter just now, but I remember I was conscious of the fact that I thought those men sometimes voted against me to show their independence. I certainly never mentioned a measure to them, nor sought in any instance to exercise any official authority over their vote in the common council.

Q. One of the first acts you performed was the election of a Coalition attorney, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; the next act was to elect a Democrat.

Q. Yes; because you could not find one competent to fill the office in the city.—A. I don't know that. I don't know whether there were any others. If there had been, I should have been very likely to have voted for him.

Q. After Blackwell went on the bench, was there another Coalitionist in town that you could get?—A. There were several offered, and some talked during the time it was pending, that they never had been against the Coalitionists, and had always been very liberal.

Q. Well, you could not find one.—A. We elected Mr. Patrick purely because we thought he was the best officer for the place.

Q. My question is whether there was any other Coalition officer in the town when Mr. Blackwell went on the bench?—A. Well, there were others who had been mentioned in that connection. I didn't ask them what their politics were.

Q. Well, you know, I reckon.—A. I didn't think certainly there was a lawyer of either party there who was so good a man for the place.

Q. What is the name of the city engineer you elected?—A. C. A. Ballou.

Q. Was there any other engineer in the city?—A. There were other engineers came there and sought my voice and influence, and said they would come there and reside and would act with our Coalition part; that they would be very glad to have the office, and I said Mr. Ballou was a very excellent officer, and I could not encourage anybody, whether he belonged to our party or not.

Q. He was a citizen, and the others were not?—A. He was a citizen and the others proposed to be citizens. He removed from an adjoining county, and he was also a brother of a member of the common council, Coalitionist—or rather Independent.

Q. Was he the engineer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was a brother of an Independent, you say?—A. Brother of an Independent, Mr. Arrington, and knowing Mr. Ballou to be an excellent officer, I would not have voted for any other. It was purely on the ground of efficiency.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Do you remember of seeing the resolutions adopted at Lynchburg on the 5th?—A. Yes, sir; I remember their general character.

Q. Were they published in the Danville paper, do you remember?—A. I cannot state that; I presume they were.

Q. Is there a paper called the Danville Register?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you remember they were published on election morning in that paper?—A. The resolutions pertaining to the riot?

Q. Yes.—A. I understand they were.

Q. How far is Lynchburg from Danville?—A. About 60 miles. (After examining paper handed by Mr. Lapham.) I think this appeared in the Danville Register on the 6th of November.

Q. Do you remember seeing some resolutions in the Richmond papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same or similar?—A. They were similar.

Q. Where do you say Lynchburg is?—A. Up about 60 miles from Danville.

Q. In what part of the State?—A. Near the central part, toward the southwest.

Q. In the region covered by that to which this circular is addressed?—A. Yes, sir; it is the first city of importance east of what we know as Southwest Virginia.

Q. I will put these two resolutions in evidence:

Resolved, That we heartily sympathize with our fellow-citizens of Danville in their struggle against the domination of the negro race under the lead of renegade white men, whose hearts are blacker than the skins of their unfortunate dupes, and we assure our fellow-citizens of the white race not only of our sympathy with them in their present struggle, but of our material and physical support whenever that becomes necessary.

Resolved, That Virginia is, and of right ought to be, a white man's country and ruled by white men, and we are determined that our mother State shall not be ruled by thieves, and liars, and cowards with white faces by the aid of their allies, the colored people.

You think that was published in the Danville paper and also in the Richmond papers?—A. I think it had general circulation.

Q. They were adopted on Monday, November 5, as appears by the record. Was there ever, at any time, while you were a member of the council, anything in the shape of a political difference in your official action?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you chose the district attorney, was that a partisan vote?—A. The man chosen for district attorney had been commonwealth attorney, elected by both parties, and, I think, by each party.

Q. Well, when he was selected as attorney of the board, was there any party question about it?—A. It was not a party question.

Q. And you chose him only temporarily—for six months, I think you said?—A. Yes, sir; and at the time he became corporation judge he resigned that, and we elected a Democrat.

Q. And all through the administration of that office, it was as you said you designed to have it, if you could, non-partisan?—A. Non-partisan was the purpose of it. When party came up, or was mentioned inadvertently, it was promptly set aside by the general vote of the common council.

PRESTON WATKINS sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. All my life.

Q. Are you a property holder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you a member of the committee of forty?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you a member of the grand jury that followed?—A. I was.

Q. Give the names of the persons who composed that jury; who was your foreman?—A. George C. Ayres.

Q. Was he a white man or a colored man?—A. A white man. Mr. E. F. Henry.

Q. Is he a white man?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Barrett, I do not know his initials.

Q. A white man?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Friend.

Q. White man?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. New.

Q. White man?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. C. H. Hickey.

Q. White man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many were there in all?—A. Seven besides myself. There was one there I can't think of his name just now.

Q. How many colored were there?—A. Only one.

Q. You were the only colored man on the jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were the jury in session?—A. They were in session three days I think.

Q. Was any of the testimony taken by the committee used before the grand jury, depositions?—A. No, sir. We had the pamphlets, the report of the committee there.

Q. But the testimony they took?—A. Read them over, each man had the privilege to look at them.

Q. Their report, and the testimony they took, was before the grand jury?—A. No, we examined other witnesses besides.

Q. Do you remember how many witnesses were examined?—A. I think there was forty odd.

Q. Did the public prosecutor take part in the examination?—A. Whenever we needed him we sent for him.

Q. What was his name?—A. Hamlin. Whenever we needed him we sent for him; we always sent for him.

Q. Do you remember whether the presentment of the grand jury was signed by all the members of the jury?—A. Yes, there was a vote on it, and the clerk was ordered to sign.

Q. Yes, but whether it was signed by all the members of the jury?—A. No, each man didn't sign.

Q. Did you concur in the finding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State the circumstances.—A. I concurred after hearing the evidence of the affair, I concurred with the action of the grand jury.

Q. State the circumstances.—A. We examined the witnesses, and I didn't see why, according to the evidence before us—I cannot state all the evidence that was stated—I didn't see what they could do, and we had been there three days examining it, and was not any nearer making indictments then than at the commencement, and I thought we might just as well stop. I didn't see that we were getting any closer to it, having been there three days, and not having made any indictment then.

Q. Were all the witnesses called before the grand jury examined?—

A. We had a great many names that we didn't think necessary to call. We agreed to close the examination and make the report.

Q. Don't you know there were some colored men they declined to examine?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what form the report was put in by the foreman; have you ever seen that?—A. Yes, sir; I read the report over.

Q. Do you mean to say that you concurred in that?—A. I did, sir.

Q. I will read it:

It appears to the jury, who have examined forty witnesses, white and colored, the larger proportion being colored, that on the 3d day of November, in the afternoon of that day, a fight occurred on Main street, between C. D. Noel, white, and Hence Lawson, colored; that after the fight was over and the combatants separated by the efforts of Policeman Adams and a white man named Lea and others, there was a determination on the part of the crowd of negroes assembled to intimidate the whites by threats and menaces; that the efforts of Policemen Adams, Freeman, and Withers, and citizens Corbin, Calloway, colored, and others, were unsuccessful in prevailing upon the crowd of negroes to disperse; that they persisted in remaining on the scene of the fight and giving expression to remarks calculated to excite the passions of the whites; that at last the whites fired off their pistols in the air, hoping thereby to cause the crowd to disperse; that the negroes did not then disperse, but rushed upon the scene from all quarters, advancing upon the whites with drawn pistols; that firing thereupon commenced; that the whites used their fire-arms in defense of their lives, which were in imminent danger, and by their courage and pluck in standing up against such odds saved the lives of hundreds of people in this city; and this is the unanimous sense of the jury.

(Signed)

GEORGE C. AYRES, Foreman.

DECEMBER 7.

The WITNESS. According to the evidence we had before us, there was no conclusion to come to except that. That was the evidence of the two policemen, Adams and Withers, and Mr. Freeman, who said they were there; in their evidence they said that the firing commenced in that way.

Q. Do you mean that it was testified before the grand jury that they fired in the air?—A. That was the evidence before us.

Q. Who gave such evidence?—A. Freeman and Withers.

Q. The same men we have examined here?—A. I reckon so; I don't know; they were before the grand jury.

Q. They there stated the fact that the first firing was in the air?—A. That is what they stated before the grand jury.

Q. And you acted upon that understanding?—A. Certainly I did.

Q. Did they state also that the negroes advanced upon the whites with their pistols drawn?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will read this again:

That at last the whites fired off their pistols in the air, hoping thereby to cause the crowd to disperse, that the negroes did not then disperse, but rushed upon the scene from all quarters, advancing upon the whites with drawn pistols.

Was there such evidence as that given before the grand jury?—A. Didn't say "drawn pistols was advancing from all quarters," came rushing up.

Q. This says with drawn pistols?—A. It is an error about the drawn pistols. It must have been a mistake of the printers. I didn't say "drawn pistols" they rushed up from all quarters.

Q. You do not remember any evidence, then, that the negroes advanced upon the whites with drawn pistols?—A. I didn't; but one or two stated that they saw the colored people with pistols. That was Mr. Freeman; he said in his evidence that he saw them.

Q. Was there any evidence before the grand jury that the blacks undertook to intimidate the whites there?—A. None except the crowd being together and could not get them to disperse; so the policemen stated after the fight took place.

Q. Can you name all the witnesses who testified that the whites fired their pistols off in the air first?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Freeman, Mr. Withers, and Mr. Lea, and one or two others I cannot recollect now.

Q. You think Mr. Lea gave such evidence there?—A. Yes, sir; I think he gave such evidence, and I think Mr. Dance gave in evidence that he thought they fired off in the air.

Q. Well, it was upon the faith of that, believing that to be the fact, that you consented to this finding?—A. Yes, sir; I found that the evidence was in such—

Q. I say that you acted upon the belief that the whites first fired in the air?—A. Of course I was going by the evidence before us; I could not go by anything more than the evidence.

Q. Now, you say you thought you followed the investigation as long as it was necessary. You mean by that you had obtained full knowledge of the facts, or that you would not be able to obtain them?—A. I didn't believe we would be able to obtain any more than we had; didn't believe we would ever get any more, and would agree to anything to get off. It was a heart-rending mystery to me, and I wanted to get off it as soon as possible.

Q. You didn't think you had ascertained the true facts?—A. I never expected to do that.

Q. You did not think it when you ascertained this finding?—A. Oh, no, sir; we had seen men dead and of course somebody was responsible for it, but didn't think we would get any nearer to it.

Q. Were all the witnesses examined that were summoned, or were some omitted?—A. Some were omitted.

Q. Can you name those who were omitted? We proved that one colored man was summoned but not examined.—A. I agreed myself with the jury; I didn't think it was necessary to examine more.

Q. Well, there were witnesses who were called and not examined?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether Charles Adams was before that jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't he swear that Colonel Graves shot him?—A. He said that he couldn't swear to it, but that he believed that he shot him. He made such a statement. He was no more near to making me believe it than anything else. He thought it was Captain Graves, but Captain Graves afterwards stated he didn't shoot him.

Q. Did you have the evidence of the witness who saw two colored men shot down at the corner of Union and Main streets?—A. We had the evidence that he saw the man fall, but didn't know who shot him; didn't have any evidence to show who shot at all. I knew the men were dead, because one of them I helped to bury.

Q. Now I want to know how you come to know "that the whites used their fire-arms in defense of their lives, which were in imminent danger, and by their courage and pluck in standing up against such odds saved the lives of hundreds of people in this city." The general account that I had seen was that way, that if the occurrence had continued, if the fellows had been allowed to fight and the thing had continued, by dispersing them as soon as they could it might have been according to the statement. What you meant by "shooting in the air caused the lives of many to be saved"—the general spirit—the people seemed to be in bad humor—it was the colored people you thought that would have been killed by the hundred?—A. Yes; I understood it the colored people would have been killed.

Q. And it was a mercy to the colored people to have three or four of them shot on the spot?—A. I think so from the way I saw men go up the street; every one that went by my store had either a gun or a pistol.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Do I understand you to say that a witness appeared before you on the grand jury that saw two men shot on the corner of Union and Main street?—A. No, sir; I say he saw him fall; he didn't say he saw who shot him.

Q. What man was that?—A. I don't know who he was.

Q. Was it Addison Coles?—A. I disremember; I think Addison Coles told me privately he did; he I don't know that he stated it in the grand-jury room that he saw two men up there dead, but didn't know who shot them.

Q. Addison Coles told you he saw them fall, but didn't know who shot them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he examined before the grand jury?—A. I think he was; I had a list of all who were examined, but lost it.

Q. What is your impression, that he was examined or was not?—A. That was my impression, that it was Addison Coles; I don't know.

Q. Was Jeff. Hubbard before the grand jury?—A. He was.

Q. And Charles Adams?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Robert Adams?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Nathan Arrington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Walter Withers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. L. L. Ivey?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Henry Barksdale?—A. I think he was.

Q. And you say that you examined forty-odd witnesses?—A. I think it was forty-odd.

Q. Were a good many of them colored?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What proportion?—A. There was about half, and may be more; I think it was more than half. I had the names of all of them down, and lost the paper.

Q. Did you try honestly and diligently to get at the truth of the matter?—A. I tried to some extent, but didn't believe in my own opinion we would get any nearer; I don't know whether they were afraid to tell the truth, but I saw we was not getting any deeper than what we commenced.

Q. Your examination was secret, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have the witnesses come in one at a time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after you examined forty odd you despaired of ever getting any more?—A. I did, sir.

Q. And you were willing to close?—A. I was willing to close.

Q. And you signed the report?—A. Yes, sir; voted for it.

Mr. LAPHAM. He didn't say he signed it.

Mr. VANCE. He voted for it.

Q. It was unanimous?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that when that was placed before you you could not come to any other conclusion than you did come to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say now in response to Senator Lapham's suggestion that you thought the men saved the lives of many people by firing when they did?—A. I think so.

Q. Were you satisfied from the testimony that was before you then that the colored people did have arms?—A. No, sir; I was not satisfied they did have arms.

Q. Were you satisfied that any portion of them had arms?—A. From Mr. Freeman's statement I reckon some few of them had arms, but I have had a good deal of dealings with them and I know.

Q. Did not Mr. Withers also say that he saw a colored man drop a pistol as he ran?—A. I think he did; I am not sure about it.

Q. That is two?—A. That is two.

Q. But you are not satisfied that the bulk of the colored people did have weapons?—A. No, sir; I am pretty well satisfied they didn't have them.

Q. As a general thing, don't you know that a good many colored people in Danville do carry weapons, or did?—A. I reckon that there are a few that carries them.

Q. Have you seen some on the persons of colored men?

Mr. LAPHAM. Of when do you inquire?

Mr. VANCE. At any time preceding the riot?

A. No, sir; I don't know that I saw a colored man at all have any weapons before that.

Q. Did you see any colored man carrying any weapons at any time that fall in Danville?

Mr. LAPHAM. Before the riot you inquire, of course.

The WITNESS. I cannot say that I recollect any now that I have seen carrying them.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Do not you know that a great many of them habitually go armed, colored people as well as whites?—A. That is the talk of the people, all of them is armed most. I generally, when I go anywhere myself, have one.

Q. You cannot say that of your own personal knowledge, but that is your understanding?—A. That is the general talk about it.

Q. What business do you follow?—A. Merchandise.

Q. Have you lived in Danville all your life?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do the colored people there think of a colored man who votes the Democratic ticket?—A. Generally this, it depends upon the standing of the man. If he is a man of no note at all he thinks he claims his right. If he is a man of any note they think he is betraying his race.

Q. I should think so. Do those who vote the Democratic ticket stand well with the colored people there socially?—A. I don't know; I never had anything to do with them. In my place of business I don't talk politics at all. It takes all my time to attend to that.

Q. How is it with the colored people in their social relations towards any colored man who votes the Democratic ticket; don't they refuse to have anything to do with him?—A. No, sir, I think not; Mr. Moulton there votes the Democratic ticket and stands very high, one of the big men in the church, a colored man.

Q. Do you think he sold out the race?—A. No, sir; it must have been his principles. He has been voting it ever since he has been there.

Q. What is his business?—A. Barber.

Q. Are there any other colored men in Danville besides barbers who vote the Democratic ticket?—A. I think there are some few there. It is some time since I had anything to do with politics at the polls; but since I have been attending to my store, merchandise, it don't give me much time, and I don't know how the colored people vote.

Q. Are there any there who vote the Democratic ticket who are not barbers?—A. Oh, yes! there is Snagg who works in a factory.

Q. Do you know any other?—A. There is a man named Hill, a very prominent man, treasurer of a society there.

Q. What kind of a society?—A. An organization known as the True Friends.

Q. When was this grand jury drawn you served on?—A. It was in January I think. It was the first grand jury after the riot occurred.

Mr. LAPHAM. The 9th of December.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. It was not very long after the occurrence?—A. No, sir; not very long.

Q. When you were empaneled how much notice did you get that you had been drawn to serve upon the grand jury?—A. I got the notice the week preceding. I don't remember what day; I was summoned for Monday.

Q. How long had your name been in the box as a juror?—A. I don't know how long.

Q. Is that the first time you served on a jury?—A. No, sir; I served on a jury—I don't know how long it has been.

Q. You don't know how your name was drawn then for juryship?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Who drew that statement that was published signed by the foreman?—A. Mr. Tyack, I reckon, who was acting as clerk for the jury.

Q. Do you know in fact who wrote it?—A. No, sir; I don't know in fact, but he was acting as clerk.

Q. That is all you know in reference to it?—A. That is all I know.

Q. You didn't read it, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I read it.

Q. Did you read it or was it read to you?—A. I read it, and it was read to me after they made some interlineations in it.

Q. I have just read you one part that you said you don't remember.—A. That part with the drawn pistols I don't recollect. It might have escaped me in reading.

Q. It has either been put in since or you didn't notice it, one or the other?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, it is a pretty important statement.—A. I see it is, but I don't recollect seeing "the drawn pistols of colored men."

Q. Well, there was no evidence to justify it, was there?—A. I didn't hear any but Mr. Freeman's.

Q. That was two pistols. The whole statement that the colored men rushed upon the white with the pistols drawn is ex parte in any testimony, you remember.—A. I can only say that the statement was that the colored rushed up.

Q. You did not sign that paper, did you?—A. No, sir; there was an agreement for the jury to sign.

Q. I ask you, in all candor, did you agree to that statement, that "the negroes did not then disperse, but rushed upon the scene from all quarters, advancing upon the whites with drawn pistols"?—A. Not with drawn pistols. I don't recollect; the other part I did.

Q. But that "they went with arms"—you did not concur in that?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you know how it came in there?—A. I know they said they rushed to the scene from all quarters.

Q. Was that in the statement when you read it, or they read it to you?—A. I don't recollect the "drawn pistols."

Q. What you meant was, they rushed to the scene?—A. Rushed to the scene from all parts, and their firing, I think, was to save their lives.

Q. You meant to save the lives of the colored people?—A. Yes, sir; more than any one else.

Q. When did you commence mercantile business?—A. In 1876, I think it was, or 1875.

Q. Since that you say you have not taken much part in politics?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, is not one reason for that you apprehended the effect upon your business if you should do it.—A. No, I didn't have time to attend to that and my business too. I did once since I was in business run for a seat in the senate, simply because there was no other candidate at all.

Q. Were you a slave?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were liberated by the emancipation proclamation?—A. I was.

Q. What is your age?—A. My age is about forty.

Q. Who did you run against?—A. Mr. John M. Hurt.

Q. Who nominated you to run against Hurt?—A. There was no ticket.

Q. Who was Hurt who was running against you as candidate—what party?—A. The Democratic party; but it was just an agreement with some of the leading Republicans that I should allow my name to be used.

Q. Were not your campaign expenses paid by the Democrats?—A. No, sir; paid out of my own pocket; that is why he wanted me to run. They said the other party was not able to run, and I paid it out of my own pocket.

Q. Where were you on the day of this riot?—A. At my place of business, on Main street.

Q. You didn't witness it, then?—A. No, sir; heard it.

Q. Were there any riotous disturbances between that and the day of the election?—A. Nothing; but people seemed to be excited.

Q. Did you not see people armed Sunday and Monday?—A. Oh, yes; I saw nearly everybody with arms; nearly all the white people were armed.

Q. You didn't see any of the colored people with arms?—A. The colored people were not allowed to be on the streets at all after the thing occurred.

Q. How were the white people armed?—A. With shot-guns and pistols.

Q. Were they armed on election day?—A. The military was out on election day, and I saw several men with shot-guns. I don't know whether they were with the military authorities or not, but I saw them with arms.

Q. You had a colored military company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it called out?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a member of that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why?—A. Because of the condition of things I didn't feel satisfied to be bothered.

Q. Was it by reason of this riot—the killing of your people there?—A. It was, sir.

Q. Had you any apprehension that it was unsafe to go to the election?—A. No, sir; I didn't go; what happened on Saturday I didn't get over that, and didn't know what might happen; didn't ask any one about it and didn't ask any one to go; didn't know what would be the result, and so didn't go.

Q. You didn't think the killing of these colored people was justified, did you?—A. No, sir. It was uncalled for altogether; but at the same time I believe these three being killed, after seeing the spirit of the people there, it was better for them and would have been worse.

Q. Worse for whom?—A. The colored people.

Q. You were not of the opinion that the shooting of those colored men should be unpunished, were you?—A. Oh, no; I didn't believe they would ever get to it, and might as well stop where they were.

Q. Do you think the men who shot these colored people deserve praise for it?—A. Not a bit of it.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. What year were you a candidate for the senate?—A. It was four years ago; I think it was the time Mr. Hurt ran.

Q. In 1880?—A. I think it was in 1880; I am not certain of it.

Q. You say your expenses were not paid by the Democrats?—A. No, sir; I paid them out of my own pocket. I can prove that by Mr. W. H. Pleasants and Mr. Jones.

Q. What are your politics?—A. I am a Republican.

Q. You must be lonesome; they say there is no Republican party down there?—A. I am as much a Republican as I ever was; been that all the time.

GRANDERION POTEAT sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Danville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Five years.

Q. Where did you live before that?—A. This side of Danville, about 5 miles.

Q. Are you a native of that county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you a slave?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your business?—A. A cooper.

Q. Where?—A. Farrell & Co., Danville.

Q. What do they keep?—A. A cooper-shop.

Q. You work at that trade?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a hired man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the day of this riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any conversation on the subject before the riot occurred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time of the day?—A. Between 11 and 12 o'clock.

Q. Where?—A. On Patton street, above the court-house.

Q. Who did you hear conversing about it?—A. John Edwards, that used to be a police, and Mr. Ruf. Williams that used to be a police.

Q. White men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell the committee what they said?—A. On that day

Mr. Farrell had me up there to put away some benches for the Baptist church, and whilst the dray had gone to the depot, between 11 and 12 o'clock, I was sitting outside of a shed that Mr. Pleasants had there, two white men come, Mr. Williams and Edwards, running up the street and had some little bills in their hands, but what they was that I was not able to tell, and just as they got against the fence Mr. Williams walked inside of the alley and handed some to a lady at the door a little above, and came right back beside the fence I was sitting by in a sort of little cabin that Mr. Pleasants had for a work shop and heard Mr. Williams tell Mr. Edwards, "You go to Mr. Schoolfield's and get all he has got, and from there to Colonel Grasty's store and get what he has got and I will meet you at Mr. Joplin's, myself and Captain Graves, and then we will go from there to Captain Graves's house." But I didn't understand what they were going to do; I didn't understand that until I came down street, after they had made these expressions, and there was two white gentlemen there from North Carolina remarks in my presence "There are going to be hell to pay here directly," to the other gentleman that was with him and he said, "What is it?" Says he, "We are going to fire on the niggers this evening," and I walks across the street after they had passed me, and I saw Captain Hall, who was the chief of police at that time, and I called him to me and told him what I heard these men say, and he asked me who were the men that I heard say so. I said, "Mr. Hall I won't tell you who I heard say it, because I don't know who my friends is." He says, "Tell me, I am the chief of police." I says, "Well your being chief cannot rule Danville." He says, "Where is the men you heard say so?" I say, "Yonder they go up Main street on their horses." These men were then on their horses going up Main street, to North Carolina. Captain Hall said, "I don't reckon anything will happen," and I said, "Well, I heard these men say so anyhow". And I said, "If it don't happen I will be right happy to see it, but I am not going to dinner." Well, afterwards, in about an hour or so I was standing at Mr. B. W. Grave's store, in front of his store on Main street, and I heard a fuss down there and saw right in front of Mr. Ruffin's office, Woolfolk, Hawk, and Blair's office, I saw a crowd there, and they said Hense Lawson and Noel had had a fight, and I then looked across the street and saw Mr. Hatcher with a pistol in his hand and Mr. Natt Jordan came out of the office with a pistol in his hand.

Q. Out of what office?—A. Out of Mr. Woolfolk and Blair's office, and Mr. Hatcher then remarked, "Fire on the damned sons of bitches if they won't leave here," and upon that they commenced firing. I ran up to the corner across to Union street, crossing Main street right at the corner of Wiseman's drug store, and as I turned the corner one man fell in front of me and the other behind me, and I being standing betwixt the telegraph posts, I suppose prevented them from shooting me, and I whirled back and goes into Wiseman's drug store, and as I started into the store his clerk remarked to me, "Don't come in here, we will kill you," and Mr. Wiseman came running and says, "Open the door and let everybody come in that can get in, and you all put those pistols down for I have got nothing in the world to do with it," and then I went out the back way of Mr. Wiseman's drug store.

Q. Do you know the names of those two men who rode out on horse-back?—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. They were white men?—A. Yes, sir; they were white men from the country.

Q. Did you notice whether they were armed?—A. No, sir; I don't think they were.

Q. You don't think they were armed?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many white men did you see with pistols?—A. Every white man that I saw had a pistol, and every boy from fifteen to twenty years old had one.

Q. White boys?—A. Yes, sir; pistols and guns.

Q. Did you see any colored people with arms?—A. I didn't.

Q. You spoke about the team going where, to the depot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was said about that?—A. I said whilst the team was gone to the depot Mr. Edwards and Mr. Williams came.

Q. What team was that?—A. Mr. Farrell's team.

Q. The man whom you were to work for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you waiting for that team to come back?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the time you heard this conversation?—A. Yes, sir; while I was waiting for that.

Q. That, you think, was about 11 o'clock?—A. Before noon. I was waiting for that dray to come back from the depot when I heard this remark of Mr. Williams and Mr. Edwards, but in the afternoon, I spoke of the men that was going up the street.

Q. You don't know where they went?—A. No, sir; they were men from the country.

By Mr. VANCE:

Q. Where were you when you first saw the crowd in front of Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. I was standing in front of B. W. Graves's store, on Main street.

Q. How far is that from Woolfolk & Blair's?—A. I don't know; it is across Main street; I don't know how wide the street is.

Q. Was it opposite, or nearly opposite?—A. Yes, it is nearly opposite.

Q. Did you see the fist fight between Lawson and Noel?—A. I didn't.

Q. Was it over before you got up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you say you saw Mr. Hatcher with a pistol in his hand?—A. I did.

Q. Just at that time, was it right while you stood there opposite Mr. Graves's store that you saw Hatcher with a pistol?—A. Yes; I saw him with a pistol in his hand.

Q. And then after a while he said "Fire"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they fired?—A. Yes; they commenced firing, and I came on up street.

Q. Did you see two men fall?—A. Yes, sir; one fell right in front and one right behind me.

Q. Where were you then?—A. I was at the corner of Wiseman's drug store.

Q. That is away up the street?—A. Yes, because I had come up that high when the firing commenced.

Q. Now, when Hatcher gave the command and fired that shot, you saw these men fall?—A. I didn't say Hatcher shot them; I don't know who shot them; they fell as I was going up street out of the way of the firing; I was running up Main street when they were firing.

Q. I say, was it from the shot that was fired when Hatcher gave the command that these men fell?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who shot these men that fell?—A. I don't know who shot them; I know they were shot.

Q. Were the men before you or behind you?—A. When I aimed to turn the corner one of them fell behind me and the other one in front.

Q. Then the one shot must have passed you to that one in front of you?—A. I suppose maybe it did. I darted behind a large telegraph post, and when the man fell, I turned back and went into Mr. Wiseman's drug store.

Q. Then you didn't see who it was who shot?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could you tell from the report or flash of the pistol how far they were when they shot?—A. I couldn't tell much about it; I was so frustrated that I was getting out of the way.
